"I think it is no secret in England that Austria is arming upon an extensive scale, and that the preparations for war are unmistakable. Still the semi-official papers are somewhat out of humor. Hearing that Sardinia increases her army, they actually attribute it to the madness or malice of Count Cavour; for if France should back Sardinia there will be no war, and if France does not. Sardinia will be crushed whether she has 100,000 or 200,000 men under arms, whilst her armament ruins not only the Italians but forces Austria likewise to spend more money. All the court and military party reason in this way, and come to the conclusion that Cavour is the wickedest man on earth, who seeing before him the complete downfall of his own country, maliciously puts Austria to great expense. Such are the men who rule this Empire."

War is extremely probable between Austria and Piedmont. Piedmont is buying cavalry horses in France.

It is stated that Count Aresé has been entrusted by the Emperor Napoleon with the mission to bring about a definite settlement between France and Piedmont, on the question on Savoy.—Cork paper

PLOT TO ASSASSINATE VICTOR EMMANUEL.—The New York Eco d'Italia of the 17th has the following remarkable statement:

"From private letters coming to us from Milan, dated February 16, we learn that the police of Milan have just discovered an atrocious scheme, the object of which was to assassinate Victor Emmanuel on the occasion of his entry into the capital of Lombardy. One of the conspirators, a certain Count Brambilla, the same who, in 1849, abstracted the golden medals from the Gregorian Museum, was arrested, and on his person were found suspicious documents and large sums of money destined for the Pontifical court. Other conspirators, all Austrians or priests, are in the hands of the police.

General Conference in Boston.

A General Religious Conference will be held in Chapman Hall, Boston, commencing at half-past 2 o'clock, on Wednesday, the 4th of April, continuing each day and evening through the week and over the Lord's day.

The object and design of this meeting is not so much for the passing of resolutions or the transaction of ecclesiastical business, as for the advancement of pure christianity among us in true revival and reformation. What we as a body want and need, is not disputation or hobbies, but earnest, direct labor for the immediate promotion of the work of God in awakening the careless and indifferent, stirring up the luke-warm, and quickening into life and activity the too sluggish energies of the whole church in the personal work of preparation to meet the Master, who is before the door. In fact, we are too dull, too barren, and want more faith, zeal, love—more religion. And not only is it to be hoped that our meeting may prove a great means of grace to the waiting saints, but our hearts' desire is to see sinners converted to God, and thus made ready for the approaching great day of doom. Let those, then, who are asleep, awake and be strong. Let the righteous gird on their armor. Let sinful men be alarmed. All signs point to the speedy coming of the Lord, and it is high time that those who look for Him be up and doing with their might their last solemn work. Let earnest and faithful prayer go up to heaven for the success of this conference. Ministers of Christ, plead with Him for the spiritual interest of the meeting, and come to it in humility and faith, that our God who is now working among our churches in various places, may also pour his Spirit upon the worshipers at Chapman Hall. We invite our dear brethren and sisters from abroad to come. Come, all who can. Provision will be made by the friends for all needful entertainment.

M. GRANT.

A Proposition.

To any one who will send us a new subscriber for one year, we will forward, post paid, a copy of our late discussion with Eld. W. W. Clayton, on the conscious state of the spirit after death, and the destruction of the wicked. And for a new subscriber for six months, we will send a copy of the pamphlets on "Soul" and "Spirit." With a little effort, a thousand names may be added to our list. Let every reader try to aid in scattering the light and truth. Now is the time to work.

New Edition of the Lyre.

A new edition of this work, revised and improved by the insertion of an Index of Subjects, and the tune, the "Beautiful World,"—omitted by mistake in the first edition,—is now ready.

"Let him that is merry sing psalms."

Every christian should have a copy of THE CHRISTIAN LYRE. This work is of rare value, containing, as it does,

I. A large collection of the excellent old tunes that "never wear out."

II. Many new popular airs of merit.

III. Between five and six hundred hymns and spiritual songs.

It may be safely said that there is no book of the kind extant that approaches this in excellence. It will take its place as a standard work, and will be considered indispensable by those who wish to possess the best selection of old fashioned and "pennyroyal" psalmody.

Its form is such as to be very convenient in singing, and yet it is so small as to be carried in the pocket. But though small, it contains more hymns and music than most of the larger works, and is as costly to the publisher, but cheaper to the purchaser. The typography, printing and binding, have been neatly done, and will not fail to give satisfaction.

Those who have not as yet procured the Lyre, may learn the appreciation in which it is held by competent judges, from the following TESTIMONIALS —

The stereotypist has affirmed that it is the best collection of sacred music which has passed through his hands for years.—World's Crisis

BRO HIMES:—The new tune book, "The Lyre," is a gem. I admire it more and more as an auxiliary to the worship of God. I hope it may be very generally introduced into our congregations, and am sure it cannot be too highly appreciated. I shall use my influence in its favor in preference to any collection I have ever seen. Yours in hope,

RANDL. E. LADD.

Springfield, Feb 9th.

DEAR BRO. HIMES:—I have received the Lyre, and looked it over, with Bro. Howland, our chorister, and others. We think it a very good work, and that it will be highly prized as containing a large collection of our very best hymns and tunes

I. H. SHIPMAN.

THE NEW LYRE.—I prize this new work very highly. It is a choice collection of rare old and popular new music, such as we have long needed for all our churches. The sweetest and best hymns and tunes ever sung are here found, and the entire music which our fathers sang rings out from its pages, mingled with the richest tunes of our time. Let no one fail to get the book. It ought to have a wide circulation among all denominations, for it is adapted to all, though full of the Advent element so peculiar to us. Nothing equal to it has appeared since we had an ecclesiastical history. Brethren from Maine to Minnesota, from Canada to the South, let us seize this Lyre, and, tuning our hearts anew with praise, sing fresh strains of melody in the ear of our coming King.

For the Crisis.

I'm Weary.

I'm weary of watching the flowers fading,
And seeing the leaves drop and fall;
Each fair and loved object fading and dying,
And those that have loved them mourning and sighing
O'er the doom of earth's loved ones all.

I'm weary of seeing the loved and loving
Pass away as the flowers die,
As with tears we watch them fading and drooping;
To keep them with us still longer and hoping,
Till left to weep and sigh.

I'm weary of waking from youth's bright dreaming,
And finding my fondest hopes flown,
Like the sunbeam bright o'er the ocean gleaming,
Hopes realized never, but still ever seeming
To beckon the weary heart on.

Is there naught beyond these? the heart cries, weeping,
God's word a sure answer doth give;
[illegible] the loved ones in death now sleeping,
Thou and all thine are in his care and keeping,
Him trust if forever thou'dst live.

For the Crisis.

The Christian's Hope.

Thou hast made known to me the ways of life; thou shalt make me full of joy with thy countenance.—Bible.

How cheering to the christian is a promise like the above,—having embraced Christ, how truly does he realize it to be true. With what songs of gratitude does he praise his Maker that he can now discern the ways of eternal life; that his eyes were opened to the truths of inspiration; that his soul was illuminated with a heavenly flame; that his feet were taken from an horrible pit, and placed upon the rock, Christ Jesus; that a new song has been put in his mouth, even praise and thanksgiving, and his whole being praising God for his wonderful condescension to the children of men, in giving his only Son to die, that through him all might come and partake of the glories of heaven, and secure to themselves a state of endless happiness.

How different the aspect of one who refuses to walk in the pathway of life. His horizon is constantly darkened by gloomy, foreboding clouds; the cares and attendant sorrows of life prey upon him, his steps are unsteady and tottering; he moves like one in a trance; the future is a blank; the anticipated joys of a "life beyond," so cheering to the christian, to him are unthought of, save with sorrow—his being of an ephemeral character and delusive. The Book of Books, a luminary to those who take it as their guide, is neglected and forgotten,—its fearful threatenings are unheeded, its consolations not participated.

To him no bright oasis is reached—no cooling draught is sipped to quench the burning thirst of that inward nature; the eye tires with the noonday of life; the angry roaring of the tempest rings in his ears; suns rise and set; the thick gloomy darkness of midnight settles upon him; to him no smiling countenance pierces the darkness of that hour; the past rolls up before him, as if to crush his already burdened soul. Opportunities of repentance, pleadings of the Spirit, scornfully slighted, and that "still, small voice" bidden to be silent,—and now he must drink from the bitter cup, the ingredients of which he has himself prepared. Tired nature relaxes, the day's journey is completed, and with no ray of light, he sinks into the sleep of [illegible]. O, horrible is the anguish and remorse of a guilty conscience!

But how different with him whose heart is made glad by the smiling approbation of God; whose inmost being can exclaim, "Thou shalt make me full of joy with thy countenance." Let the prostrating hand of disease fall upon him, his countenance will teem with heavenly joy; and when, perchance, the tempests rage around his head, and in mad fury threaten to dash his fragile barque; how composedly does he rest, how securely does he recline upon the promises of God; how patiently does he bear the chastening rod; how submissively does he bow to the will of his Master, realizing he will forsake none who put their trust in him. He knoweth One whose piercing eye can penetrate the gloom, whose untold depth of love can save, whose powerful arm can support, and say to the raging tempest—"Be still!"

O! how irradiate with love is the halo of glory which encircles those who are approbated of God, whose consciences are void of offence. And how precious to realize we have a God like this, infinite in wisdom, the embodiment of all good, the fountain of all purity, the depositary of every blessing, the Creator of all things, the Great Primary Centre, from whom all created matter has its rise, who brought the universe into existence, and from chaotic darkness created light.

Truly would we worship this Being, and bow in the dust, that he remembers us, mere dust as we are—we would ever look to Him with reverence, and sacrifice our all to our heavenly Father, ever praising him for the flood of light that shines from his Holy Word, and in humility asking him to lead our wandering steps, and at last bring us home to enjoy rest in a land of fadeless bloom, where angels, with all the hosts of the redeemed, shall, through a long eternity, chant praises to God.

Sketch of Labors.

BRO. GRANT:—As it is cheering to the lovers of Christ to learn the prosperity of his cause, and also important that they learn the adverse influences connected with it; sketches of travels and labors are sometimes interesting for this end. It is true I have reported the field of my labors somewhat in our "Conference reports," but I will add a few items not there mentioned.

Since closing my labors with the church in Richmond, last year in April, I have traveling mostly as an evangelist, to labor where the people most needed help, but partly on business to earn money wherewith to sustain my family. By invitation, I preached in the free meeting-house at Richmond corner, once a month for three months, without seeing any results, excepting good attendance and attention of the people. The house had been deserted for several years. No meetings of any sort in the place, and apparently as little christian influence as in any other part of the world. Soon after, a revival sprang up. Now they hold meetings every Sunday, and several prayer meetings a week, and a number have been converted. Blessed be God.

In May I visited the little church in Brunswick, preached one Sunday, found them standing fast in the Lord, rejoicing in the truth, and hoping for the end. From there I went to Yarmouth and preached one Sunday to Bro. York's people, who are doing well in the Lord, under his faithful and energetic labors. I next visited Palermo, and preached once, where a general reformation was in progress.

In June, by invitation, I visited the brethren in Waterford, preached one Sabbath, found a good interest in several new hearers to learn the truth. I have been sent for to go there several times since. I intend to do so soon, if God will. Next attended our yearly Conference at Lincolnville. On my return, stopped at South Hope and preached two evenings. Here, some of the believers are deeply engaged in the work of the Lord. Went next to Jefferson, attended a protracted meeting held in a large barn which the brethren had fitted up for the occasion, and celebrated the Fourth of July in worshiping God. A goodly number had just been converted, and others reclaimed. It was a refreshing season. The best "celebration of Independence" I ever attended. Five were baptized.

Aug 5th.—Again visited the church in Brunswick, and preached to them. Next visited Flying Point, Freeport, where a few brethren have obtained light on the "blessed hope." Preached to them one evening, had a very attentive hearing. Some really love the truth.

Aug. 21.—Visited Round Pond, preached one Sunday. The brethren were mostly at sea. The people seem to love to hear what we preach, though few love to walk in it. Called on Brn. Campbell, Curtis, and Herleys, on my way home, found them in the love of the truth. Started for Livermore Conference, which has been reported. Went to fill my appointment at Bean's Corner, Jay, where lives a faithful sister Gilman, whose labors exert a good influence on the community, as also that of her pious, widowed mother. There I was kindly entertained. Preached three evenings, to very attentive congregations. Several here begin to love the truth. Here found a brother and sister Foster, late of Newburyport, Mass.

From Jay I went to West Farmington, and preached to a few who have recently embraced the blessed hope, and are looking for the Lord. Thence hastened to attend our adjourned yearly Conference, (already reported) at Yarmouth. At North Augusta, preached once on Sunday. The people here are somewhat liberated from sectarianism, and have ears to hear the truth; several love it. Bro. T. J. Dudley frequently preaches to them, and exerts a good influence among them.

Oct. 4th. at South Gardiner. On arriving, found that one of the citizens, a very respectable, peaceful man, had that morning hanged himself in a grove near his own house, which calamity had thrown the whole community into agitation and grief. Difficulty with a neighbor had caused insanity and led to the fatal result. I preached to the few who assembled in the evening, though much afflicted by the sad occurrence. We next visited East Bowdoinham. The brethren here have been injured by a false gospel, in former times, and are mostly done with it; but some are still distressed and perplexed. The next Sunday we preached to a few who love Christ and his gospel. Sunday 16th, preached in another district in Bowdoinham, where they have several times invited me. I think some good could be accomplished there by faithful labor. Some are interested in the gospel hope.

Nov. 4th, visited the church in Brunswick, attended their monthly conference. It was a blessed season. Bro. C. Densmore of Bowdoinham was also with us, and by their unanimous vote united with that church. Sunday I preached to them, and next day went to Bath, looked up a Bro. Merrow who had moved from Windsor some years ago, and been secluded. I enjoyed a good visit. Found the faith and hope were still in him and his faithful wife. May the Lord bless and keep them unto the end. I then went to Yarmouth, found Bro. York joyous in the work of the gospel; attended a prayer meeting with the happy, prosperous flock under his watch-care.

12th. Preached in Portland, had a good hearing, and pleasant visit with a few who seem determined to enter the kingdom through all the tribulation that comes. I should think they were in a better condition than for some time past; have been prospering some the past year. May the Lord strengthen and build them up, adding to their numbers "such as shall be saved."

Dec. 11th. Visited the brethren in Augusta, but as my appointment was not received by the brethren, I did not preach. From thence went to Belgrade, Rome, and Vienna, calling on several brethren and finding them in the faith. Did not hold meetings as it was a very stormy and cold time, and bad sleighing.

18th. Preached in West Farmington, to the few there who love the truth, and who were at home. Several were from home. Called on our much esteemed brother, Joseph Fairbanks, who has been deprived of health and partially of mind, the past year. He is much improved, and will, I think, be able soon to engage again in active business. His devoted wife is full of hope for his restoration. Let me here ask the prayers of the believers in his behalf, that God may restore him to health. I passed through Wilton for Livermore, but had not time to call on the few brethren there at that time. Stopped at East Livermore, and found that "the words of the truth of the gospel," lately preached there by several of God's watchmen, had taken effect, and some love the gospel hope, and talk of the coming kingdom.

On the 22d, while passing through Leeds, in crossing the R. R. track, my sleigh turned over, tipping me out, and a heavy trunk also, which fell upon my back, causing an injury from which I have not yet fully recovered. The Lord be praised that my life was preserved. The cars were very near, and I just escaped being crushed by them. In two days' time I rode home, twenty miles, with much difficulty, laid by about two weeks, and though unfit for active service started for Rome Conference. This conference has been reported. While there we preached two evenings in Belgrade, found some in the faith, although a mighty effort has been made to keep the gospel hope from taking effect, by one party, and much labor spent by another, to plant a new, false gospel. The labors of Bro. Sevey have been much blessed there, as also in many other places. In Jan., we visited Whitefield, Somerville, and Jefferson. Called on Eld. S. K. Partridge, who is actively engaged in preaching on Sundays, but is too much engaged in other matters to meet half the calls for preaching. I had two appointments for Jefferson, but as they did not get them I did not preach. The believers are doing well there.

22d. At Round Pond, with Bro. T Smith. A few here cleave to the word of God, but there is much want of activity in faith and devotion. Came home and am detained by a severe illness of my boy, with lung fever, he is now recovering. May we soon enter the land where none are sick. There are many calls for preaching which we are not able to respond to.

For the Crisis.

The Part Illustrated; Showing its Harmony with the Whole.

The common way in quoting "the Word" is, to quote a part as if it were the whole of truth. The part being true in itself—divinely true—the temptation is very strong to assert its universal, all comprehending application,—as if there could be no other or further truth to modify or enlarge the little mind's contracted conclusion!

I. The Jews take the law given by Jehovah through their mediator, Moses, as if it were, with their application, all, and only the truth. Thus they shut out of their minds the ultimate truth and essential intention for which the law itself was given. "The vail is on their hearts."

II. The Romanists assert truly that the keys were given to St. Peter, and that the Gospel commission was to man in all the world. But they do greatly err in so applying this as to confine grace with "all rule, authority and power," to the church.

III. Protestants do most righteously quote Scripture in protesting against the monstrous assumptions of Romanists. But when they organize and administer church affairs according to the "pattern" shown to them in Rome, they build again what they should have destroyed, and are transgressors. In my late article on Babylon, the elements of Romanism adopted by Protestants are briefly but distinctly shown. Thus at each advance some truth is taken up by faith, while essential error is brought forward by Satan to dilute and pervert it. "God be merciful to us miserable sinners!" Amen.

IV. This partial and delusive principle prevails all around us, and, I fear, all through us. No one can "cast the first stone;" for "all have sinned and come short of the glory of God."

a. The Sabbatic law (once in force and essential) is so strenuously applied and enforced, as to override and ride down "the law of the spirit of life in Jesus," that is now in force for accepting sinners BY FAITH. It is assumed and identified with "the seal of the living God," and made first, so as to take precedence of all mere gospel ordinances. Neither Jew nor Pope need do more in setting up their will against the Divine.

b. The second advent of Jesus, (though it is revealed for all the purposes of the great salvation, or the restitution of all things spoken,) is so applied by sectarian Adventists, as to cut off the grand sum of the Law, the Prophets, and the Psalms, yet to be fulfilled. This would, if it could so be, "make God a liar." Nay, more, it would falsify Christ himself, and so overthrow all pretence for faith or hope of salvation.—Luke 24: 25–44; Matt. 5: 17–20; Rom. 3: 31; Heb. 1st to 13th chapters; Ps. 2, 45, 67, 72, 96, 98, 132. See Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, etc., etc.

Note. I only quote: God will apply by fulfilling it faithfully. Gen. 22: 14–18; Isa. 55 9–11. We get his mind by His word, as it stands, and as it has been progressively accomplished, so far, through thousands of years, in every "jot and tittle." This "foundation standeth sure."

c. "THE BEAST" is said to be "a body of rulers." Others echo and re-echo this, as if it were all and every part of "the truth" in hand. Just see! "Thou (Nebuchadnezzar) art this head of gold." Dan. 2. Was Nebuchadnezzar "a body of rulers?" "They worshiped the beast." Yes, they set up a statue to the Emperor, and worshiped the Emperor! Never the empire, or the body of rulers. "The number of the beast is the number of A MAN; and his (the man's) number is 666." Is this "man" a body of many men? If so, then who will believe any thing? who can correct Pope or Plato by the testimony of the Almighty?

d. "The third angel's message" is the theme of others—their little present Gospel! Note. It is demonstrable that the first angel has not yet even started to fulfill his message. Thus the proper names and language of this book, so far as repeated from foregoing Scripture, must mean the same, and not falsify nor stultify "the words of the Holy One." But in the history of angelic agency, we find Gabriel, the angel of God, preaching "the glad tidings of great joy." Luke 2.

Therefore, this angel of the first message, etc., must be as much of an angel as was Gabriel who preached on the plain of Bethlehem. We must then wait till HE comes, is heard and known to act in accordance with this language, (Rev. 14 8) ere we have faith even in the first angel's message fulfilled! This angel may be one of "the seven angels" so often named, and so constantly acting amidst the scenes of judgment They have the seven vials of wrath to pour. They are named four times in eight verses, chap. 15. One of these seven angels explained the symbols to John—17: 1; 20: 9, 19: 10, 22: 8–9, Dan. 10: etc. Were those who now assume to fulfill these angel-messages, the explaining angel to John in Patmos, or to the prophets? To me it seems monstrous presumptuous and ruinous. Rev. 22: 18–19.

The Sabbath was of God—like "the law and the prophets." It prefigured the great "Sabbatism—the rest that remaineth." Heb. 4 1–9. But all partial views may only be perversive! Let us "take heed how we hear."

Selections.

Extracts from "Preachings."

BY TIMOTHY TITCOMB.

"Wisdom does not always speak in Greek and Latin."

Religion is a simple thing, so simple that "a wayfaring man though a fool need not err therein." The only fountain of religious truth is the Bible. We have it in our native tongue, and many a simple soul, without the aid of clergymen or schoolman, has drawn from it the inspiration of a new life and all the instruction that he needed touching his relations to God and men. Yet theology—human invention and human learning—has made religion a very complicated thing. It has elevated dogma and creed and formulary into prominence, and debased love and life into obscurity. It insists more on faith in tenets than in God, and denies to a Christian spirit the fellowship which it accords to rational belief. The disgraceful wrangles of the religious newspapers, the great disputes of the schools, and the high controversies of the pulpit and the pamphlet, are the quarrels and strifes for mastery of theologians, not christians—of learning, not love. Theology clings to old words and phrases after their life has departed. Theology is arrogant, selfish and proud. Theology excludes from the table of the Lord those whom He has accepted. Theology denies fellowship and communion to those whom Love expects to meet in Heaven. Theology casts out of the synagogue those who rise to think, while Christ forgives those who stoop to sin, and without condemnation, bids them sin no more. Theology builds rival churches, pits against each other rival sects, and wastes God's money. I believe that it would be every way better for the world if every book of dogmatic and controversial theology could be blotted out of existence, and Christendom were obliged to begin anew, drawing everything from the great Book of Books, leaving Paul and Apollos, and Princeton and New Haven and Cambridge behind, and learning of Him "who spake as never man spake."

The long and short of the matter is that the learned world has become so deeply involved in the thoughts of those who have gone before—so accustomed to following old channels, and of paying reverence to the opinions and systems of schools, that it cannot step out freely into the field of truth and handle things as it finds them. The common sense that deals with things instead of systems which treat of them, and the wisdom which grows out of this intimate contact and loving association with the actualities of human life and experience, are worth more to the world than all the learning in it. This handling of the vital realities of to-day with the gloves of dead men; this slow dragging of the trains of the present over old grass-grown turnpikes; this old monopoly of power and privilege among interests that touch every individual—the highest and the humblest; this stopping of the wheels of progress at every toll-gate and frontier for the benefit of learned publicans, is certainly against the common sense of the world, as it undoubtedly is against "the spirit of the age," if any body knows exactly what that is. Anything and everything which places fetters upon the spirit of inquiry, which blinds the eyes of discovery, and abridges the freedom of thought, whether it be contained in the lore of past ages or of the present time, is anything to be contemned and abjured. A living man with a carcass lashed to his back may creep but he cannot run.

Praying and Living.

Ever labor to live suitably to thy prayers. It is to no purpose to begin the day with God, and then to spend it with the devil—to be a saint in the morning in thy closet, and then a sinner all day in the world. Having prayed against sin, be sure thou watch against it, avoiding the occasions and temptations thereto; for otherwise thou wilt fall before it. Having prayed for holiness of life, labor to live holy. Having prayed for humility, labor to walk humbly. Having prayed for sobriety and temperance, labor to live soberly and temperately. Having prayed in the Spirit, labor to walk in the Spirit. Ever bear in mind that to pray for one thing and live another is a contradiction and an impiety. The whole course of thy life should savor of thy prayers. He who hath all his religion in his prayers, hath no religion at all.

Dying Words.

Not dying words but living deeds furnish the true test of a man's character. One of the old divines, when informed of the hopeful exercises of a wicked man on his death-bed, replied, "Tell me not how the man died, but how he lived." The mercy of God may not be limited, but the man who lives in sin presuming upon it, does so at infinite peril. Have you ever seriously thought on those words, "If we sin wilfully . . . there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin," etc., Heb. 10: 26; and those, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" Heb. 2. While a man is living in untroubled impenitence and carnal security, the waves of God's wrath may be actually rolling up and gathering about him, so that there shall be left "no escape."—Amer. Messenger.

☞ Never let your honest convictions be laughed down. You can no more exercise your reason if you live in the constant dread of ridicule, than you can enjoy your life if you are in the constant fear of death. If you think it right to differ from the times, and to make a point of morals, do it; however rustic, however antiquated, however pedantic it may appear, do it—not for insolence, but seriously and grandly, as a man who wore a soul of his own in his bosom, and did not wait till it was breathed into him by the breath of fashion. Be true to your manhood's convictions, and in the end you will not only be respected by the world, but have the approval of your own conscience.

COMMON EXPERIENCE.—John Wesley says, "When I was young, I was sure of everything: in a few years, having been mistaken a thousand times, I was not half so sure of most things as I was before; at present, I am hardly sure of anything but what God has revealed to man."

☞ Do not the Scriptures clearly show that they who persecute are generally in the wrong, and they who suffer persecution in the right? that the majority has always been on the side of falsehood, and the minority on the side of truth?—Martin Luther.

For the Crisis.

A Few Suggestions.

BRO. GRANT:—The confusion incident on the "throwing of that club" by H——, having in a measure subsided, I would like to say to him, we are looking for another. For one, I should be glad to have the nest pretty thoroughly stirred up, even if I get severely hit in the contest.

That there is need of reform in regard to our manner of living, eating, dressing, etc., I have for many years been convinced; and that there is a wonderful amount of ignorance manifested concerning these matters, and ofttimes a seeming willingness to remain in ignorance, is also very apparent.

I have often been surprised to find people who are very scrupulous in studying and obeying the moral laws of God, yet seem to overlook entirely, or forget that there are physical laws that demand attention, and that they cannot be violated with impunity. Yet people live and suffer innumerable ills without ever stopping to inquire the cause, or how they may be prevented, attributing to Providence that suffering which is only the fruit of their own transgression. If the truth is hinted at, we are met with the resignedly pious reply: "Ah! well, we belong to a groaning creation, and we cannot expect a better state of things until our change comes."

Why [illegible] to long [illegible] habits? why so unwilling [illegible] attention called to them, or a reform mentioned? Can it be that we are such slaves to fashion and our appetites, that we fear investigation, lest we be called upon to let our idols go, at the same time we profess to be fully consecrated to God, "soul, body and spirit?"

Our minds must be fully convinced on any subject, before we shall be aroused to action sufficiently to result in any permanent good. This is why I speak, and why I wish others to do the same. Not that I would presume to teach, (although if suffering could qualify one for that capacity, I certainly might be entitled to the place,) but a consciousness of my own necessities, my own want of instruction, leads me to speak thus earnestly.

A sound mind in a sound body is what we do not often find, especially among females; and it is a source both of shame and regret, that so much time is misspent, so many opportunities of doing good neglected, so much talent buried out of sight, so many noble powers and energies crippled or allowed to lie dormant, just on account of the conditions we are in, or allow ourselves to be in.

I know many of our brethren and sisters, who are very conscientious and honest, think that by turning our attention to these subjects, we are getting out of the way, and losing sight of the near coming of the Lord. Surely, no people should be more anxious to glorify God in their bodies and spirits, which are his, than those looking for the Lord; and can we not glorify him in a healthy body far better than in a miserably diseased one? And when we profess daily to present our bodies a living sacrifice unto God, does it not seem like solemn mockery to present such misused, abused, be-drugged, useless ones, as we sometimes have done, when our imbecility is the result of our own mismanagement? Can such service be acceptable to God? Of course I would not be understood to impute all suffering and disease to such a source; but if we will only examine ourselves, we shall find that we are indeed sinners, if "sin is transgression of the law." But some say to us, when we refer to this subject, "We are told to take no thought for our life, what we shall eat; neither for the body, what we shall put on." I am much inclined to think this Scripture is misapplied here, and will only place another passage beside it and leave it. "Whether, therefore, ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

A word in regard to dress; and I feel that I am about to step upon forbidden ground,—and must I step softly? In regard to the "short dress" I will say, I have worn it some five months, for a home dress, and for comfort and convenience I never found anything equal to it. Some will be ready to ask at once, "Why do you not adopt it for general use?" I can only reply, I would be glad to do so. I often talk with ladies who acknowledge this style of dress to be far preferable to the prevailing fashion in respect to comfort, health, etc., and if all would adopt it, they would do so, but for this fear of looking unlike others. Yet they belong to a class of people, than whom, since the days of early Methodism, at least, none have said or written more against pride, love of the world, or conformity to its fashions.

O! consistency, where art thou? Well, it is good to have our principles tested occasionally. I feel both ashamed of, and sorry for, those women whose judgments are thoroughly convinced in this matter, and whose husbands would gladly encourage them in the dress reform, yet refuse to act. To those whose minds are yet undecided I have nothing to say. They must live, or suffer and learn. I did not think of saying so much, when I commenced, but wished to remind H—— of his promise. Or, has Hydropathy taken the "offensive" all out of him?

Influences of Dietetic Habits.

To be successful as a student, and yet maintain bodily health, one needs to be regular in his dietetic habits. The practice so common among students of eating largely at their meals,—which they have a right to do,—and yet frequently partaking of lunches, or food between meals, cannot be too strongly and severely reprimanded. It is in very many instances a predisposing cause to derangements of the digestive organs; and by sympathy, to derangement of the brain itself; and in not a few instances is a provocative cause of the severe sickness which students often suffer.

Now I am not going to say in this lecture, what students, whether at school or in their own libraries as matured men, or professional men in the pursuit of active intellectual life, shall eat; I know this, and this much I will say, that no man, whatever his profession, vocation, or condition may be, can live as long, or perform as much labor, upon food or drink which in its effects on the system produces an abnormal expenditure of vital energy,—giving for the time being apparently, vigor of mind or increased strength of body, to be followed in the reactionary stage by a depression corresponding in intensity,—as he can who uses food and drink which furnishes simple support to the system in the way of nutrition alone.

There is abroad the impression—and it extends through all classes of society—that the harder a man works the more he needs stimulating food and drink. Now, by every law that affects man's existence, and touches him in his qualities and faculties as a rational, responsible creature, whose business it is to live on earth as long as he can, the converse of this proposition is mathematically true. The more fatigued a man is, the less does he need stimulants. He needs just the opposite of stimulants—he needs Rest. Tired, exhausted Nature needs stimulation in such case, no more than the horse fatigued with the day's work, needs in his stable to feel the lash of his driver instead of good grooming. The whole view is ridiculously absurd, and cannot for a moment stand the test of scientific criticism. You touch it and it disappears—as all absurdities do when Common Sense is brought to bear upon them. And this view is not to be set aside by the flimsy statement that bread is a stimulus, and water, and exercise, and social intercourse are stimuli,—which is not true in any correct meaning of the term; and which if it were true, would not in the least affect the correctness of the position I assume. For these are great Natural agencies, and enter not chemically, but vitally, into our constitutions. A man cannot live without nutriment—he can live without poison. He cannot live without the proper exhibition and gratification of his social faculties—he can live without their abnormal exercise. Whenever, therefore, task-work, either of the body or brain, is brought to bear upon a person, under a given set of circumstances, till fatigued conditions of the person ensue, what he needs, is Rest. In one instance it may be entire freedom from bodily or mental effort; in the other it may be a simple change in the direction of the effort. But in neither case does he need indulgence in stimulus, either as food or drink, whose tendency is to create such extraordinary vital action, as to produce abnormal states of the body or brain. For just in proportion as these are produced, does the man expend life power unnecessarily, and so in fact is being killed instead of being kept alive.—Dr. J. C. Jackson.

The Art of Taking Breath.

A man who takes breath properly, will fatigue himself less in speaking three or four hours, as certain political orators do, especially in England, than another in half an hour; and the orators who are able to speak so long, are either men who have studied the management of their breath, or men who speak much, but who speak well; for in this case, respiration regulates itself, without separate thought, just as in conversation.

But it is by no means the same when one recites a discourse from memory; especially if it is the discourse of another; for in writing, we take care, without being aware of it, to adjust the length of periods to the habitudes of our lungs. But the exercise in which it is most difficult to breathe aright, as being that which is furthest removed from the natural tone, is the exercise of reading; and it is remarked that one is wearied much sooner by reading than by speaking.

There are very few persons who can bear half an hour of reading without a slight inconvenience of the organs; but there are many who can speak an hour without trouble. The point of the difficulty is this: to time the respiration so as always to take breath before it is exhausted. For this purpose, it is necessary to breathe quite often, and to take advantage of little rests in the delivery. It might be feared lest this necessity should injure the utterance and make it frigid; but on the contrary, the rests which are thus employed by one who is exercised so as to use them properly, are as expressive as the voice itself; the slowness which they communicate to the discourse is only that slowness which gives more weight and vigor to the thought, so this happy infirmity becomes an additional power.

It is, lastly, by breathing seasonably, that the speaker will avoid a fault which is very common and very great; that of letting the voice fall at the end of sentences, which renders the recitation at the same time indistinct and monotonous.

This is the abuse of the rule which is pointed out by nature. It is natural to lower the voice slightly at the moment of finishing a sentence, at least in most cases; for there are certain thoughts which, on the contrary, demand an elevation of the voice at the close. But the fall is made too perceptible, and is taken from too great a height, so that there are often three or four words which the hearer catches with difficulty, or does not catch at all. This would be bad enough, even without the additional evil, that the expression is weakened at the same time with the voice.

As a general rule, the voice should be kept up to the end of the sentence, excepting only that slight depression, and, as it were, reflection, which denote that the sense is terminated. But to do this, you must breathe in time; as it is because the lungs are exhausted that you must lower the voice; for, where there is no breath there is no sound.

I'm Weary.

I'm weary of watching the flowers fading,
And seeing the leaves drop and fall;
Each fair and loved object fading and dying,
And those that have loved them mourning and sighing,
O'er the doom of earth's loved ones all.

I'm weary of seeing the loved and loving
Pass away as the flowers die,
And with tears we watch them fading and drooping;
To keep them with us still longer and hoping,
Till left to weep and sigh.

I'm weary of waking from youth's bright dreaming,
And finding my fondest hopes flown,
Like the sunbeam bright o'er the ocean gleaming,
Hopes realized never, but still ever seeming
To beckon the weary heart on.

Is there naught beyond these? the heart cries, weeping,
God's word a sure answer doth give;
[illegible] the loved ones in death now sleeping,
Thou and all thine are in his care and keeping,
Him trust if forever thou'dst live.

The Christian's Hope.

"Thou hast made known to me the ways of life; thou shalt make me full of joy with thy countenance."—Bible.

How cheering to the christian is a promise like the above,—having embraced Christ, how truly does he realize it to be true. With what songs of gratitude does he praise his Maker that he can now discern the ways of eternal life; that his eyes were opened to the truths of inspiration; that his soul was illuminated with a heavenly flame; that his feet were taken from an horrible pit, and placed upon the rock, Christ Jesus; that a new song has been put in his mouth, even praise and thanksgiving, and his whole being praising God for his wonderful condescension to the children of men, in giving his only Son to die, that through him all might come and partake of the glories of heaven, and secure to themselves a state of endless happiness.

How different the aspect of one who refuses to walk in the pathway of life. His horizon is constantly darkened by gloomy, foreboding clouds; the cares and attendant sorrows of life prey upon him, his steps are unsteady and tottering; he moves like one in a trance; the future is a blank; the anticipated joys of a "life beyond," so cheering to the christian, to him are unthought of, save with sorrow—his being of an ephemeral character and delusive. The Book of Books, a luminary to those who take it as their guide, is neglected and forgotten,—its fearful threatenings are unheeded, its consolations not participated.

To him no bright oasis is reached—no cooling draught is sipped to quench the burning thirst of that inward nature; the eye tires with the noonday of life, the angry roaring of the tempest rings in his ears; suns rise and set; the thick gloomy darkness of midnight settles upon him; to him no smiling countenance pierces the darkness of that hour, the past rolls up before him, as if to crush his already burdened soul. Opportunities of repentance, pleadings of the Spirit, scornfully slighted, and that "still, small voice" bidden to be silent,—and now he must drink from the bitter cup, the ingredients of which he has himself prepared. Tired nature relaxes, the day's journey is completed, and with no ray of light he sinks into the sleep of [illegible] O, horrible is the anguish and remorse of a guilty conscience!

But how different with him whose heart is made glad by the smiling approbation of God; whose inmost being can exclaim, "Thou shalt make me full of joy with thy countenance." Let the prostrating hand of disease fall upon him, his countenance will teem with heavenly joy; and when, perchance, the tempests rage around his head, and in mad fury threaten to dash his fragile barque; how composedly does he rest, how securely does he recline upon the promises of God; how patiently does he bear the chastening rod; how submissively does he bow to the will of his Master, realizing he will forsake none who put their trust in him. He knoweth One whose piercing eye can penetrate the gloom, whose untold depth of love can save, whose powerful arm can support, and say to the raging tempest—"Be still!"

O! how irradiate with love is the halo of glory which encircles those who are approbated of God, whose consciences are void of offence. And how precious to realize we have a God like this, infinite in wisdom, the embodiment of all good, the fountain of all purity, the depositary of every blessing, the Creator of all things, the Great Primary Centre, from whom all created matter has its rise, who brought the universe into existence, and from chaotic darkness created light.

Truly would we worship this Being, and bow in the dust, that he remembers us, mere dust as we are—we would ever look to Him with reverence, and sacrifice our all to our heavenly Father, ever praising him for the flood of light that shines from his Holy Word, and in humility asking him to lead our wandering steps, and at last bring us home to enjoy rest in a land of fadeless bloom, where angels, with all the hosts of the redeemed, shall, through a long eternity, chant praises to God.

Sketch of Labors.

BRO. GRANT:—As it is cheering to the lovers of Christ to learn the prosperity of his cause, and also important that they learn the adverse influences connected with it; sketches of travels and labors are sometimes interesting for this end. It is true I have reported the field of my labors somewhat in our "Conference reports," but I will add a few items not there mentioned.

Since closing my labors with the church in Richmond, last year in April, I have traveling mostly as an evangelist, to labor where the people most needed help, but partly on business to earn money wherewith to sustain my family. By invitation, I preached in the free meeting-house at Richmond corner, once a month for three months, without seeing any results, excepting good attendance and attention of the people. The house had been deserted for several years. No meetings of any sort in the place, and apparently as little christian influence as in any other part of the world. Soon after, a revival sprang up. Now they hold meetings every Sunday, and several prayer meetings a week, and a number have been converted. Blessed be God.

In May I visited the little church in Brunswick, preached one Sunday, found them standing fast in the Lord, rejoicing in the truth, and hoping for the end. From there I went to Yarmouth and preached one Sunday to Bro. York's people, who are doing well in the Lord, under his faithful and energetic labors. I next visited Palermo, and preached once, where a general reformation was in progress.

In June, by invitation, I visited the brethren in Waterford, preached one Sabbath, found a good interest in several new hearers to learn the truth. I have been sent for to go there several times since. I intend to do so soon, if God will. Next attended our yearly Conference at Lincolnville. On my return, stopped at South Hope and preached two evenings. Here, some of the believers are deeply engaged in the work of the Lord. Went next to Jefferson, attended a protracted meeting held in a large barn which the brethren had fitted up for the occasion, and celebrated the Fourth of July in worshiping God. A goodly number had just been converted, and others reclaimed. It was a refreshing season. The best "celebration of Independence" I ever attended. Five were baptized.

Aug 5th.—Again visited the church in Brunswick, and preached to them. Next visited Flying Point, Freeport, where a few brethren have obtained light on the "blessed hope." Preached to them one evening, had a very attentive hearing. Some really love the truth.

Aug. 21.—Visited Round Pond, preached one Sunday. The brethren were mostly at sea. The people seem to love to hear what we preach, though few love to walk in it. Called on Brn. Campbell, Curtis, and Herleys, on my way home, found them in the love of the truth. Started for Livermore Conference, which has been reported. Went to fill my appointment at Bean's Corner, Jay, where lives a faithful sister Gilman, whose labors exert a good influence on the community, as also that of her pious, widowed mother. There I was kindly entertained. Preached three evenings, to very attentive congregations. Several here begin to love the truth. Here found a brother and sister Foster, late of Newburyport, Mass.

From Jay I went to West Farmington, and preached to a few who have recently embraced the blessed hope, and are looking for the Lord. Thence hastened to attend our adjourned yearly Conference, (already reported) at Yarmouth. At North Augusta, preached once on Sunday. The people here are somewhat liberated from sectarianism, and have ears to hear the truth; several love it. Bro. T. J. Dudley frequently preaches to them, and exerts a good influence among them.

Oct. 4th. at South Gardiner. On arriving, found that one of the citizens, a very respectable, peaceful man, had that morning hanged himself in a grove near his own house, which calamity had thrown the whole community into agitation and grief. Difficulty with a neighbor had caused insanity and led to the fatal result. I preached to the few who assembled in the evening, though much afflicted by the sad occurrence. We next visited East Bowdoinham. The brethren here have been injured by a false gospel, in former times, and are mostly done with it; but some are still distressed and perplexed. The next Sunday we preached to a few who love Christ and his gospel. Sunday 16th, preached in another district in Bowdoinham, where they have several times invited me. I think some good could be accomplished there by faithful labor. Some are interested in the gospel hope.

Nov. 4th, visited the church in Brunswick, attended their monthly conference. It was a blessed season. Bro. C. Densmore of Bowdoinham was also with us, and by their unanimous vote united with that church. Sunday I preached to them, and next day went to Bath, looked up a Bro. Merrow who had moved from Windsor some years ago, and been secluded. I [illegible]

May the Lord bless and keep them unto the end. I then went to Yarmouth, found Bro. York joyous in the work of the gospel; attended a prayer meeting with the happy, prosperous flock under his watchcare.

12th. Preached in Portland, had a good hearing, and pleasant visit with a few who seem determined to enter the kingdom through all the tribulation that comes. I should think they were in a better condition than for some time past; have been prospering some the past year. May the Lord strengthen and build them up, adding to their numbers "such as shall be saved."

Dec. 11th. Visited the brethren in Augusta, but as my appointment was not received by the brethren, I did not preach. From thence went to Belgrade, Rome, and Vienna, calling on several brethren and finding them in the faith. Did not hold meetings as it was a very stormy and cold time, and bad sleighing.

18th. Preached in West Farmington, to the few there who love the truth, and who were at home. Several were from home. Called on our much esteemed brother, Joseph Fairbanks, who has been deprived of health and partially of mind, the past year. He is much improved, and will, I think, be able soon to engage again in active business. His devoted wife is full of hope for his restoration. Let me here ask the prayers of the believers in his behalf, that God may restore him to health. I passed through Wilton for Livermore, but had not time to call on the few brethren there at that time. Stopped at East Livermore, and found that "the words of the truth of the gospel," lately preached there by several of God's watchmen, had taken effect, and some love the gospel hope, and talk of the coming kingdom.

On the 22d, while passing through Leeds, in crossing the R. R. track, my sleigh turned over, tipping me out, and a heavy trunk also, which fell upon my back, causing an injury from which I have not yet fully recovered. The Lord be praised that my life was preserved. The cars were very near, and I just escaped being crushed by them. In two days' time I rode home, twenty miles, with much difficulty, laid by about two weeks, and though unfit for active service started for Rome Conference. This conference has been reported. While there we preached two evenings in Belgrade, found some in the faith, although a mighty effort has been made to keep the gospel hope from taking effect, by one party, and much labor spent by another, to plant a new, false gospel. The labors of Bro. Sevey have been much blessed there, as also in many other places. In Jan., we visited Whitefield, Somerville, and Jefferson. Called on Eld. S. K. Partridge, who is actively engaged in preaching on Sundays, but is too much engaged in other matters to meet half the calls for preaching. I had two appointments for Jefferson, but as they did not get them I did not preach. The believers are doing well there.

22d. At Round Pond, with Bro. T. Smith. A few here cleave to the word of God, but there is much want of activity in faith and devotion. Came home and am detained by a severe illness of my boy, with lung fever; he is now recovering. May we soon enter the land where none are sick. There are many calls for preaching which we are not able to respond to.

The Part Illustrated; Showing its Harmony with the Whole.

The common way in quoting "the Word" is, to quote a part as if it were the whole of truth. The part being true in itself—divinely true—the temptation is very strong to assert its universal, all comprehending application,—as if there could be no other or further truth to modify or enlarge the little mind's contracted conclusion!

I. The Jews take the law given by Jehovah through their mediator, Moses, as if it were, with their application, all, and only the truth. Thus they shut out of their minds the ultimate truth and essential intention for which the law itself was given. "The vail is on their hearts."

II. The Romanists assert truly that the keys were given to St. Peter, and that the Gospel commission was to man in all the world. But they do greatly err in so applying this as to confine grace with "all rule, authority and power," to the church.

III. Protestants do most righteously quote Scripture in protesting against the monstrous assumptions of Romanists. But when they organize and administer church affairs according to the "pattern" shown to them in Rome, they build again what they should have destroyed, and are transgressors. In my late article on Babylon, the elements of Romanism adopted by Protestants are briefly but distinctly shown. Thus at each advance some truth is taken up by faith, while essential error is brought forward by Satan to dilute and pervert it. "God be merciful to us miserable sinners!" Amen.

IV. This partial and delusive principle prevails all around us, and, I fear, all through us. No one can "cast the first stone;" for "all have sinned" and come short of the glory of God."

a. The Sabbath day (ever in force and [illegible] essential) is so strenuously applied and enforced, as to override and ride down "the law of the spirit of life in Jesus," that is now in force for accepting sinners BY FAITH. It is assumed and identified with "the seal of the living God," and made first, so as to take precedence of all mere gospel ordinances. Neither Jew nor Pope need do more in setting up their will against the Divine.

b. The second advent of Jesus, (though it is revealed for all the purposes of the great salvation, or the restitution of all things spoken,) is so applied by sectarian Adventists, as to cut off the grand sum of the Law, the Prophets, and the Psalms, yet to be fulfilled. This would, if it could so be, "make God a liar." Nay, more, it would falsify Christ himself, and so overthrow all pretence for faith or hope of salvation.—Luke 24: 25–44; Matt. 5: 17–20; Rom. 3: 31; Heb. 1st to 13th chapters; Ps. 2, 45, 67, 72, 96, 98, 132. See Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, etc., etc.

Note. I only quote: God will apply by fulfilling it faithfully. Gen. 22: 14–18; Isa. 55: 9–11. We get his mind by His word, as it stands, and as it has been progressively accomplished, so far, through thousands of years, in every "jot and tittle." This "foundation standeth sure."

c. "THE BEAST" is said to be "a body of rulers." Others echo and re-echo this, as if it were all and every part of "the truth" in hand. Just see! "Thou (Nebuchadnezzar) art this head of gold." Dan. 2. Was Nebuchadnezzar "a body of rulers?" "They worshiped the beast." Yes, they set up a statue to the Emperor, and worshiped the Emperor! Never the empire, or the body of rulers. "The number of the beast is the number of A MAN; and his (the man's) number is 666." Is this "man" a body of many men? If so, then who will believe any thing? who can correct Pope or Plato by the testimony of the Almighty?

d. "The third angel's message" is the theme of others—their little present Gospel! Note. It is demonstrable that the first angel has not yet even started to fulfill his message. Thus the proper names and language of this book, so far as repeated from foregoing Scripture, must mean the same, and not falsify nor stultify "the words of the Holy One." But in the history of angelic agency, we find Gabriel, the angel of God, preaching "the glad tidings of great joy." Luke 2.

Therefore, this angel of the first message, etc., must be as much of an angel as was Gabriel who preached on the plain of Bethlehem. We must then wait till HE comes, is heard and known to act in accordance with this language, (Rev. 14: 8) ere we have faith even in the first angel's message fulfilled! This angel may be one of "the seven angels" so often named, and so constantly acting amidst the scenes of judgment. They have the seven vials of wrath to pour. They are named four times in eight verses, chap. 15. One of these seven angels explained the symbols to John—17: 1, 20: 9, 19: 10, 22: 8–9, Dan. 10, etc. Were those who now assume to fulfill these angel-messages, the explaining angel to John in Patmos, or to the prophets? To me it seems monstrous presumptuous and ruinous. Rev. 22: 18–19.

The Sabbath was of God—like "the law and the prophets." It prefigured the great "Sabbatism—the rest that remaineth." Heb. 4: 1–9. But all partial views may only be perversive! Let us "take heed how we hear."

Selections.

Extracts from "Preachings."

BY TIMOTHY TITCOMB.

"Wisdom does not always speak in Greek and Latin."

Religion is a simple thing, so simple that "a wayfaring man though a fool need not err therein." The only fountain of religious truth is the Bible. We have it in our native tongue, and many a simple soul, without the aid of clergymen or schoolman, has drawn from it the inspiration of a new life and all the instruction that he needed touching his relations to God and men. Yet theology—human invention and human learning—has made religion a very complicated thing. It has elevated dogma and creed and formulary into prominence, and debased love and life into obscurity. It insists more on faith in tenets than in God, and denies to a Christian spirit the fellowship which it accords to rational belief. The disgraceful wrangles of the religious newspapers, the great disputes of the schools, and the high controversies of the pulpit and the pamphlet, are the quarrels and strifes for mastery of theologians, not christians—of learning, not love. Theology clings to old words and phrases after their life has departed. Theology is arrogant, selfish and proud. Theology excludes from the table of the Lord those whom He has accepted. Theology denies fellowship and communion to those whom Love expects to meet in Heaven. Theology casts out of the synagogue those who rise to think, while Christ forgives those who stoop to sin, and without condemnation, bids them sin no more. Theology builds rival churches, pits against each other rival sects, and wastes God's money. I believe that it would be every way better for the world if every book of dogmatic and controversial theology could be blotted out of existence, and Christendom were obliged to begin anew, drawing everything from the great Book of Books, leaving Paul and Apollos, and Princeton and New [illegible]

The long and short of the matter is that the learned world has become so deeply involved in the thoughts of those who have gone before—so accustomed to following old channels, and of paying reverence to the opinions and systems of schools, that it cannot step out freely into the field of truth and handle things as it finds them. The common sense that deals with things instead of systems which treat of them, and the wisdom which grows out of this intimate contact and loving association with the actualities of human life and experience, are worth more to the world than all the learning in it. This handling of the vital realities of to-day with the gloves of dead men; this slow dragging of the trains of the present over old grass-grown turnpikes; this old monopoly of power and privilege among interests that touch every individual—the highest and the humblest; this stopping of the wheels of progress at every toll-gate and frontier for the benefit of learned publicans, is certainly against the common sense of the world, as it undoubtedly is against "the spirit of the age," if any body knows exactly what that is. Anything and everything which places fetters upon the spirit of inquiry, which blinds the eyes of discovery, and abridges the freedom of thought, whether it be contained in the lore of past ages or of the present time, is anything to be contemned and abjured. A living man with a carcass lashed to his back may creep but he cannot run.

Praying and Living.

Ever labor to live suitably to thy prayers. It is to no purpose to begin the day with God, and then to spend it with the devil—to be a saint in the morning in thy closet, and then a sinner all day in the world. Having prayed against sin, be sure thou watch against it, avoiding the occasions and temptations thereto, for otherwise thou wilt fall before it. Having prayed for holiness of life, labor to live holy. Having prayed for humility, labor to walk humbly. Having prayed for sobriety and temperance, labor to live soberly and temperately. Having prayed in the Spirit, labor to walk in the Spirit. Ever bear in mind that to pray for one thing and live another is a contradiction and an impiety. The whole course of thy life should savor of thy prayers. He who hath all his religion in his prayers, hath no religion at all.

Dying Words.

Not dying words but living deeds furnish the true test of a man's character. One of the old divines, when informed of the hopeful exercises of a wicked man on his death-bed, replied, "Tell me not how the man died, but how he lived." The mercy of God may not be limited, but the man who lives in sin presuming upon it, does so at infinite peril. Have you ever seriously thought on those words, "If we sin wilfully . . . there remaineth no more sacrifice for sin," etc., Heb. 10: 26; and those, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" Heb. 2. While a man is living in untroubled impenitence and carnal security, the waves of God's wrath may be actually rolling up and gathering about him, so that there shall be left "no escape."—Amer. Messenger.

☞ Never let your honest convictions be laughed down. You can no more exercise your reason if you live in the constant dread of ridicule, than you can enjoy your life if you are in the constant fear of death. If you think it right to differ from the times, and to make a point of morals, do it; however rustic, however antiquated, however pedantic it may appear, do it—not for insolence, but seriously and grandly, as a man who wore a soul of his own in his bosom, and did not wait till it was breathed into him by the breath of fashion. Be true to your manhood's convictions, and in the end you will not only be respected by the world, but have the approval of your own conscience.

COMMON EXPERIENCE.—John Wesley says, "When I was young, I was sure of everything: in a few years, having been mistaken a thousand times, I was not half so sure of most things as I was before; at present, I am hardly sure of anything but what God has revealed to man."

☞ Do not the Scriptures clearly show that they who persecute are generally in the wrong, and they who suffer persecution in the right? that the majority has always been on the side of falsehood, and the minority on the side of truth?—Martin Luther.

A Few Suggestions.

BRO. GRANT:—The confusion incident on the "throwing of that club" by H——, having in a measure subsided, I would like to say to him, we are looking for another. For one, I should be glad to have the nest pretty thoroughly stirred up, even if I get severely hit in the contest.

That there is need of reform in regard to our manner of living, eating, dressing, etc., I have for many years been convinced; and that there is a wonderful amount of ignorance manifested concerning these matters, and ofttimes a seeming willingness to remain in ignorance, is also very apparent.

I have often been surprised to find people who are very scrupulous in studying and obeying the moral laws of God, yet seem to overlook entirely, or forget that there are physical laws that demand attention, and that they cannot be violated with impunity. Yet people live and suffer innumerable ills without ever stopping to inquire the cause, or how they may be prevented, attributing to Providence that suffering which is only the fruit of their own transgression. If the truth is hinted at, we are met with the resignedly pious reply: "Ah! well, we belong to a groaning [illegible]

Why [illegible] to long est[illegible] habits? why so unwilling [illegible] attention called to them, or a reform mentioned? Can it be that we are such slaves to fashion and our appetites, that we fear investigation, lest we be called upon to let our idols go, at the same time we profess to be fully consecrated to God, "soul, body and spirit?"

Our minds must be fully convinced on any subject, before we shall be aroused to action sufficiently to result in any permanent good. This is why I speak, and why I wish others to do the same. Not that I would presume to teach, (although if suffering could qualify one for that capacity, I certainly might be entitled to the place,) but a consciousness of my own necessities, my own want of instruction, leads me to speak thus earnestly.

A sound mind in a sound body is what we do not often find, especially among females; and it is a source both of shame and regret, that so much time is misspent, so many opportunities of doing good neglected, so much talent buried out of sight, so many noble powers and energies crippled or allowed to lie dormant, just on account of the conditions we are in, or allow ourselves to be in.

I know many of our brethren and sisters, who are very conscientious and honest, think that by turning our attention to these subjects, we are getting out of the way, and losing sight of the near coming of the Lord. Surely, no people should be more anxious to glorify God in their bodies and spirits, which are his, than those looking for the Lord; and can we not glorify him in a healthy body far better than in a miserably diseased one? And when we profess daily to present our bodies a living sacrifice unto God, does it not seem like solemn mockery to present such misused, abused, be-drugged, useless ones, as we sometimes have done, when our imbecility is the result of our own mismanagement? Can such service be acceptable to God? Of course I would not be understood to impute all suffering and disease to such a source; but if we will only examine ourselves, we shall find that we are indeed sinners, if "sin is transgression of the law." But some say to us, when we refer to this subject, "We are told to take no thought for our life, what we shall eat; neither for the body, what we shall put on." I am much inclined to think this Scripture is misapplied here, and will only place another passage beside it and leave it. "Whether, therefore, ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

A word in regard to dress; and I feel that I am about to step upon forbidden ground,—and must I step softly? In regard to the "short dress" I will say, I have worn it some five months, for a home dress, and for comfort and convenience I never found anything equal to it. Some will be ready to ask at once, "Why do you not adopt it for general use?" I can only reply, I would be glad to do so. I often talk with ladies who acknowledge this style of dress to be far preferable to the prevailing fashion in respect to comfort, health, etc., and if all would adopt it, they would do so, but for this fear of looking unlike others. Yet they belong to a class of people, than whom, since the days of early Methodism, at least, none have said or written more against pride, love of the world, or conformity to its fashions.

O! consistency, where art thou? Well, it is good to have our principles tested occasionally. I feel both ashamed of, and sorry for, those women whose judgments are thoroughly convinced in this matter, and whose husbands would gladly encourage them in the dress reform, yet refuse to act. To those whose minds are yet undecided I have nothing to say. They must live, or suffer and learn. I did not think of saying so much, when I commenced, but wished to remind H—— of his promise. Or, has Hydropathy taken the "offensive" all out of him?

Influences of Dietetic Habits.

To be successful as a student, and yet maintain bodily health, one needs to be regular in his dietetic habits. The practice so common among students of eating largely at their meals,—which they have a right to do,—and yet frequently partaking of lunches, or food between meals, cannot be too strongly and severely reprimanded. It is in very many instances a predisposing cause to derangements of the digestive organs; and by sympathy, to derangement of the brain itself; and in not a few instances is a provocative cause of the severe sickness which students often suffer.

Now I am not going to say in this lecture, what students, whether at school or in their own libraries as matured men, or professional men in the pursuit of active intellectual life, shall eat; I know this, and this much I will say, that no man, whatever his profession, vocation, or condition may be, can live as long, or perform as much labor, upon food or drink which in its effects on the system produces an abnormal expenditure of vital energy,—giving for the time being apparently, vigor of mind or increased strength of body, to be followed in the reactionary stage, by a depression corresponding in intensity,—as he can who uses food and drink which furnishes simple support to the system in the way of nutrition alone.

There is abroad the impression—and it extends through all classes of society—that the harder [illegible] as him in his qualities and faculties as a rational, responsible creature, whose business it is to live on earth as long as he can, the converse of this proposition is mathematically true. The more fatigued a man is, the less does he need stimulants. He needs just the opposite of stimulants—he needs Rest. Tired, exhausted Nature needs stimulation in such case, no more than the horse fatigued with the day's work, needs in his stable to feel the lash of his driver instead of good grooming. The whole view is ridiculously absurd, and cannot for a moment stand the test of scientific criticism. You touch it and it disappears—as all absurdities do when Common Sense is brought to bear upon them. And this view is not to be set aside by the flimsy statement that bread is a stimulus,—and water, and exercise, and social intercourse are stimuli,—which is not true in any correct meaning of the term; and which if it were true, would not in the least affect the correctness of the position I assume. For these are great Natural agencies, and enter not chemically, but vitally, into our constitutions. A man cannot live without nutriment—he can live without poison. He cannot live without the proper exhibition and gratification of his social faculties—he can live without their abnormal exercise. Whenever, therefore, task-work, either of the body or brain, is brought to bear upon a person, under a given set of circumstances, till fatigued conditions of the person ensue, what he needs, is Rest. In one instance it may be entire freedom from bodily or mental effort; in the other it may be a simple change in the direction of the effort. But in neither case does he need indulgence in stimulus, either as food or drink, whose tendency is to create such extraordinary vital action, as to produce abnormal states of the body or brain. For just in proportion as these are produced, does the man expend life power unnecessarily, and so in fact is being killed instead of being kept alive.—Dr. J. C. Jackson.

The Art of Taking Breath.

A man who takes breath properly, will fatigue himself less in speaking three or four hours, as certain political orators do, especially in England, than another in half an hour; and the orators who are able to speak so long, are either men who have studied the management of their breath, or men who speak much, but who speak well; for in this case, respiration regulates itself, without separate thought, just as in conversation.

But it is by no means the same when one recites a discourse from memory, especially if it is the discourse of another; for in writing, we take care, without being aware of it, to adjust the length of periods to the habitudes of our lungs. But the exercise in which it is most difficult to breathe aright, as being that which is furthest removed from the natural tone, is the exercise of reading; and it is remarked that one is wearied much sooner by reading than by speaking.

There are very few persons who can bear half an hour of reading without a slight inconvenience of the organs; but there are many who can speak an hour without trouble. The point of the difficulty is this: to time the respiration so as always to take breath before it is exhausted. For this purpose, it is necessary to breathe quite often, and to take advantage of little rests in the delivery. It might be feared lest this necessity should injure the utterance and make it frigid; but on the contrary, the rests which are thus employed by one who is exercised so as to use them properly, are as expressive as the voice itself; the slowness which they communicate to the discourse is only that slowness which gives more weight and vigor to the thought, so this happy infirmity becomes an additional power.

It is, lastly, by breathing seasonably, that the speaker will avoid a fault which is very common and very great; that of letting the voice fall at the end of sentences, which renders the recitation at the same time indistinct and monotonous.

This is the abuse of the rule which is pointed out by nature. It is natural to lower the voice slightly at the moment of finishing a sentence, at least in most cases; for there are certain thoughts which, on the contrary, demand an elevation of the voice at the close. But the fall is made too perceptible, and is taken from too great a height, so that there are often three or four words which the hearer catches with difficulty, or does not catch at all. This would be bad enough, even without the additional evil, that the expression is weakened at the same time with the voice.

As a general rule, the voice should be kept up to the end of the sentence, excepting only that slight depression, and, as it were, reflection, which denote that the sense is terminated. But to do this, you must breathe in time; as it is because the lungs are exhausted that you must lower the voice; for, where there is no breath there is no sound.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

The Swiftness of Time.

Swiftly flow, thou falling river,
Like a dream that dies away,
Down to Ocean gliding ever;
Keep thy calm, unruffled way.

Time with such a silent motion
Floats along on wings of air,
To eternity's dark Ocean,
Burying all its treasures there.

Roses bloom, then quickly wither;
Cheeks are bright, then fade and die;
Shapes of light are wafted hither,
Then like visions hurry by.

Quick as clouds at evening driven
O'er the many-colored west,
Years are bearing us to heaven,
Home of happiness and rest.

Home of peace, of joy and pleasure,
There eternally we'll sing;
By the margin of the River,
While the heavenly anthems ring.

Answers to Prayer.

While it is meet and right to discuss points of doctrine in search of truth or vindication of the right, that great essential, prayer, should never be for a moment lost sight of; else we may argue theology, search out mysteries and understand them, preach the speedy coming of the Lord, and yet be foolish with all our wisdom, and pronounced unworthy of admittance at the Marriage Supper of the Lamb. The tender blade just peeping from the earth would as soon grow to full fruition without dew, rain, or sunshine, as religion in the heart without the appliances of frequent prayer and meditation. It is the only avenue of approach to God, and the longer it remains unused, the more difficult is the communication. The sinless Jesus was frequent in his appeals to his Father, when sorrow bowed him down or when he wished to exercise his delegated power for his Father's glory. How often has he withdrawn from the world and betaken himself to the mountain's solitude, and there poured out his soul before Him who never turned a deaf ear to the cry of supplication, when it came up to Him in secret from a bleeding, humble heart.

To make prayer acceptable to God it must come, not merely in well rounded periods, or high-sounding phrases, but in full assurance of faith, with submission to God, with unfeigned lips, with holiness, with humility, yet with boldness; with importunity, with a desire to be heard and answered. The time for prayer is night and day, without ceasing, everywhere: the things prayed for,—spiritual and temporal blessings, and mercy and grace to help in time of need. Vain repetition and long prayers are condemned, and it would be well to copy as nearly as possible the comprehensive brevity of that model prayer which Jesus taught his disciples.

Prayer may be offered in bitterness of heart, in agony and despair; but unless accompanied by the above qualifications will be of no avail. The prayers of those shall be unheeded who ask amiss, who live in sin, who offer unworthy service, who forsake and reject God, who are wavering, proud, hypocrites, self-righteous, blood-shedders, and persecutors of the saints. Witness Saul, who, deserted of God, had recourse to unlawful means to know his bloody fate. —1 Sam. 28: 15.—When certain of the elders of Israel came to inquire of the Lord—"Then came the word of the Lord unto me, saying, Son of man, speak unto the elders of Israel, and say unto them, thus saith the Lord God: Are ye come to inquire of me? As I live, saith the Lord God, I will not be inquired of by you."—Ezek. 20: 3. This fearful state of reprobation was brought about by frequent rebellion, idolatry and pollution. Again, hear the dreadful denunciations hurled at those who awoke the ire of the Incarnate: "But woe unto you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayers: therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation."—Matt. 23: 13. We shall leave this class and turn to the pleasing review of some of the many instances where the righteous prayer received a gracious answer.

We shall begin with Abraham, the friend of God. When the covenant was renewed which promised him innumerable seed, not through the bond-woman's son, but through Isaac, the patriarch, with a heart yearning over the dark-skinned offspring of the alien, said unto God, "Oh that Ishmael might live before thee!" His answer was, "And as for Ishmael, I have heard thee: behold I have blessed him, and will make him fruitful, and will multiply him exceedingly; twelve princes shall he beget, and I will make him a great nation."—Gen. 17: 18, 20.

When Lot, almost thrust out of the doomed Sodom, was commanded to fly to the mountains for refuge from the fiery tempest which gathered black above the devoted city, he pleaded that he might be permitted to enter Zoar, as he feared evil should come on him in the wilderness. And his prayer was heard for the sake of Abraham, and the little city was spared.—Gen. 19: 19. Even the prayer of Abraham's servant, whom he had sent among his kindred to choose a wife for the beloved Isaac, was heard when he proposed a sign by which the damsel most fitted for his master's son should appear.—Gen. 24: 15—17.

The perseverance of Jacob was rewarded when he wrestled all night to obtain a blessing, when he came out of the struggle victorious, though limping, with the august title of Israel, or Prince of God.—Gen. 32: 24—30.

The cries of the children of Israel in their grievous bondage moved the Lord to effect their liberation. "Now God heard their groaning, and God remembered his covenant with Abraham, with Isaac and Jacob. And God looked upon the children of Israel, and God had respect unto them." Ex. 2: 23—25. The prayers of Moses saved them from the pursuing Egyptians, from the fiery serpents and the flames.

The fainting Samson cried for water, and the blood-stained jaw-bone which had done such fearful execution upon the Philistines was cleft, and he quenched his thirst in the stream that ran therefrom.—Jud. 15: 18, 19. The pious Hannah acknowledged the gift of a son in answer to prayer; (1 Sam. 1: 27); and this same child, Samuel, afterwards was heard of God when he sacrificed and prayed in behalf of Israel.—1 Sam. 7: 9.

Solomon asked and received wisdom (1 Kings 3: 9, 12), although he fell away through strange women and idolatry. Elijah's prayer wrung from the scorching heavens the rain which slaked the cracked and gaping earth, parched by the drouth of forty-two long, weary months.—1 Kings 18: 41—45. Elisha brought back to life, through prayer, a little child.—2 Kings 4: 33—35. The hosts of the Assyrians perished because of the prayer of Hezekiah.—2 Kings 19. Job, David, Jeremiah, Daniel, Jonah, all are examples of the hearing and answering of prayer.

Blind Bartimeus' vociferous and importunate cries procured for him the blessings of sight. The dying thief on the cross had mercy shown him at his last moments, and received a promise of admission into the kingdom of Christ. Upon the day of Pentecost the prayers of the assembled apostles brought down a perfect whirlwind of the Holy Spirit. Peter was liberated by an angel from his chains at the supplication of the church to God. When Paul and Silas sang and prayed, their prison was shaken to its foundation, which brought the jailor to his knees.

Many more instances might be quoted as witnesses that God heareth the prayers of his servants both before and since the days of the apostles; and I shall draw this article to a close by relating one which happened in my day.

My father was accompanying a Methodist minister one evening to his church, where there had been a revival going on for several weeks. This preacher was one, who in his younger days had battled nobly in his Divine Master's cause, receiving many blows and indignities, the scars of which he carried to his grave. The minister, although more than seventy, was straight as an arrow; and the two, being enveloped in cloaks and wearing caps, bore somewhat of a military appearance. As they passed over a wide common which was occupied for a pleasure ground, a woman, very gaily dressed, taking them for officers, accosted them and asked them where they were going?

"To hear our fortunes told," replied old Mr. T——.

"Will you take me with you?" inquired the girl.

"With great pleasure," replied the preacher, offering her his arm, which she took and walked along with the gentlemen for a few rods, when becoming alarmed by their silence she stopped, and withdrawing her hand inquired earnestly,

"Where are you going?"

"To a prayer-meeting," replied my father rather sternly, doubtless to get rid of her, as he did not approve of being in such company.

"Oh! then," said she, "I have not time to go to-night; but," she continued with a laugh, "you can put in a good word for me when you get there."

"I can do it now," said the preacher solemnly, as he uncovered his head. "Perhaps the Lord will hear me in your behalf."

"Perhaps so," replied the poor girl in jest. "You had better try."

Without another word the preacher knelt upon the ground beside the young woman, who began to tremble, and made as she would have fled, but seemed rooted to the spot. Mr. T., clasping his hands together, exclaimed, "O! thou God of infinite mercy, for thy dear Son's sake, bring back this wanderer, pluck this poor lamb from the jaws of the wolf,—convert and save her soul!" From the lips of this poor Magdalene came forth a cry, as if a sword had pierced her very heart. She fell sobbing to the earth, and her cries of agony brought a number of persons around her. A cab was procured which conveyed her to the house of the preacher, and after a long night's wrestling in prayer, the sun arose and shone upon the head of a pardoned sinner.

This woman, so miraculously saved, is now, for aught I know to the contrary, matron of the Magdalene Asylum in B——.

The Rich Man and Lazarus.

BY J. HOWELL.

No 3

TEXT—"The rich man also died, and was buried; and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom."—Lk. 16: 22, 23.

What, then, does the word "hades" in Lk. 16: 23, Rev. 20: 13, 14, signify? We will notice Rev. 20: 13, 14 first. The whole of these texts read; "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hades (hell) delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works. And death and hades (hell) were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death." Death and hell are here evidently personified. There are then three terms, the sea, death and hades, which are said to retain the dead till judgment. "Nekros," denoting "the dead, without life," and used in Matt. 11: 5, "the dead are raised up." Matt. 22. 31.—"But as touching the resurrection of the dead," etc. See 1 Thess. 4. 16. "Nekroi," dead, is the term employed to express the state of man, yea, "every man," in the sea, death, and hades, without the least exception, or giving those in one place any locality or preference over another.

If now it is assumed that the party in hades is not dead, by what principle shall we justify the statement in the text, which positively declares that both death and hades delivered up the DEAD which were IN them; and that the dead thus delivered up were judged, EVERY man according to their works?

Again. The sea and death hold the dead as well as hades. Do the words, sea and death, denote places of separate spirits? If so, then separate spirits in the sea and death are dead; for the sea and death cannot deliver up that which they have not in possession, and what they have in possession is dead; therefore we inquire, does the sea and death take the dead bodies, and the separate spirits go to hades? "And death and hades delivered up the dead which were IN them." Both of these hold the dead IN them, and if hades is the place of disembodied spirits, in hades they are dead.

Thus affirms the positive declaration of inspired truth, in direct opposition to heathenism. Can the sea, death and hades deliver up man, or a separate spirit, in any other condition than that in which they hold them? The sea, death or hades, has no inherent power to confer life upon what it receives, and retains dead. Then unless called from death to life by another power, those who are in them must remain dead. Observe this closely.

Again, hades being a general term, of course it embraces all the apartments supposed to belong to the place or state defined by it. Josephus in his work defines three places. See Whiston's Joseph. p. 601, Art. Hades. One for good spirits, the other for bad ones, and the third a place into which none have as yet been cast; but he says, that it is for the wicked, and "it is prepared for a day afore-determined by God, in which one righteous sentence shall deservedly be passed upon all men; when the unjust . . . shall be adjudged to everlasting punishment," etc. "These are now indeed confined in hades, but not in the same places wherein the unjust are confined." Indeed he points out four apartments. "One for the just. One for the unjust. One dreadful place for those who are now confined in hades, but not in the same place wherein the unjust are confined;" which must of course be a fourth place. These are all, however, bounded by the term hades. Observe Josephus' account embraced in the following points:

1. "Hades is a place in the world not regularly finished."

2. "It is a subterranean region." Does not tell us how he knows it is.

3. "In this region the light does not shine." Must be very dark.

4. "This region is allotted as a place of custody for souls."

5. "Angels are appointed as guardians to them, who distribute to them temporary punishments, agreeable to every one's behavior and manners."

6. "There is a certain place set apart as a lake of unquenchable fire, whereunto we suppose no one hath hitherto been cast."

7. "It is prepared for a day afore-determined by God;" (day of judgment.)

8. "When the unjust . . . shall be adjudged to this everlasting punishment."

9. "These are now indeed confined in hades, but not in the same place wherein the unjust are confined."

10. "There is one descent in this region."

11. "At whose gate we believe there stands an archangel with a host."

12. "Which gate, when those pass through that are conducted by the angels appointed over souls they do not go the same way."

13. "The just are guided to the right."

14. "Are led with the hymns, sung by the angels appointed over that place, unto a region of light." No. 3 says that "in this region the light does not shine," i. e., in hades. Where have they gone then? Where? See Nos. 1, 2, 3.

15. "In which the just have lived from the beginning of the world." Cannot be hades.

16. "Enjoying prospects of the good things they see." They must be pleasant views.

17. "With them there is no place of toil; no burning heat, no piercing cold, nor any briars there."

18. "The countenances of the fathers and of the just, which they see, always smile upon them."

19. "They wait for the rest and eternal new life in heaven, which is to succeed this region." Where is the proof that they will ever go to heaven?

20. "This place we call the bosom of Abraham."

21. "But as to the unjust they are dragged by force to the left hand by the angels allotted for punishment, no longer going with a good will, but as prisoners driven by violence." Does this look like God's dealings?

22. "To whom are sent angels appointed over them to reproach them, and threaten them with their terrible looks, and to thrust them still downwards." Does this look like God's dealings? They are tantalized.

23. "Now these angels that are set over these souls DRAG them into the neighborhood of hell itself; who, when they are hard by it, continually hear the noise of it, and do not stand clear of the hot vapor itself." Something like Mr. Benson's description of hell. Also Spurgeon.

24. "But when they have a near view of this spectacle, as of a terrible and exceeding great prospect of fire, they are struck with a fearful expectation of future judgment."—Indeed, all this before judgment!

25. "And in effect punished thereby."—Before the judgment.

26. "Not only so, but where they see the place [or choir] of the fathers and of the just, even hereby are they punished. A new penalty."

27. "For a chaos deep and large is fixed between them; insomuch that a just man that hath compassion upon them cannot be admitted, nor can one that is unjust, if he were bold enough to attempt it, pass over it."

28. "This is the discourse concerning hades, wherein the souls of all men are confined, until a proper season which God hath determined, when he will make a resurrection of all men from the dead." Was there ever invented a more perfect piece of fiction, and that would more effectually bring into discredit the character of God, than the above?

I certainly do not desire that man's credulity, who can drink this down as the place of disembodied conscious spirits. Again I remark, that all this, as contradictory, childish and unfavorable in its reflection upon the character and wisdom of God, as it is, is bounded by the term, "HADES." The inspiration of God affirms, that the residents of hades are dead, as are also those of death and the sea. Yes, whatever is in hades is dead.

Please remember two points. First, that pneuma, spirit, is a noun in the neuter gender, and therefore can never be a living, intelligent, conscious entity; and secondly, whatever may be in hades, whether man as we see him, or a spirit of man as supposed, (for it is impossible,) by being IN HADES it is DEAD. What is dead in hades, Rev. 20: 13, is denominated MAN; a term, we repeat it, that is never employed to designate any independent conscious life entity in or of man, or as having left the man when he dies. Therefore let us apply the proof of the meaning of Rev. 20: 13, 14, by comparison with Lk. 16: 23, literally interpreted, and no one, we think, can fail to see that such an interpretation of Lk. 16: 23, positively and plainly contradicts the record of Rev. 20: 13, 14, and makes Jesus divided against himself; hence, if true, by the force of his own logic (Matt. 12: 25, 26,) he must fall. Can we possibly believe that Jesus, in the use of the word "hades," as recorded by Luke, denies Jesus in the use of the word "hades," as recorded by John the revelator? They cannot both be literal statements and literally true, for one is directly opposite to the other. How can we harmonize them? There is only one way. Acknowledge Lk. 16: 19–31 to be a parable, and Rev. 20: 13, 14 a statement of literal facts, and all is reconciled. Ah! yes, well might Dr. Whitby say, "That this (Lk 16. 19–31) is only a parable, and not a real history of what was actually done, is evident: 1. Because we find this very parable in the Gemara Babylonicum, whence it is cited by Mr. Sherringham, in the preface to his Joma. 2. From the circumstances of it, viz., the rich man's lifting up his eyes in hell, and seeing Lazarus in Abraham's bosom, his discourse with Abraham, his complaint of being tormented with flames, and that Lazarus might be sent to cool his tongue; and if all this be confessedly parable, why should the rest, which is the very parable in the Gemara, be accounted history?"—Annot. in loc.

The Gemara here referred to, is a Jewish commentary, called by Mr. Buck in his Theological Dict. p. 577, the Talmud of Babylon. It is the one most valued by the Jews. Dr. Kitto says, that they "place it generally above the inspired law." He says, however, that "the book contains many fabulous, trifling, absurd, and irreverent things.

Observe one or two of the many foolish stories it contains. First, an important question. "Is it right to kill a flea on the Sabbath?" Again read the following: "We were once carried," says a Rabbi, "in a great ship, and the ship went three days and three nights between the two fires of one fish. But perhaps the ship sailed slowly? The Rabbi Dimi says, a rider shot an arrow, and the ship flew faster than the arrow; and yet it took so long time to pass between the two fires of this fish." This is certainly a fish story. But remarks Dr. Kitto, "Several parts of the Talmud, however, form an exception to the foolish and ridiculous passages with which the work abounds."

There is about as much consistency in the above story, as in Josephus' discourse upon "HADES." Both are evidently "fabulous, absurd and irreverent."

For the Crisis.

Awake! Awake!

Oh, heed the warning! There is now no time for sleeping. The Master is expected soon to appear; and are you ready? Are you watching? Are you praying? Do you love the thoughts of his coming? Have you on the whole armor? Are you prepared—fully prepared—to meet your Lord? Reflect, oh, reflect! there is now no time for slumber. His coming draweth nigh, and you must be ready, or sink beneath the Judge's frowns. Yes, Christ is coming to save the faithful, and to punish the wicked; and oh, with what anxious longings does the christian look for his appearing!

Reader, is this the case with you? Do you look for a home in "that great city, the holy Jerusalem?" Then be faithful, watchful, prayerful. Discharge every known duty. Be not discouraged, nor think your Lord "delayeth his coming." Gird on the whole armor, and fight valiantly the battles of the Lord. But a little while and you will be at home. Then sweetly you may sing your sufferings over, and shout the praises of the God of your salvation forever and ever.

Sinner, before I close, I have a word for you. PREPARE TO MEET THY GOD! You are in danger. The Judgment is just before, and you are unprepared. You are on the road that leadeth to destruction; and unless you repent you must soon perish. O why will you die? Will you not come to Christ that you may live? Will you not come now? Now is the accepted time; and will you not embrace it? O come to Christ! Do not delay too long. Better come now. Every moment of delay is one of danger. Remember this, and fly, oh, fly for refuge! Lose no time. An hour's delay may seal your eternal destiny. How solemn the thought, and yet how true! Be warned in time. Come to Christ, and be eternally saved. May God help you so to do. Amen.

Farewell!

How often it is said!
I sit and think, and wonder too, sometime,
How it will seem when in that happier clime,
It never will ring out like funeral chime
Over the dead.

No tears! no tears!
Will there a day come that I shall not weep?
For I bedew my pillow in my sleep.
Yes, yes; thank God! no grief that clime shall keep—
No weary years.

Moral Worth.

BY C. O. CARRE.

Man, in his physical state, depends upon the morals of the public mind, for both civil and religious advancement, while common humanity binds us together with links from the great chain of moral worth. Whether individual attributes are analogous in their nature or not, the same inherent principle of moral goodness, to a limited extent, is implanted imperishably within every human heart; it may be deadened by force of habit, its subterraneous fires may be kept smouldered for indefinite periods, by the latent nature of ungovernable passion, its untold and unknown worth may never become a source of useful, interesting, or religious profit, either to individual society, or public sentiment; but, like the uncut diamond in its native state and roughness, indicates utter worthlessness, and actual inferiority, but let it experience the mysterious system of emerging from the crucible of regeneration, and from the rough casket comes a priceless gem, a genuine specimen of God's benevolence; a perpetual monument of inestimable worth.

History bears on its surface the memory of moral truths, which has cultivated the faculty by which we judge of moral conduct. This, by some, has been called the moral sense, but is generally known by the name of conscience. Like all other faculties, it is, in its power and acuteness, under the influence, to a certain degree, of education and culture. It is both an active and intellectual power. It is intellectual, inasmuch as by it we have our notions of right and wrong, merit and demerit and all moral obligations or sense of duty. It is active, inasmuch as the performance of every duty, of every action receiving approbation, must be more or less influenced by it, or excited by its dictates. Like all powers of the mind, it comes gradually to perfection, and its progress is much influenced by instruction and unrestrained exercise.

Human ingenuity can never devise a more perfect, complete or finished method of exposing moral character, than daily intercourse in moral society. The little child, just emerging from the cell of infantile ignorance into the more spacious chambers of blissful understanding, unhesitatingly shadows forth all the inherent qualities of his moral and intellectual nature; while as years pass beneath the billowy flight of time, a structure, either of inestimable worth, or precarious usefulness, is reared, while the solidity of its foundation can only be determined by its answering the great end for which it was intended.

To say that moral worth in the concrete, is a native vigor of man's character, would be but a reasonable exegesis of his nature; but to say that in the abstract he possesses but a starveling proportion of this intellectual exotic, would be begging the whole question; for the lower caste of the human race cannot see with sufficient perspicuity to fathom abstractions, while the more ingenious proportion would, from a sense of imputed deficiency, awake to hurl their withering contempt at the indefeasible assertion.

When from the hand of the Creator, the infantile mind first feels the workings of those tender springs of action, in obedience to those ethical laws of progression and perpetuity, it grows with its growth, and strengthens with its strength; while on the other hand, the vital principle may remain in a state of complete idiocy; it may appear as fragile as the faintest [illegible] the spider's web; it may appear to moral sense as faint as the dying zephyr; as distant as the far-off planets, and cold as the snows of Valambrosia; but let an affinity of principle flit before its moral sight, it bursts its tethers, flashes from obscurity, and shines forth an unalloyed attribute of its Maker.

The relation that man bears to God, is simply unhesitating obedience. It requires no metaphysical argument to show, that there is nothing in the divine economy, that is inadequate to the necessities of either his moral, or spiritual wants, or that his mental faculties can fail to comprehend. There is no requisition contained in his divine government, that his moral strength is not capable of performing; neither is there the remotest cause why we should fail to accede to its plausible statutes. But some may object to this, on the ground that no moral goodness, however excessive, or however illimitable the moral vision, can prove adequate of comprehending the infinite purpose of the Almighty; but they forget that all his laws are adapted to his subjects' powers and capacities; while, if they were not, his whole administration would be involved in the most inextricable confusion; and the creatures of his care, the noblest work of his hands, would, as a race, eventually be lost in the darkness of eternal night, and be known to him only as the things that were.

Because the blunted sensibilities of finite mind fail to comprehend any real worth in the man who is covered with ignominy and shame; because they have never beheld the shrouded virtue which yet finds a resting place in his soul; because he has never been led by some friendly christian hand out of the slough of vice and folly; the unhallowed title of outcast is prefixed to his name; and he is, without mental reservation, thrust forth as a miserable villain, devoid of honor, his finer sensibilities gone, a stranger to virtue, and stripped of the last expiring spark of moral goodness; and then they exclaim with mournful cadence, that might do honor to Ossian's bards,—"Friend, whence camest thou?"

In a popular journal a few weeks since, a professional writer attempted to form an analogical alliance between moral worth and mental courage. After commenting some time on the power of mind, he says, "Whatever may be the final result of a hard fought battle, the cause justifies the effect, while the dignity of motive, and the nobleness of a sense of right and justice, are but the promptings of a worthy conscience, which invariably results in the justification of the deed, and covers with glory the victor, and makes his death-bed a couch of down."

If you please, roll back the billowy tide of time; unfold the mouldering record of ages: call up from the charnel house of death the illustrious dead, and let the last act that crowned the career of those heroes, determine whether [illegible] and intrepid valor, are but the cowl and cassock for an illustrious name. The haughty Alexander, who wept because there was nothing more for him to conquer but his own insatiate ambition, ingloriously died in a scene of debauchery. The proud Cæsar, who ruled with the iron sceptre of Rome, a conquered world, and dictated laws to vassal kings, died a violent death by the hands of his own countrymen; and the ambitious Napoleon, after having convulsed Europe with the discordant din of his conquering arms, died in lonely exile on the gloomy isle of St. Helena, afar from the scenes of his glory and greatness. Is the indefeasible argument of the amalgamation of these two attributes, to be inferred from such poetry as this? Is collateral evidence to be taken for granted? Is an immortal attribute of God's nature to be embodied with the mutable, inconstant, and wavering principle of self-aggrandizement? Or does a mixture of homogeneous principles constitute the dignity of man?

This moral principle derives its source and sustenance from natural causes. Allowing that man is radically bad, there is no soul so far degenerated, but that when the light of reason bursts on its mental vision, it will shadow forth a spark of God's divine munificence.

To judge of man's worth by the value of their effects, would prove too much; for the conclusion would produce a worthless proverb: The more money the more man; but if we form our conclusions from the effect the money produces on the moral character, it would require no vigorous criticism to determine his real worth. [illegible] this epoch of the world, universal [illegible] become a courted proverb; [illegible] of mankind have learned [illegible] internal causes produce internal [illegible]

The Swiftness of Time.

Swiftly flow, thou falling river,
Like a dream that dies away,
Down to Ocean gliding ever;
Keep thy calm, unruffled way.

Time with such a silent motion
Floats along on wings of air,
To eternity's dark Ocean,
Burying all its treasures there.

Roses bloom, then quickly wither;
Cheeks are bright, then fade and die;
Shapes of light are wafted hither,
Then like visions hurry by.

Quick as clouds at evening driven
O'er the many-colored west,
Years are bearing us to heaven,
Home of happiness and rest.

Home of peace, of joy and pleasure,
There eternally we'll sing;
By the margin of the River,
While the heavenly anthems ring.

Answers to Prayer.

While it is meet and right to discuss points of doctrine in search of truth or vindication of the right, that great essential, prayer, should never be for a moment lost sight of; else we may argue theology, search out mysteries and understand them, preach the speedy coming of the Lord, and yet be foolish with all our wisdom, and pronounced unworthy of admittance at the Marriage Supper of the Lamb. The tender blade just peeping from the earth would as soon grow to full fruition without dew, rain, or sunshine, as religion in the heart without the appliances of frequent prayer and meditation. It is the only avenue of approach to God, and the longer it remains unused, the more difficult is the communication. The sinless Jesus was frequent in his appeals to his Father, when sorrow bowed him down or when he wished to exercise his delegated power for his Father's glory. How often has he withdrawn from the world and betaken himself to the mountain's solitude, and there poured out his soul before Him who never turned a deaf ear to the cry of supplication, when it came up to Him in secret from a bleeding, humble heart.

To make prayer acceptable to God it must come, not merely in well rounded periods, or high-sounding phrases, but in full assurance of faith, with submission to God, with unfeigned lips, with holiness, with humility, yet with boldness; with importunity, with a desire to be heard and answered. The time for prayer is night and day, without ceasing, everywhere: the things prayed for,—spiritual and temporal blessings, and mercy and grace to help in time of need. Vain repetition and long prayers are condemned, and it would be well to copy as nearly as possible the comprehensive brevity of that model prayer which Jesus taught his disciples.

Prayer may be offered in bitterness of heart, in agony and despair; but unless accompanied by the above qualifications will be of no avail. The prayers of those shall be unheeded who ask amiss, who live in sin, who offer unworthy service, who forsake and reject God, who are wavering, proud, hypocrites, self-righteous, blood-shedders, and persecutors of the saints. Witness Saul, who, deserted of God, had recourse to unlawful means to know his bloody fate. —1 Sam. 28: 15.—When certain of the elders of Israel came to inquire of the Lord—"Then came the word of the Lord unto me, saying, Son of man, speak unto the elders of Israel, and say unto them, thus saith the Lord God: Are ye come to inquire of me? As I live, saith the Lord God, I will not be inquired of by you."—Ezek. 20: 3. This fearful state of reprobation was brought about by frequent rebellion, idolatry and pollution. Again, hear the dreadful denunciations hurled at those who awoke the ire of the Incarnate: "But woe unto you, scribes and pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayers: therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation."—Matt. 23: 13. We shall leave this class and turn to the pleasing review of some of the many instances where the righteous prayer received a gracious answer.

We shall begin with Abraham, the friend of God. When the covenant was renewed which promised him innumerable seed, not through the bond-woman's son, but through Isaac, the patriarch, with a heart yearning over the dark-skinned offspring of the alien, said unto God, "Oh that Ishmael might live before thee!" His answer was, "And as for Ishmael, I have heard thee: behold I have blessed him, and will make him fruitful, and will multiply him exceedingly; twelve princes shall he beget, and I will make him a great nation."—Gen. 17: 18, 20.

When Lot, almost thrust out of the doomed Sodom, was commanded to fly to the mountains for refuge from the fiery tempest which gathered black above the devoted city, he pleaded that he might be permitted to enter Zoar, as he feared evil should come on him in the wilderness. And his prayer was heard for the sake of Abraham, and the little city was spared.—Gen. 19: 19. Even the prayer of Abraham's servant, whom he had sent among his kindred to choose a wife for the beloved Isaac, was heard when he proposed a sign by which the damsel most fitted for his master's son should appear.—Gen. 24: 15—17.

The perseverance of Jacob was rewarded when he wrestled all night to obtain a blessing, when he came out of the struggle victorious, though limping, with the august title of Israel, or Prince of God.—Gen. 32: 24—30.

The cries of the children of Israel in their grievous bondage moved the Lord to effect their liberation. "Now God heard their groaning, and God remembered his covenant with Abraham, with Isaac and Jacob. And God looked upon the children of Israel, and God had respect unto them." Ex. 2: 23—25. The prayers of Moses saved them from the pursuing Egyptians, from the fiery serpents and the flames.

The fainting Samson cried for water, and the blood-stained jaw-bone which had done such fearful execution upon the Philistines was cleft, and he quenched his thirst in the stream that ran therefrom.—Jud. 15: 18, 19. The pious Hannah acknowledged the gift of a son in answer to prayer; (1 Sam. 1: 27); and this same child, Samuel, afterwards was heard of God when he sacrificed and prayed in behalf of Israel.—1 Sam. 7: 9.

Solomon asked and received wisdom (1 Kings 3: 9, 12), although he fell away through strange women and idolatry. Elijah's prayer wrung from the scorching heavens the rain which slaked the cracked and gaping earth, parched by the drouth of forty-two long, weary months.—1 Kings 18: 41—45. Elisha brought back to life, through prayer, a little child.—2 Kings 4: 33—35. The hosts of the Assyrians perished because of the prayer of Hezekiah.—2 Kings 19. Job, David, Jeremiah, Daniel, Jonah, all are examples of the hearing and answering of prayer.

Blind Bartimeus' vociferous and importunate cries procured for him the blessings of sight. The dying thief on the cross had mercy shown him at his last moments, and received a promise of admission into the kingdom of Christ. Upon the day of Pentecost the prayers of the assembled apostles brought down a perfect whirlwind of the Holy Spirit. Peter was liberated by an angel from his chains at the supplication of the church to God. When Paul and Silas sang and prayed, their prison was shaken to its foundation, which brought the jailor to his knees.

Many more instances might be quoted as witnesses that God heareth the prayers of his servants both before and since the days of the apostles; and I shall draw this article to a close by relating one which happened in my day.

My father was accompanying a Methodist minister one evening to his church, where there had been a revival going on for several weeks. This preacher was one, who in his younger days had battled nobly in his Divine Master's cause, receiving many blows and indignities, the scars of which he carried to his grave. The minister, although more than seventy, was straight as an arrow; and the two, being enveloped in cloaks and wearing caps, bore somewhat of a military appearance. As they passed over a wide common which was occupied for a pleasure ground, a woman, very gaily dressed, taking them for officers, accosted them and asked them where they were going?

"To hear our fortunes told," replied old Mr. T——.

"Will you take me with you?" inquired the girl.

"With great pleasure," replied the preacher, offering her his arm, which she took and walked along with the gentlemen for a few rods, when becoming alarmed by their silence she stopped, and withdrawing her hand inquired earnestly,

"Where are you going?"

"To a prayer-meeting," replied my father rather sternly, doubtless to get rid of her, as he did not approve of being in such company.

"Oh! then," said she, "I have not time to go to-night; but," she continued with a laugh, "you can put in a good word for me when you get there."

"I can do it now," said the preacher solemnly, as he uncovered his head. "Perhaps the Lord will hear me in your behalf."

"Perhaps so," replied the poor girl in jest. "You had better try."

Without another word the preacher knelt upon the ground beside the young woman, who began to tremble, and made as she would have fled, but seemed rooted to the spot. Mr. T., clasping his hands together, exclaimed, "O! thou God of infinite mercy, for thy dear Son's sake, bring back this wanderer, pluck this poor lamb from the jaws of the wolf,—convert and save her soul!" From the lips of this poor Magdalene came forth a cry, as if a sword had pierced her very heart. She fell sobbing to the earth, and her cries of agony brought a number of persons around her. A cab was procured which conveyed her to the house of the preacher, and after a long night's wrestling in prayer, the sun arose and shone upon the head of a pardoned sinner.

This woman, so miraculously saved, is now, for aught I know to the contrary, matron of the Magdalene Asylum in B——.

The Rich Man and Lazarus.

BY J. HOWELL.

No. 3.

TEXT.—"The rich man also died, and was buried; and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom."—Lk. 16: 22, 23.

What, then, does the word "hades" in Lk. 16: 23, Rev. 20: 13, 14, signify? We will notice Rev. 20: 13, 14 first. The whole of these texts read; "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hades (hell) delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works. And death and hades (hell) were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death." Death and hell are here evidently personified. There are then three terms, the sea, death and hades, which are said to retain the dead till judgment. "Nekros," denoting "the dead, without life," and used in Matt. 11: 5, "the dead are raised up." Matt. 22: 31.—"But as touching the resurrection of the dead," etc. See 1 Thess. 4: 16. "Nekroi," dead, is the term employed to express the state of man, yea, "every man," in the sea, death, and hades, without the least exception, or giving those in one place any locality or preference over another.

If now it is assumed that the party in hades is not dead, by what principle shall we justify the statement in the text, which positively declares that both death and hades delivered up the DEAD which were IN them; and that the dead thus delivered up were judged, EVERY man according to their works?

Again. The sea and death hold the dead as well as hades. Do the words, sea and death, denote places of separate spirits? If so, then separate spirits in the sea and death are dead; for the sea and death cannot deliver up that which they have not in possession, and what they have in possession is dead; therefore we inquire, does the sea and death take the dead bodies, and the separate spirits go to hades? "And death and hades delivered up the dead which were IN them." Both of these hold the dead IN them, and if hades is the place of disembodied spirits, in hades they are dead.

Thus affirms the positive declaration of inspired truth, in direct opposition to heathenism. Can the sea, death and hades deliver up man, or a separate spirit, in any other condition than that in which they hold them? The sea, death or hades, has no inherent power to confer life upon what it receives, and retains dead. Then unless called from death to life by another power, those who are in them must remain dead. Observe this closely.

Again, hades being a general term, of course it embraces all the apartments supposed to belong to the place or state defined by it. Josephus in his work defines three places. See Whiston's Joseph. p. 601, Art. Hades. One for good spirits, the other for bad ones, and the third a place into which none have as yet been cast; but he says, that it is for the wicked, and "it is prepared for a day afore-determined by God, in which one righteous sentence shall deservedly be passed upon all men, when the unjust . . . shall be adjudged to everlasting punishment," etc. "These are now indeed confined in hades, but not in the same places wherein the unjust are confined." Indeed he points out four apartments. "One for the just. One for the unjust. One dreadful place for those who are now confined in hades, but not in the same place wherein the unjust are confined;" which must of course be a fourth place. These are all, however, bounded by the term hades. Observe Josephus' account embraced in the following points:

1. "Hades is a place in the world not regularly finished."

2. "It is a subterranean region." Does not tell us how he knows it is.

3. "In this region the light does not shine." Must be very dark.

4. "This region is allotted as a place of custody for souls."

5. "Angels are appointed as guardians to them, who distribute to them temporary punishments, agreeable to every one's behavior and manners."

6. "There is a certain place set apart as a lake of unquenchable fire, whereunto we suppose no one hath hitherto been cast."

7. "It is prepared for a day afore-determined by God;" (day of judgment.)

8. "When the unjust . . . shall be adjudged to this everlasting punishment."

9. "These are now indeed confined in hades, but not in the same place wherein the unjust are confined."

10. "There is one descent in this region."

11. "At whose gate we believe there stands an archangel with a host."

12. "Which gate, when those pass through that are conducted by the angels appointed over souls they do not go the same way."

13. "The just are guided to the right."

14. "Are led with the hymns, sung by the angels appointed over that place, unto a region of light." No. 3 says that "in this region the light does not shine," i. e., in hades. Where have they gone then? Where? See Nos. 1, 2, 3.

15. "In which the just have lived from the beginning of the world." Cannot be hades.

16. "Enjoying prospects of the good things they see." They must be pleasant views.

17. "With them there is no place of toil; no burning heat, no piercing cold, nor any briars there."

18. "The countenances of the fathers and of the just, which they see, always smile upon them."

19. "They wait for the rest and eternal new life in heaven, which is to succeed this region." Where is the proof that they will ever go to heaven?

20. "This place we call the bosom of Abraham."

21. "But as to the unjust they are dragged by force to the left hand by the angels allotted for punishment, no longer going with a good will, but as prisoners driven by violence." Does this look like God's dealings?

22. "To whom are sent angels appointed over them to reproach them, and threaten them with their terrible looks, and to thrust them still downwards." Does this look like God's dealings? They are tantalized.

23. "Now these angels that are set over these souls DRAG them into the neighborhood of hell itself; who, when they are hard by it, continually hear the noise of it, and do not stand clear of the hot vapor itself." Something like Mr. Benson's description of hell. Also Spurgeon.

24. "But when they have a near view of this spectacle, as of a terrible and exceeding great prospect of fire, they are struck with a fearful expectation of future judgment."—Indeed, all this before judgment!

25. "And in effect punished thereby."—Before the judgment.

26. "Not only so, but where they see the place [or choir] of the fathers and of the just, even hereby are they punished. A new penalty.

27. "For a chaos deep and large is fixed between them; insomuch that a just man that hath compassion upon them cannot be admitted, nor can one that is unjust, if he were bold enough to attempt it, pass over it."

28. "This is the discourse concerning hades, wherein the souls of all men are confined until a proper season which God hath determined, when he will make a resurrection of all men from the dead." Was there ever invented a more perfect piece of fiction, and that would more effectually bring into discredit the character of God, than the above?

I certainly do not desire that man's credulity, who can drink this down as the place of disembodied conscious spirits. Again I remark, that all this, as contradictory, childish and unfavorable in its reflection upon the character and wisdom of God, as it is, is bounded by the term, "HADES." The inspiration of God affirms, that the residents of hades are dead, as are also those of death and the sea. Yea, whatever is in hades is dead.

Please remember two points. First, that pneuma, spirit, is a noun in the neuter gender, and therefore can never be a living, intelligent, conscious entity; and secondly, whatever may be in hades, whether man as we see him, or a spirit of man as supposed, (for it is impossible,) by being IN HADES it is DEAD. What is dead in hades, Rev. 20: 13, is denominated MAN; a term, we repeat it, that is never employed to designate any independent conscious life entity in or of man, or as having left the man when he dies. Therefore let us apply the proof of the meaning of Rev. 20: 13, 14, by comparison with Lk. 16: 23, literally interpreted, and no one, we think, can fail to see that such an interpretation of Lk. 16: 23, positively and plainly contradicts the record of Rev. 20: 13, 14, and makes Jesus divided against himself; hence, if true, by the force of his own logic (Matt. 12: 25, 26,) he must fall. Can we possibly believe that Jesus, in the use of the word "hades," as recorded by Luke, denies Jesus in the use of the word "hades," as recorded by John the revelator? They cannot both be literal statements and literally true, for one is directly opposite to the other. How can we harmonize them? There is only one way. Acknowledge Lk. 16: 19—31 to be a parable, and Rev. 20: 13, 14 a statement of literal facts, and all is reconciled. Ah! yes; well might Dr. Whitby say, "That this (Lk. 16: 19—31) is only a parable, and not a real history of what was actually done, is evident: 1. Because we find this very parable in the Gemara Babylonicum, whence it is cited by Mr. Sherringham, in the preface to his Joma. 2. From the circumstances of it, viz., the rich man's lifting up his eyes in hell, and seeing Lazarus in Abraham's bosom, his discourse with Abraham, his complaint of being tormented with flames, and that Lazarus might be sent to cool his tongue; and if all this be confessedly parable, why should the rest, which is the very parable in the Gemara, be accounted history?"—Annot. in loc.

The Gemara here referred to, is a Jewish commentary, called by Mr. Buck in his Theological Dict. p. 577, the Talmud of Babylon. It is the one most valued by the Jews. Dr. Kitto says, that they "place it generally above the inspired law." He says, however, that "the book contains many fabulous, trifling, absurd, and irreverent things.

Observe one or two of the many foolish stories it contains. First, an important question. "Is it right to kill a flea on the Sabbath?" Again read the following: "We were once carried," says a Rabbi, "in a great ship, and the ship went three days and three nights between the two fins of one fish. But perhaps the ship sailed slowly? The Rabbi Dimi says, a rider shot an arrow, and the ship flew faster than the arrow; and yet it took so long time to pass between the two fins of this fish." This is certainly a fish story. But remarks Dr. Kitto, "Several parts of the Talmud, however, form an exception to the foolish and ridiculous passages with which the work abounds."

There is about as much consistency in the above story, as in Josephus' discourse upon "HADES." Both are evidently "fabulous, absurd and irreverent."

For the Crisis.

Awake! Awake!

Oh, heed the warning! There is now no time for sleeping. The Master is expected soon to appear; and are you ready? Are you watching? Are you praying? Do you love the thoughts of his coming? Have you on the whole armor? Are you prepared—fully prepared—to meet your Lord? Reflect, oh, reflect! there is now no time for slumber. His coming draweth nigh, and you must be ready, or sink beneath the Judge's frowns. Yes, Christ is coming to save the faithful, and to punish the wicked; and oh, with what anxious longings does the christian look for his appearing!

Reader, is this the case with you? Do you look for a home in "that great city, the holy Jerusalem?" Then be faithful, watchful, prayerful. Discharge every known duty. Be not discouraged, nor think your Lord "delayeth his coming." Gird on the whole armor, and fight valiantly the battles of the Lord. But a little while and you will be at home. Then sweetly you may sing your sufferings over, and shout the praises of the God of your salvation forever and ever.

Sinner, before I close, I have a word for you. PREPARE TO MEET THY GOD! You are in danger. The Judgment is just before, and you are unprepared. You are on the road that leadeth to destruction; and unless you repent you must soon perish. O why will you die? Will you not come to Christ that you may live? Will you not come now? Now is the accepted time; and will you not embrace it? O come to Christ! Do not delay too long. Better come now. Every moment of delay is one of danger. Remember this, and fly, oh, fly for refuge! Lose no time. An hour's delay may seal your eternal destiny. How solemn the thought, and yet how true! Be warned in time. Come to Christ, and be eternally saved. May God help you so to do. Amen.

Farewell!

How often it is said!
I sit and think, and wonder too, sometime,
How it will seem when in that happier clime,
It never will ring out like funeral chime
Over the dead.

No tears! no tears!
Will there a day come that I shall not weep?
For I bedew my pillow in my sleep.
Yes, yes; thank God! no grief that clime shall keep—
No weary years.

Moral Worth.

BY C. G. CARRE.

Man, in his physical state, depends upon the morals of the public mind, for both civil and religious advancement, while common humanity binds us together with links from the great chain of moral worth. Whether individual attributes are analogous in their nature or not, the same inherent principle of moral goodness, to a limited extent, is implanted imperishably within every human heart; it may be deadened by force of habit; its subterraneous fires may be kept smouldered for indefinite periods, by the latent nature of ungovernable passion; its untold and unknown worth may never become a source of useful, interesting, or religious profit, either to individual society, or public sentiment; but, like the uncut diamond in its native state and roughness, indicates utter worthlessness, and actual inferiority; but let it experience the mysterious system of emerging from the crucible of regeneration, and from the rough casket comes a priceless gem, a genuine specimen of God's benevolence; a perpetual monument of inestimable worth.

History bears on its surface the memory of moral truths, which has cultivated the faculty by which we judge of moral conduct. This, by some, has been called the moral sense, but is generally known by the name of conscience. Like all other faculties, it is, in its power and acuteness, under the influence, to a certain degree, of education and culture. It is both an active and intellectual power. It is intellectual, inasmuch as by it we have our notions of right and wrong, merit and demerit and all moral obligations or sense of duty. It is active, inasmuch as the performance of every duty, of every action receiving approbation, must be more or less influenced by it, or excited by its dictates. Like all powers of the mind, it comes gradually to perfection, and its progress is much influenced by instruction and unrestrained exercise.

Human ingenuity can never devise a more perfect, complete or finished method of exposing moral character, than daily intercourse in moral society. The little child, just emerging from the cell of infantile ignorance into the more spacious chambers of blissful understanding, unhesitatingly shadows forth all the inherent qualities of his moral and intellectual nature; while as years pass beneath the billowy flight of time, a structure, either of inestimable worth, or precarious usefulness, is reared, while the solidity of its foundation can only be determined by its answering the great end for which it was intended.

To say that moral worth in the concrete, is a native vigor of man's character, would be but a reasonable exegesis of his nature; but to say that in the abstract he possesses but a starveling proportion of this intellectual exotic, would be begging the whole question; for the lower caste of the human race cannot see with sufficient perspicuity to fathom abstractions, while the more ingenious proportion would, from a sense of imputed deficiency, awake to hurl their withering contempt at the indefeasible assertion.

When from the hand of the Creator, the infantile mind first feels the workings of those tender springs of action, in obedience to those ethical laws of propagation and perpetuity, it grows with its growth, and strengthens with its strength; while on the other hand, the vital principle may remain in a state of complete lethargy; it may appear as fragile as the faintest woof spun in the spider's web; it may appear to moral sense as faint as the dying zephyr; as distant as the far-off planets, and cold as the snows of Valambrosia; but let an affinity of principle flit before its moral sight, it bursts its tethers, flashes from obscurity, and shines forth an unalloyed attribute of its Maker.

The relation that man bears to God, is simply unhesitating obedience. It requires no metaphysical argument to show, that there is nothing in the divine economy, that is inadequate to the necessities of either his moral, or spiritual wants, or that his mental faculties can fail to comprehend. There is no requisition contained in his divine government, that his moral strength is not capable of performing; neither is there the remotest cause why we should fail to accede to its plausible statutes. But some may object to this, on the ground that no moral goodness, however excessive, or however illimitable the moral vision, can prove adequate of comprehending the infinite purpose of the Almighty; but they forget that all his laws are adapted to his subjects' powers and capacities; while, if they were not, his whole administration would be involved in the most inextricable confusion; and the creatures of his care, the noblest work of his hands, would, as a race, eventually be lost in the darkness of eternal night, and be known to him only as the things that were.

Because the blunted sensibilities of finite mind fail to comprehend any real worth in the man who is covered with ignominy and shame; because they have never beheld the shrouded virtue which yet finds a resting place in his soul; because he has never been led by some friendly christian hand out of the slough of vice and folly; the unhallowed title of outcast is prefixed to his name; and he is, without mental reservation, thrust forth as a miserable villain, devoid of honor, his finer sensibilities gone, a stranger to virtue, and stripped of the last expiring spark of moral goodness; and then they exclaim with mournful cadence, that might do honor to Ossian's bards,—"Friend, whence camest thou?"

In a popular journal a few weeks since, a professional writer attempted to form an analogical alliance between moral worth and mental courage. After commenting some time on the power of mind, he says, "Whatever may be the final result of a hard fought battle, the cause justifies the effect, while the dignity of motive, and the nobleness of a sense of right and justice, are but the promptings of a worthy conscience, which invariably results in the justification of the deed, and covers with glory the victor, and makes his death-bed a couch of down."

If you please, roll back the billowy tide of time; unfold the mouldering record of ages; call up from the charnel house of death the illustrious dead, and let the last act that crowned the career of those heroes, determine whether ambition and intrepid valor, are but the cowl and cassock for an illustrious name. The haughty Alexander, who wept because there was nothing more for him to conquer but his own insatiate ambition, ingloriously died in a scene of debauchery. The proud Caesar, who ruled with the iron sceptre of Rome, a conquered world, and dictated laws to vassal kings, died a violent death by the hands of his own countrymen; and the ambitious Napoleon, after having convulsed Europe with the discordant din of his conquering arms, died in lonely exile on the gloomy isle of St. Helena, afar from the scenes of his glory and greatness. Is the indefeasible argument of the amalgamation of these two attributes, to be inferred from such poetry as this? Is collateral evidence to be taken for granted? Is an immortal attribute of God's nature to be embodied with the mutable, inconstant, and wavering principle of self-aggrandizement? Or does a mixture of homogeneous principles constitute the dignity of man?

This moral principle derives its source and sustenance from natural causes. Allowing that man is radically bad, there is no soul so far degenerated, but that when the light of reason bursts on its mental vision, it will shadow forth a spark of God's divine magnificence.

To judge of man's worth by the value of their effects, would prove too much; for the conclusion would produce a veritable proverb: The more money the more man; but if we form our conclusions from the effect the money produces on the moral character, it would require no rigorous criticism to determine his real worth. But in this epoch of the world, universal truth has become a courted proverb; while a class of mankind have learned to think that external causes produce internal effects.

yard-stick more honorable than the anvil? Is he who eats bread more honorable than he who makes it? Or is he that is created more honorable than the creator? And so we might multiply difficulties in the common theory of human condition; and still there are those who, being dissatisfied with their present condition, constantly make themselves miserable in aiming at what they suppose more respectable business.

Does the title of official position characterize nobleness of manhood, or true greatness? If not, then, whence cometh this perpetual war-waging of public opinion, and the barbarous, illegitimate title of high sounding aristocracy? But common humanity finds itself at fault, when sober reflection refers them to the pristine state of their illustrious ancestors, and to the still more momentous fact, that beggars lie by the side of kings.

The result of man's efforts to reach a distinguished point in worldly ambition, does not depend so much on his own personal, untiring exertion, as on the unfavorable circumstances under which he labors. The application of unimpaired genius may go far towards removing the barrier between him and the coveted goal; yet the remorseless tide of unmerited envy, unceasingly rolls its murmuring waves around him, and frequently some seething surge of scurrilous rebuke dislodges him from his position, and on its bosom is carried far back into the vortex of disregarded worth, to struggle amid life's severe and unapplauded tasks.

The value of the moral character becomes a theme more noble and interesting, as the mind endeavors to analyze the proportionable parts that are analogous to the benignant, wise, and divine Being, who so wonderfully and systematically sustains his moral laws. If man has a mission to fulfill in this present state of probation, it becomes him to rear a structure of character, which will not only prove adequate to the fulfilling of the duty in a manner calculated to requite all conscientious scruples; but which is absolutely necessary to sustain him in its performance.

Whatever may be man's social ties, and however cogent his reasons for adhering to secular matters, though they may be the labyrinth through which he struggles to engrave his name on the highest scroll in the temple of fame; yet there is a more imperative claim on his attention: The fulfilling of those higher duties, which are but the culture of those germs of innate worth, which, as years pass beneath the wave of oblivion, grow and expand, until they culminate in the light of immortality. To be, is not to live: to live truly, is to bring eternity into life; and while man lives,

> "Let him not violate kind Nature's laws;
> But own man born to live as well as die.

The incentives that man has to avail himself of those prerequisites, which are so necessary to perfect his preparation previous to entering upon the duties of another state of being, are not only perfectly legitimate in their nature, but are illimitable in their scope and tendency. Human greatness is but another name for moral worth, for the same motives that constitute the one, embody the tenets of the other; and while simple obedience to their fundamental principles is observed, we are led along the stream of time, utterly inattentive to the inferior concerns of secular life, until the ambrosial viewe of God's beneficence shelters us from the withering blasts of human depravity.

Such, then, are some of the necessary qualities that constitute the sublime worth of the human mind, and which form the germ, and culminate the impulses which urge man to labor with untiring zeal for a higher life, a nobler existence perpetuated by God's priceless boon.—immortality. But let the crowning of moral life be the purchase of a passport that will procure admittance between the gates of that radiant city, when the nations of the earth shall entreat her favor; when the Light himself shall be revealed from heaven, and when one unclouded tide of glory shall overflow her courts.

For the Crisis.

Perseverance in Piety.

"But he that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved."

Perseverance is that quality which carries into effect our preconceived opinions and established principles, enabling us to accomplish our purposes of virtue and holiness. For however decided our position with regard to any object we admire or espouse, except we persevere in that decision it will effect little or nothing. Hence it is, that many who for a while gladly receive the truths of the gospel, and perhaps feel decided in the cause of Christ, endure so short a period of time, because, unhappily for them, perseverance was not an ingredient in their theorem; and by and by when temptation, with its usual train of consequences, assail them, they are offended, and begin to loiter by the way, to linger in the race; and soon their strength being exhausted they "cast away their confidence, which hath great recompense of reward."

This is the history of very many individuals who have started in the strait and narrow way, with a bright and joyous hope of finally reaching the haven of eternal rest; but when called to endure the many trials and severe conflicts attendant on a life of pilgrimage, they make shipwreck of their faith, and are again turned to the beggarly elements of the world. Christians are said to be the light of the world, the salt of the earth, or, in other words, the means through which mankind are to be reconciled to Christ. Our light may be of the most brilliant kind, illuminating the darkness of surrounding society, yet if it does not continue to illuminate, if it cease to shine or become extinguished, what effect can its former brilliancy have upon the benighted minds of the perishing around us! None, save to prejudice their minds, blunt their sensibilities, and close up the avenues of their hearts against the approach of the truth. And all this because of a want of perseverance on the part of professed votaries in a cause of such worth and magnitude.

The perseverance of the true christian must be such, that life is not to be regarded when the blessed Redeemer demands the sacrifice. Take for instance the example of the apostle Paul, when the prophet Agabus made known the bonds and imprisonment that awaited him at Jerusalem; mark the difference in the effect of the announcement upon him and his brethren. Such was their affection for him, that for a moment they lost sight of the glorious cause for which the apostle was willing to hazard his life, and by their affectionate entreaties tried to prevent his going to meet the doom that awaited him. But listen to his answer: "What mean ye to weep and break my heart? for I am ready not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem, for the name of the Lord Jesus." Such was the effect of the truth believed and the truth felt in the heart by primitive christians; and such it should be now, if we would hope with them to endure to the end and be saved.

The sacred pages abound in many striking and brilliant examples of holy perseverance in the cause of Christ, even when their fidelity to that cause resulted in the forfeit of their lives. Among the most conspicuous, the account of the martyr Stephen stands out in bold relief. Behold him in the midst of the Jewish councils surrounded by those who were thirsting for his blood, and with holy boldness driving home to their consciences the fact that they were the betrayers and murderers of the Lord Jesus; and though the truth, instead of subduing their hearts, made them gnash with their teeth and seek to destroy his innocent life, yet while submitting to their fury, and suffering their abuse, he received the Divine approbation,—the very heavens opened to his astonished vision, and he being full of the Holy Spirit "saw the glory of God, and Jesus standing on the right hand of God."

It is not to be presumed, however, that such distinguishing consequences will close up the career of every faithful follower of the Lamb; this in the providence of God is not necessary; but the same love in kind, the same faith in purity, that characterized Paul and Stephen, will be required, according to their capacity, of every true believer of the Lord Jesus. But in this time-serving age, it is greatly to be feared that with very many who profess to be the followers of Christ, if their lives were required as a sacrifice, they would abjure their faith, and walk the ways of God no more. O, may the faithful warning, that only those who endure to the end can be saved, awaken us to greater diligence in the divine life,—not only to the anise and cummin of the law, but also to the weightier matters of justice and mercy; and let us see to it that while we try to love God supremely, we also love our fellow beings fervently, respecting the rights of all; in short, doing unto others as we would they should do unto us, that when the day of reckoning shall come, we may hear the welcome plaudit of the Master, "Inasmuch as ye have done it (showed mercy) unto the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me; enter into the joy of thy Lord." For the Crisis.

Reasons for my Hope.

For some weeks past I have read almost nothing beyond special investigations, and have too much neglected Bro. Hastings' new book. But I have read it carefully through, and am more than rewarded. The first sixty pages are full of scriptural argument, and in the best style of argument—that which comforts, edifies, and preaches, while it reasons. Then come forty pages crowded with interesting and valuable information respecting the Bible, its translation at various periods, and the publication of it to half the world. Then we are told of the opening of the world—India, China, Africa, Japan—to be converted? Alas! there is not purity nor peace enough in Christendom that it should answer, Yes. The signs of the age invite us to preach and to "send" others to preach, not as if there were to be an easy time of it, but as if good and solid preaching were sadly needed to nerve men for conflict. That old discourse is the true text; "Repent, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

There will ever be pangs and truth throes in every great change. And the "regeneration" by which earth is converted into a paradise, can never be a gentle process. It is made easy only by loving Christ more than all things earthly. Let all read the book. C. F. H.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, APRIL 4, 1860.

Relief for the Distressed;

OR,

How we got out of "Doubting Castle."

No. 15.

We have examined sixteen Divisions and forty-four apartments in "Doubting Castle," in search for proof that man has a spirit that is conscious when he is dead; and thus far, all the learned D.D.'s in the "Castle" have been unable to bring one "thus saith the Lord" to sustain their positions. Their assertions have been abundant, but the proof to sustain them has been wanting. This is just as we expected, before we entered upon a careful examination of this matter. But we will proceed, and see what will next be presented.

DIVISION seventeen. Here we find the following: "Why is God called the God of the 'spirits of all men?'" (45)

45. He is not thus called. Here is another example of the way in which "Doubting Castle" theology is sustained; i. e., by misquoting Scripture. The passage reads, "all flesh;" not "all men;" showing that all the living creatures upon the earth have (ruach) spirits as truly as men. Hence we read in Gen. 7: 15, where we have an account of the animals that went into the ark; "And they went in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all flesh, wherein is the (ruach) breath of life." Hence, if Num. 16: 22 proves that man has a spirit that will be conscious when he is dead, it proves the same of every animal. But there is no such intimation in the text. It simply affirms the great truth so clearly stated elsewhere, that God gave "the breath (or spirit) of life" to every beast of the field, to every fowl of the air, to every creeping thing, and to every man; therefore, our Creator is "the God of the spirits of all flesh."

DIVISION eighteen. Here Bro. Burnham found the following:

"Why is it written in the Greek Testament, that 'God is not the God of the dead but of the living, FOR ALL ARE ALIVE UNTO HIM?'" (46)

46. When we were confined in "Doubting Castle," we recollect that the Faculty made great use of this passage, and usually succeeded in producing a doubt. Their success consisted in keeping the context away from the mind of the honest-hearted pilgrims, thus preventing the light of truth from shining on this text.

The passage under consideration is a part of the conversation of the Savior with the Sadducees, who denied the resurrection of the dead. They believed the writings of Moses; but had not noticed that he taught the doctrine of the resurrection, and for this reason, they denied it. Therefore, the Savior refers at once to Moses; knowing, if the Sadducees find the doctrine in his writings, they will be silenced. He says, "Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living; for all live unto him."—Lk. 20: 37-38.

The phrase, "Now that the dead are raised," reads in the Syriac,—"will arise;" in Coverdale's translation,—"rise again;" in Wickliffe's,—"And that dead men rise again;" in Scarlett's,—"Now that the dead are to be raised;" in Tyndale's, Cranmer's and the Geneva,—"And that the dead shall rise again." When shall they rise again? Jesus answers,—"This is the will of him that sent me, that every one that seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; and I will raise him up at the last day."—John 6: 40. In harmony with this, Paul says, "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first."—1 Thess. 4: 17.

Observe, Christ is endeavoring to prove the resurrection of the dead to the Sadducees, by quoting from Moses what we have already introduced. There is not one word about soul or spirit in the whole account. But let us look at "Doubting Castle" theology for a few moments on this point. According to that, God is not the God of the bodies of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; because their bodies are dead; and the Lord is not the God of the dead; hence their bodies will never be raised; and as their souls have never died, it is impossible to raise them, because resurrection applies only to the dead; consequently, the Savior's attempt to prove that the dead will rise has proved a total failure; and Sadduceeism has triumphed, if the theology of "Doubting Castle" be true; and we must give up the hope of the resurrection of the dead, notwithstanding it is so often affirmed in the Bible.

It is asked, "Why is it written . . . that God is not the God of the dead but of the living,'?" etc.—Because it is true. When it is said, "All are alive unto him," it is quite different from being alive with him. To God, the time, that the dead sleep is as a moment gone. Says David, "A thousand years in thy sight, are but as yesterday when it is past." In speaking on the same subject, Paul says; "As it is written . . . God . . . quickeneth the dead and calleth things that be not as though they were."—Rom. 4: 17.

When God said to Moses, "I am the God of . . . Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob," those patriarchs were dead according to the Bible record; but looking to their resurrection, the Lord says I am their God; or as expressed by Matthew, "As touching the resurrection of the DEAD, . . . I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob." This makes the whole matter plain; and Sadduceeism is overthrown by the writings of Moses, instead of being established, as it would be if we adopted "Doubting Castle" theology.

Thus we see that this boasted argument, so often used by the Faculty of Error, becomes a powerful weapon against them; and plainly shows that God is not the author of the doctrine of the conscious state of the spirit, when the man is dead; but "as touching the resurrection of the dead," he says, I am their God.

We will now pass into the nineteenth Division. Here Bro. B. found the following:—

"Why, in all the teachings of the Son of God on earth, did he never directly utter a word, that we have an account of, against the doctrine of the separate existence of the Spirit?" (47)

47. This point was so plainly guarded in the Old Testament, it would seem that nothing further was needed for those who adhered to the Bible. In opposition to heathen mythology and "Doubting Castle" theology, the Holy Spirit had moved holy men to write: (Sheol,) "The grave cannot praise thee; death cannot celebrate thee . . . the living, the living, he shall praise thee, as I do this day."—Isa. 38. "The living know that they shall die; but the dead know not any thing."—Eccl. 9: 5. "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."—Ps. 146: 4. The Savior and apostles spoke in perfect harmony with the passages just quoted. In John 11: 14, we read; "Then said Jesus unto them plainly, Lazarus is DEAD." When Paul was speaking of those who were witnesses of Christ's resurrection, he says; "He was seen of above five hundred brethren at once; of whom the greater part remain unto this present time, but some are fallen asleep."—1 Cor. 15: 6. Again, he says; "I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep."—1 Thess. 4: 13. He then goes on to tell us, they will rise from their sleep when Christ comes. In keeping with these Scriptures, Job says; "Man lieth down, and riseth not; till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep."—Job 14: 12.

Many similar passages might be quoted, showing that the whole man dies, and remains in the sleep of death till "the resurrection at the last day."

We might ask, why the Savior did not say something against the transmigration of souls? This was a doctrine believed by many Jews and Gentiles, when Jesus was upon earth; yet, we do not find one word on the subject, in opposition to this error. If they would not hear "Moses and the prophets," they would not "be persuaded though one rose from the dead." But we found the Savior gave a special warning against the Pharisaical doctrine of the separate, conscious existence of the spirit, when he said, "Beware of the . . . doctrine of the Pharisees." [See Div. 15, Sect. 40, 41, 42.] There are three points of doctrine mentioned, as held by the Pharisees. (1.) The resurrection of the dead; (2.) a belief in angels; (3.) the conscious state of the spirit after death. When the Savior said, "beware" of their doctrine, he could not have referred to the first two points; for he and the apostles taught both; but we have no record that they, or any other Bible writer, ever taught the third—the conscious state of the spirit. This was a heathen doctrine adopted by the Pharisees, hence Jesus says, "beware"! Let it echo—"BEWARE"!!!

Pilgrim Notes.

Friday, March 16th, in company with Bro. and Sr. Howell, we took a reluctant leave of our dear Bro. and Sr. Sherman and family, at Castleton, Vt. We have become very much attached to the kind friends at C. and hope to see them again soon, and unite in the praises of Him who blessed us with his holy presence during our very interesting meetings. Though absent in body, we are present with them in spirit, beholding their joy in the Lord. Holy Father, we pray thee keep that flock from yielding to the power of the adversary.

Friday evening, we had a delightful meeting with the saints at Albany. They have been prospered in spiritual things during the winter past. Bro. Rufus Wendell entertained us in his happy family. He is about to give himself up to the ministry of the word of truth, with a bright prospect of being very useful and successful in the vineyard of the Lord. Thank the Lord for sending faithful laborers into the harvest at this time, when they are so much needed. Let us pray for more. The churches should take special pains to sustain and encourage those who are young in the ministry. Stay up their hands; give them every possible aid. Stand by them in their trials, and cheer them on their way. Let them feel that they have your sympathies, prayers, watch care, and they will labor much more effectively. If it is their duty to leave all, and receive the frowns of a wicked world and a cold, formal church; it is the duty of those to whom they minister to sustain them. Let it be well done, that the stewardship be not taken away when the Master comes. These are times of great peril; backsliding times, when the love of many is waxing cold. Let all "beware of covetousness."

Saturday evening, we spent at Brewster's Station, on the Harlem R. R. Although we did not arrive till the middle of the afternoon, Bro. Way circulated a notice, and we had a goodly number out to a meeting at Gannung's Hall. We felt assured there was an open door for doing good. The people were anxious to hear more.

Lord's day, 18th, Bro. Way accompanied us to Danbury, Ct. Our meetings at D. continued eight days, amidst the most discouraging circumstances, caused in part by great political excitement. Two large political mass meetings were held during our stay; but the truth gained many friends, and the little church was much strengthened. Danbury is known as a very hard place, but we expect to see some good fruit resulting from our late meetings. We were glad to find our Brn. there keeping clear from all the political evils. As one remarked to us, politics and christianity are antagonistic to each other. We hope all our brethren will save their votes for the King of kings. Let us not try to prop up the wicked systems of government that are at enmity with Christ, and are about to be dashed in pieces by the coming King.

Notwithstanding all the discouraging circumstances attending our meetings at D., we closed with bright omens, while a large, intelligent, and attentive audience listened to the evidences of Christ's speedy coming. At the close of the meeting, we sat down to the table of the Lord in a happy circle of his followers, to commemorate the sufferings and love of our dearest friend, Jesus. We parted, firmly resolved, by the Lord's help, to meet in the everlasting kingdom.

Monday, 26th, we left D., and called a short time at Bridgeport, where we met some of the Lord's children, and received and accepted a challenge from Dr. Lyon to discuss Spiritualism. At B. we took the cars for West Winsted, stopping at Burrville to see our dear mother, who will be eighty-seven, if she lives till the 14th of Aug. next. She loves the same blessed hope her son Miles is endeavoring to preach to a dying world—a hope that fully sustains her in her declining years and makes old age pleasant and cheerful. O Lord, let thy peace continue to rest on my aged mother, who so kindly bore with the waywardness of her son, when wandering from thee; and make her last days her best.

She is now unable to see any thing with one eye, but is very contented in the Lord. As we were about leaving, she presented us with a pair of nice stockings, saying, "Miles, this is the last pair I shall ever be able to give you, for I can't see to knit any more."

"Truth's Triumph."

We gratify our readers with further quotations from the old book, witten in 1676, by Thomas Tomkins, entitled "Truth's Triumph." He goes on to say:

"Another evidence of the soul's mortality is this; whenever it is that man dies, it is said that he is dead, or resteth from his labors, or gone into the dust, or fallen asleep; but it is nowhere said that his soul is ascended into any sensible joy, light, or glory; or descended into any sensible pain, darkness, or shame, whilst his body is in the grave. No sober man ever taught that the soul was immortal in a mortal body. We have heard of the patience of Job; if any be as willing to hear of his faith, they may find his doctrine of the soul's mortality was plainly delivered in his book . . . .

Again, another evidence of the soul's mortality is this; in that when any do depart this life, it is said they die or fall asleep; it doth not say their souls go to heaven. It is said that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are dead, and fallen asleep; it is said that Stephen fell asleep; there is not a word of their souls going to heaven. When Lazarus died, it is said he fell asleep, and that he was dead; therefore when Christ came to raise him to life, he looked down into the grave, and with a loud voice, said Lazarus, come forth. Observe this well, you that are enlightened by this commission of the Spirit, and you may see that the Lord called him not from heaven, but from the grave. So likewise, when Christ was risen from the dead, it is said that many of the saints, which slept in the grave, arose also, and appeared unto many. It is not said that their souls came from heaven, but that they arose from the grave, which was done by virtue of Christ's resurrection."

When speaking of Paul's effort to comfort the Thessalonian brethren, who were called to mourn the loss of loved ones, Mr. Tomkins says:

"Now the apostle doth not comfort them by telling them that their souls were gone to heaven, but he comforteth them in the doctrine of a resurrection . . . . And we may be certain that Paul knew very well that they were not in heaven."

When referring to Paul's declaration, that those "are perished" who have "fallen asleep in Christ," if the dead rise not; and that their faith was vain, and his preaching also; Mr. Tomkins remarks:

"If the souls of those saints had been in heaven, then could not their faith, nor the apostle's preaching, have been vain; for what great matter were it if their bodies did lie and rot in the grave, so that their souls could be happy? Paul knew well that there could be no happiness without a resurrection, and this was Daniel's knowledge and faith likewise. . . . . Therefore it was that Daniel was bid to go his way also into the dust until the end, for till then he should not appear, but then he, with the rest, should arise and stand in his lot with the just to receive the reward of eternal life. And thus it is clear to all such as are by lot appointed to eternal life, that the soul and body lie down together in death, and not that one goes to heaven, and the other to the grave, bidding adieu to each other till the last day."

"Earthly Gods."

The following is extracted from the Springfield Republican. It reminds us of what Satan said to Eve—"Ye shall not surely die, . . . ye shall be as gods."

"At the banquet given to the three legislatures at Cincinnati, Rev. Mr. Hoyt made the opening prayer, in which reverence for his audience seemed to struggle with reverence for the Almighty, and he used such language as this: 'O God, Thou God of heaven, hear these earthly gods in these their prayers, for the sake of Thy loyal Son.'"

WELLCOME'S TREATISE ON MATT. 24TH AND 25TH CHAPTERS.—The third edition of this work is now out and ready for orders. We will give a notice from Bro. Taylor in regard to it:—

"Permit me to say a word in favor of this work, and that is, in brief, to express my conviction that it is the best work on Matt. 24th and 25th chapters I have ever seen. It is truthful, stirring, perspicuous, adapted to convince, and not lengthy. Just the kind of book needed for the times. I hope our brethren will circulate it widely."

Correction.

I have stated in the Crisis that ten or twelve ministers read the Expositor. Elder Marsh now informs his readers that the number is about one hundred. I am happy to note the correction, and would add that the mistake occurred from being misinformed. D. T. TAYLOR.

For the Crisis.

Two Kinds of Eternal Life.

We maintain that the phrase "eternal life," however it may imply the eternal happiness of the saved, still contains the literal sense of "living for ever." And one proof of this literal sense is the fact that the terms "life," "live," and "live for ever," are constantly applied by orthodox writers to the nature of the soul and to the destiny of the lost. The received fearful doctrine cannot dispense with these terms, though in the Scriptures they are consecrated to describe the destiny of the righteous.

We claim that "living for ever" and "eternal life" naturally mean the same thing; and we accordingly find the phrase "eternal life" sometimes applied to the destiny of the lost, though with the qualifying remark that their life is "unworthy of the name." Well, if the Scriptures call things by their right names, why should not we call the same things by the same names? It will be an immense gain when christians will agree not to say that the lost "live forever"—either with or without the marks of quotation. When the lost are said thus to live, the marks of quotation are commonly omitted, to indicate that the phrase is not used in the metaphorical sense which they are supposed to bear in the Scriptures. Thus the difference between infinite happiness and unending misery is denoted by the presence or absence of those marks, thus: "To "live forever" is eternal joy. To live for ever—may be endless woe.

This distinction was made in a remarkable instance by Origen, in the use of the phrase "eternal life," and before the marks of quotation were invented. The passage is preserved in a Latin translation by Rufinus, where we get no benefit of the article. We will accordingly translate without denoting the double sense of the phrase by either of those methods. Commenting upon Rom. 2: 7, he says:

"The life is that eternal life of which the Savior speaks when he says, This is eternal life, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent, (John 17: 3.) By which he shows that the substance of eternal life consists in the knowledge of God and of Jesus Christ." "I do not think it was without reason that he added to eternal life, In Christ Jesus our Lord; but because, peradventure, he would have it known that eternal life alone is one thing, and eternal life in Christ Jesus is another thing. For even they who rise to shame and everlasting contempt shall have eternal life indeed, yet not in Christ Jesus, but in shame and everlasting contempt. But the righteous, who rise to eternal life, shall have eternal life in Christ Jesus." (In Epist. ad Rom. l. 2, § 5; l. 6, § 6.)

The passage is important as showing that the phrase in question so far retained its literal sense in Origen's day (A.D. 225) that he need not add "unworthy of the name," when he applied it to the case of the lost. Just as even now we hear of the immortality of the lost with no such qualification. Yet Origen found more of metaphor and allegory in the Scriptures than any other writer. If he found it convenient to use that phrase which describes all that Christ gives, in a literal sense, how must the "common people" have understood it, especially when Christ spoke of only one kind of eternal life? 1866–68.

Dr. Cumming's last work, the "Great Tribulation," in which he fixes on the above date for the coming of Christ, is attracting much attention on both sides of the Atlantic. In England no less than seven editions have been printed. In this country the publishers refer to it as a work "which has already awakened a prodigious excitement throughout the religious community." The Church Witness calls it "a remarkable work free from fanaticism," and calls marked attention to it. The New York Observer seems to admire the Dr., and speaks interestedly of his views. The Due West (S. C.) Telescope seems to endorse the views of the book and proclaim the Lord at hand. The Religious Herald of Hartford calls attention to the year 1867, as a noted and remarkable epoch. In Great Britain the nobility are interested in the study of prophecy. Viscount Mandeville, George, Duke of Manchester, Henry Drummond, M. P., and Lord Carlisle, have written numerous prophetical works, and the last two named, substantially hold the view of Dr. Cumming.

Mr. Shimeall's late work, Our Bible Chronology, is being widely read. It is subscribe to by very many D.D.'s, clergymen and others around New York city, though he takes the same view with Dr. Cumming in relation to the termination of all the numbers and coming of the Lord in the circle of 1866–68.

Dr. C. has sent Mr. S. a note of approval of his work and will write a Preface for the English edition soon to be issued. The chronological deductions of these men are sustained by a host of human authorities from the days of Luther till now.

It is to be hoped that all Adventists will be prepared to candidly look into the argument which is relied on by a multitude of others for the coming of the Lord in 1866–68. D. T. T.

For the Crisis.

Go, Work!

"Go into my vineyard and labor, and what is right I will give thee."

Brethren in the ministry, has this Scripture become of no effect? If so, when was it made void? Is not God faithful to perform all he has promised? Did ever one of you go out in the name and strength of the Lord and not receive what was right? Says one, I have been so and so, and received so much. Perhaps you did not humble yourself before the Lord, and ask him to direct you in the way wherein he would have you go. You might not have listened attentively to the whisperings of the Spirit, and therefore misunderstood what the Lord said. There are difficulties, I am aware, where one has so many calls, but if you keep it before the Lord he will direct aright.

I do believe that those to whom the Lord has given his word may know where, when, and what to preach, if they are submissive and humble.

It looks to me as though some of our Advent preachers had ceased, to some extent, to trust in the Lord. Did Jesus promise you ease and plenty, or did he say it is enough that the servant be as his Lord?

That we are nearing the Judgment I have no doubt. The state of the world and church declare it; and who shall be able to stand? Not those who have sought honor one of another, but those who have sought the honor that cometh from God only. Not those who have blindly taken glory to themselves, but those who have given God the glory. Amen. JULIA DODGE.

Be Careful.

Don't scold, brother, now please don't! I know that it is rather trying, but will scolding better it? I fear not. Above all, don't scold in the pulpit. Preaching God's word is too solemn business to mix with human fretting and fuming. Besides, when some of the folks stay away from meeting it is not fair to scold those that come through mud, wet and storm, for the faults of those who stay away. If there is fault, talk it over privately, if possible, or advert to it publicly, if needful, but let it be with kindly gravity, rather than with bitter petulance. Come, brother, do be good and gentle evermore. H. L. H.

For the Crisis.

Time of the End.

BY J. HEMENWAY.

The subject of time is one that interests the student of prophecy and lovers of truth; and all that are prepared for the judgment would rejoice to understand the time, when the Lord is coming, to reward the faithful with eternal life.

That time is revealed in the Scriptures, no one will dispute that is acquainted with the prophecies of Daniel and John; but to understand that time, we must be able to understand what events in history fill the mould of prophecy, from which the prophetic numbers commence. Upon this point there is great liability of mistake, as is proved by the past history of writers and lecturers upon the subject of time. Daniel 12 : 11—13.—"And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days. But go thou thy way till the end be; for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days."

From the foregoing scripture, we can easily understand, that from the time that the abomination of desolation is set up, to the time that Daniel stands in his lot, or is resurrected, is thirteen hundred and thirty-five days (or years); but it is not so easy to understand what constitutes the setting up of the abomination of desolation. We have, undoubtedly, the power symbolized in Dan. 7 : 8, by the horn having "eyes," and "a mouth speaking great things." A horn is explained in verse 24, to be a kingdom; mouth and eyes represent some blasphemous power, supposed to be the catholic church. That all may be true, but it does not give us the particular event that constitutes the setting up of "the abomination of desolation." If the horn having mouth and eyes is the power, then it is rational to conclude, that when the power symbolized by mouth and eyes is incorporated into the kingdom symbolized by the horn, that we have "the abomination of desolation" set up. Daniel 11 : 31.—And arms shall stand on his part, and they shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall take away the daily sacrifice, and they shall place the abomination that maketh desolate." We learn from this quotation, that "the abomination" is to be set up by taking "away the daily sacrifice"; and that it is to be accomplished by the civil power.

Now we come to the question:—When did this event occur? Many different dates have been named in the past, which time has proved to be wrong, and others remain for time to test. Some have fixed upon A. D. 525, as the time when "the abomination of desolation" was set up; and for proof refer to Bower's History of the Popes.

"Bower informs us, History of Popes, Vol. 1, page 325, that Justin, emperor of the east, enacted an edict ordering the Arians to deliver up all their churches to the Catholic Bishops, and the Catholic Bishops to consecrate them anew. After this edict was enacted, the Arians applied to Theodric, the Arian king of Italy, for help. This king sent down an embassy to Constantinople, composed of Pope John, five bishops and four senators, in A. D. 525. The object for which this commission was sent, was to persuade Justin to revoke the above named edict. Bower says, page 326, that 'On his arrival at Constantinople, he was received with the most extraordinary marks of honor, by persons of all conditions and ranks. The nobility and clergy went out to meet him; and he made his entry amidst the loud acclamations of numberless crowds, that flocked from all parts, to see the first Bishop of the Catholic church, who had never before been seen in the east.' He also says that the Patriarch at this time 'Invited the Pope to perform divine service in the great church, together with him. But he would neither accept the invitation, nor even see the Patriarch, till he agreed, not only to yield him the first place, but to seat him on a kind of throne above himself.' We are told that 'The Patriarch indulged him in everything he required, and they celebrated Easter together, with extraordinary pomp and solemnity.'"

I do not see that there is anything in the foregoing testimony, that constitutes a union of state and church. The facts in the case are simply these: Justin, Emperor of the east, a zealous Catholic, issued an edict against the Arians; and Theodric, an Arian in faith, Emperor of Italy, ordered the Pope, who was head of the church of Rome, to go to Constantinople and persuade Justin to revoke the above named edict. Did the Pope accomplish the object of his mission? The same historian says that he did:—hence, the matter rests just where it was before the edict was issued, so far as a union is concerned. Again, the following from Bower is thought to indicate the time of union.

"The Emperor, says the anonymous writer above quoted, met him, among the rest, and could not have honored St. Peter himself more than he did him. (Mark the language, Author.) The Bibliothecarian adds that Justin bowed down to the very ground before the Vicar of the blessed Peter, and, coveting the honor of being crowned by him, received at his hands the imperial diadem."—Bower Vol. 1, p. 326.

By this act, it is thought, the Emperor acknowledged the supremacy of the church of Rome, and that the church possessed the power to confer secular authority on even Emperors of Rome.

What is more natural than for a zealous catholic to honor the Pope, while he believes that the Pope is infallible, and that he has the power to send him to eternal torments? It is but a natural result of his faith. But the point seems to be the last clause of the quotation by Bower from the Bibliothecarian;—that Justin received from the hands of the Pope the "Imperial diadem." This is thought to consummate the union of state and church.

In the first place, it should be observed, Bower says, that it is not probable that the statement of the Bibliothecarian is true. Then again, suppose the Emperor, in his blind superstition and adoration of the Pope's person, craved the honor of having the crown placed upon his head? Does it prove a union of state and church? If so, it seems strange that historians do not give us some articles of agreement between the Emperor and Pope. Bower's doubts in relation to this supposed act, and the silence of historians in relation to any articles, as a basis of the union between state and church, give us good reason to doubt this being the point of time when "The abomination of desolation" was set up. We do not find any event at this time to fulfill the words of the prophet,—"They shall . . . . take away the daily sacrifice"; and this was to be done by the civil power of Rome, in order to set up the abomination of desolation. If, as some say, the taking away of the daily sacrifice was Justin's edict against the Arians, we answer, that edict was revoked; consequently we do not find events here that fill the mould of prophecy.

The time of the end is supposed by some to be 1290 years from the time that the abomination of desolation is set up. This view is based upon the following scripture: Dan. 7 : 25, 26.—"And he shall speak great words against the most High, and shall wear out the saints of the most High, and think to change times and laws: and they shall be given into his hand, until a time and times and the dividing of time. But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end." Dan. 11 : 33—35.—"And they that understand among the people shall instruct many; yet they shall fall by the sword, and by flame, by captivity, and by spoil many days. Now, when they shall fall, they shall be holpen with a little help: but many shall cleave to them with flatteries. And some of them of understanding shall fall, to try them, and to purge, and to make them white, even to the time of the end: because it is yet for a time appointed." Dan. 12 : 11.—"And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days (years). If the abomination of desolation was set up in A. D. 525, then it follows, of course, that 1290 years from that point the time of the end would commence, which would be in 1815; and forty-five years added to that would make up the 1335 years in 1860, when Daniel would stand in his lot. But the evidence, from which the numbers are started, is not sufficient to prove the point, hence I am left in doubt as to the time of the end; consequently cannot believe that the days will end in 1860. Some other points I will notice in my next, in relation to the events that mark "the time of the end."

(To be concluded.)

Correspondence.

From a Methodist Preacher.

[He wishes his name withheld.]

Bro. Grant:—I feel myself alone. Were it not for the Crisis, I would certainly feel lonely indeed; but through its columns, I hear from the brethren scattered abroad, and it makes my heart rejoice.

Trusting you as a brother, I will now make a confession. I stand identified with the M. E. church; but I look for the speedy personal coming of the Savior. I believe when he comes, he will give eternal life to the righteous, and destroy the wicked. Formerly, I have held an official relation in the society to which I belong; but I was silenced because I saw proper to preach the Bible. I am now preparing to sound again the alarm. I feel it to be my duty to do so. Sinners are perishing around me, and I must warn them of their danger. By the help of God I intend to be a faithful minister, so far as I am able. I am poor; but will do what I can. Pray for me.

From J. A. Sober.

Bro. Grant:—Through the grace of God I am endeavoring to "witness to both small and great none other things than Moses and the prophets did say should come." And what have they said should come? Why that Jesus would come; first, to offer atonement on Calvary's cross, in behalf of sinners. Second, rise from the dead and ascend up on high to officiate in his priestly office in the presence of the Father; and third, that he would come again to deliver his waiting ones from death, perils, snares and fears.

He will come the second time without sin, or sin-offering, unto salvation. To whom?—"Unto them that look for Him." Then and there will be realized Hosea's prophetic announcement—"I will redeem them from death: oh death, I will be thy plagues; oh grave, I will be thy destruction." Then the last trump will have sounded, bringing to life those who can and will shout, "oh death, where is thy sting, oh grave, where is thy victory?" The Lord's ever faithful Daniel will then "stand in his lot" to know more of God's wonderful ways, and to fully realize the truthfulness of his inspired words uttered long years ago, that many of the sleepers in the dust are awaking to everlasting life.

I took up my pen to say to the readers of the Crisis that the foregoing are among the truths I am testifying to before the people, persuading them to stand ready to enter into the kingdom of God when it shall appear. And I believe with all my heart the day of glory is near, very near, "nigh, even at the door." The day of God's wrath is impending now. The nations of earth are guilty before God and man. Their day of doom is near. It speedeth on. Omens above, beneath, proclaim it almost due. In prophetic calendar it is just about due. All agree here. But some think the millennium is coming before Christ. But Christ will be here first; then the reign of glory will come in order, scriptural and rational. What reason have we to expect a long time of peace and glory on earth, this side of the coming of Him whose right it is to reign? Does the present state of the world indicate it? Political aspirations run high now, social relations all out of shape and joint, morals at a low ebb, crime and wickedness in high and low places rapidly on the increase, and, forsooth, the millennium of peace about to dawn!! Does war mean millennium?

Cambria, Mich.

From Sr. H. J. Brown.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—The apostle Paul declares to us that we are to look for Jesus Christ from Heaven, who will change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body. What a blessed promise is this! Our bodies defiled by sin, bearing the marks of the curse, to be changed at the appearing of Christ and fashioned into a body like his own. When he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see Him in his beauty, and be changed into the same image. Carrying about daily a body wearied by toil, wasted by sickness, liable to death at any moment, groaning under the temptations and trials of a sinful humanity, doomed to see our friends bowing under the infirmities of toil and age, and wasting with diseases which we have no power to alleviate,—how do our saddened hearts turn from these sins and sorrows, and long to be clothed with our house which is from Heaven, to the better country where the inhabitants shall no more say, I am sick. I know I shall speak the feeling which arises in the heart of many a weary, care-worn pilgrim in view of these things. Amen, even so come, Lord Jesus, come quickly, and bring the redemption of the body.

Dear sisters, why should we desire to clothe these vile bodies with gold and fine apparel? Why are we more anxious to be adorned with these leaves from Satan's flower garden, than to have the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit? These vile bodies need no outward adorning to commend them to our loving Savior. Let us fear that if he finds them thus adorned we shall fail of having them changed to a body like his. My earnest prayer for the beloved people who are looking for Jesus is, that they may remain a peculiar people, of one heart and mind, bearing the cross, and so be ready to meet him when he comes.

Essex, Ct.

From Bro. L. Reimer.

Bro. Grant:—Please send one of your beloved papers, "The World's Crisis." There is a good deal of inquiring about this "new thing," (and yet as old as the holy Word itself,) and I believe your "World's Crisis" will open the eyes of many who are anxious to know the truth as it is revealed in the blessed Bible. Three or four months ago, I opposed this "new thing" with all my little knowledge of the word of God; but I had to give up my old prejudices, and fall in with the "new thing," as I could not hold on to them any longer. Blessed be God. The Bible begins to be a new book to me and some of my friends, while before I was always shut up in "Doubting Castle."

Philadelphia, March, 1860.

For the Crisis.

Notes by the Way.

Bro. Grant:—After I preached that funeral sermon in Yankee Settlement a number were anxious for me to return. I commenced a meeting the 3d of March and closed on the 11th. I had something to contend with every night, so that I had a small congregation, but on Sunday evening had out a crowd.

On the 14th, preached at Manchester, Delaware Co., Iowa. Stopped with Bro. Edward A Manning, from Andover, Mass. Could not some brother send this Lot, this pilgrim and stranger, the Crisis to cheer him on his journey? If so, send to the above place.

The Macedonian cry, "Come and help us," I hear from the three adjoining states. I mean to fill the calls as fast as I have time and means so to do.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in South Killingly, Ct., of consumption, March 24th, Caroline M. Young, daughter of Jonah S. and Laura Young, aged seventeen years and ten months.

The parents, whose lot it seems to be to follow child after child in quick succession to the grave, penned and gave me the following thoughts:

"Caroline sleepeth! that lovely form, whose feeble knee oft bent submissive to Him who, at his last expiring breath, implored protection. Caroline sleepeth! hushed is that cheerful voice that, ascending high, daily reached the ear of Him who slumbereth not, while divine care and protection is supplicated, and fresh supplies from living streams, to keep revived those hopes, those joys, which live only as they are fed from an endless fountain. She sleeps. Still is the glad accent of praise, that once in glad anthems she delighted to lisp and mingle with those of angelic choristers above. She sleeps—quietly in Jesus sleeps—while with millions who have gone before, she waits the voice of Him who will ere long wake the dead, and gather with angelic harvesters his sleeping ones to himself"

It has not pleased God to give long life to the children of our beloved Brother and Sister Young; but he has given something better, that is Jesus. May God abundant grace bestow, that they may count their frequent afflictions all joy in view of a far more exceeding and eternal harvest of glory.

We improved the occasion, by pointing out some of the bright prospects of the saints of the Most High. H. F. C.

Danielsonville, Ct., March 30th.

Died, in Townsend, Mass., March 19th, 1860, Dea. John Boutell, aged ninety-four.

My father, the subject of this notice, was a remarkable man even in his organism, with a well balanced mind. From his early days he had enjoyed that good hope through grace which at all times gave sweet consolation in Christ, as the only name given under heaven to save lost man. He was a Congregationalist of the olden school, consistent in his christian walk, always making the Bible his rule of faith and practice. And although there might have been an improvement in his theology, he was experimentally and practically a christian, ever believing in a resurrection from the dead.

In his last hours he was cheerful in hope, and fell quietly asleep in Jesus, to be waked by the sounding of the last trump to receive his reward. L. Boutell.

Died, in Springfield, Vt., March 25th, 1860, Bartlett Dammon, aged eighty-three years and two months.

Bro. Dammon, for many years, has been a bold soldier in the cause of God. He once united with the Methodist people, but for some ten or twelve years he has been looking for and loving the glorious appearing of Jesus Christ in the clouds of heaven. Searching the Scriptures has been his delight and practice for years. He expected immortality and eternal life through Jesus Christ, at his appearing and kingdom. He often expressed a strong hope in God, and of a treasure in heaven. Funeral attended by the writer. Addressed a crowded house from the last clause of Prov. 14: 32. S. Cook.

Died, in Hopkinton, N. H., March 11th, 1860, Mrs. Hannah D. Sargent, widow of Dea. Moses Sargent, aged eighty-three years and twenty-eight days.

She was never prostrated by disease until her last sickness, which was merely the natural result of old age. Her eyesight and hearing never failed her. She lived a consistent christian for more than fifty years. I had the privilege of watching by her bedside the last night she lived, and heard from her lips many expressions of praise to her God and Savior, and almost her last were—

> "Thou dear Redeemer, dying Lamb,
> I love to hear of thee;
> No music's like thy charming name,
> Nor half so sweet can be."

John B. Paine.

Died, in Meredith, N. H., March 7th, 1860, of consumption, Bro. John Clark, aged forty-seven years.

The subject of this notice embraced Christ by living faith when about twenty-four years of age, and soon after was baptized and united with the Freewill Baptist Church. He continued a consistent and worthy member until 1842, when the coming of the Lord was preached as presented by the Revelator. Our brother had loved the Lord so well, when the glorious news of the Nobleman's return saluted his ears, it gave him joy; and on examining the evidence, he heartily embraced the doctrine.

Our brother remained firm to the last, believing the Lord had led his people, and would in due time vindicate his cause and deliver his chosen. It is some two years since his health began to decline. The skill of a number of physicians was tried, but all has failed, and our brother has gone down to the grave expecting to sleep until Jesus comes, then to have part in the first resurrection and gain immortality. He leaves a wife and three children to mourn his loss.

The writer attended the funeral. Subject on the occasion was the resurrection of the dead. J. G. Smith.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

(From Liverpool the 17th ult)

ENGLAND.

Some English journals are getting fierce with Napoleon on the Savoy question, which, it is said, will be settled by treaty between France and Sardinia, before the Savoyards are consulted.

Switzerland has sent a protest against the annexation.

It is reported that French troops are under orders for Chambery.

An insurrection in Naples is considered imminent.

LATEST.

The Daily News of the 17th says, that if the statement regarding the mode of ceding Savoy be correct, the event will be more serious in its ultimate military consequences than any since the memorable [illegible] fall of the great Napoleon.

Henceforth, not even the most sanguine will be able to believe in the maintenance of the peace of Europe, and will have to reckon with a power which tramples upon the most sacred rights, and which has cast off respect for everything but material force.

Sooner or later Europe will find itself compelled, in self-defense, to confine this power within the limits of law.

The Herald uses the same language; and the London Post believes, at the present time, the question stands thus:

Sardinia is about to cede Savoy and Nice by treaty to France. France will then consult the population as to whether they choose annexation to France or separate independency.

If they select the latter, then Savoy will be constituted an independent State; if the former, the result will be communicated to the Great Powers.

In case of serious disapproval and opposition on the part of European States, which, however, is not anticipated, then France would probably consent to the establishment of Savoy as an independent State.

What is positive is that France will never consent, under any circumstances, to the retention of what are called the French slopes of the Alps, by Sardinia enlarged, as she will be a power inferior only to Prussia.

The Paris correspondent of the Times learns that a second warning, which immediately precedes excommunication, has been sent to Turin. After a certain interval, the bull of excommunication against Victor Emmanuel will be issued.

Two regiments of dragoons quartered at Lyons received marching orders. They are to proceed to Chambery, the capital of Savoy. A regiment of cuirassiers has left Turin to be ready to enter Tuscany and to proceed to enter Florence as soon as the King of Sardinia accepts the annexation.

Other troops have left their quarters to be ready to enter the Romagna.

Gen. Fanti has just organized the army, into four corps, each to be composed of three divisions, two Piedmontese, and the third of Central Italy.

The Paris correspondent of the Times says an autograph letter from the Emperor Napoleon, couched in an angry style, had reached King Victor Emmanuel. The Emperor invites the King not to accept Tuscany in his own name, notwithstanding the recent test of universal suffrage. He may name a Prince of his own house for Tuscany; and, according to the same report, he is debarred from occupying the Romagna, which may be governed by a Vicar acceptable to the Pope, as the Sardinian government declared in advance its acceptance of the result of voting.

Rome, 16th. This morning a great manifestation took place in favor of the Pope at the Vatican.

Paris, Saturday. The Patrie publishes a letter from Turin, stating that the annexation of Savoy to France has been definitely settled, and also states that the negotiations in regard to Tuscany are in a fair way to a satisfactory conclusion.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times says it is thought that Prince Carignan will be Governor General of Tuscany, unless the Imperial idea of a separate State be carried out. There is great wrath here against the Pope. I am told His Holiness has issued another circular, still stronger than the encyclical letter, on the Romagna affair. A remark is said to have been made in a very high quarter that the Pope would, from the manner in which he is going on, soon make the famous pamphlet "Le Pape et le Congres" a truth. This means that of all his States only Rome would be left to the Pope.

Letters from Rome say that the agitation is so great there as to render it extremely doubtful whether the French army will be able to keep it in subjection much longer.

A second warning to the King of Sardinia from the Pope, which immediately precedes excommunication, is said to have been sent to Turin.

Sardinia.—The Washington correspondent of the New York Times says:

"Interesting dispatches to the Sardinian Legation here announce that it is the fixed determination of Victor Emmanuel, in spite of the opposition of the French Emperor, to receive the Italian States proposing annexation to Sardinia. Another war may be the result."

For the Crisis.

Time of the End.

BY J. HEMENWAY.

The subject of time is one that interests the student of prophecy and lovers of truth; and all that are prepared for the judgment would rejoice to understand the time, when the Lord is coming, to reward the faithful with eternal life.

That time is revealed in the Scriptures, no one will dispute that is acquainted with the prophecies of Daniel and John; but to understand that time, we must be able to understand what events in history fill the mould of prophecy, from which the prophetic numbers commence. Upon this point there is great liability of mistake, as is proved by the past history of writers and lecturers upon the subject of time. Daniel 12: 11—13.—"And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days. But go thou thy way till the end be; for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days."

From the foregoing scripture, we can easily understand, that from the time that the abomination of desolation is set up, to the time that Daniel stands in his lot, or is resurrected, is thirteen hundred and thirty-five days (or years); but it is not so easy to understand what constitutes the setting up of the abomination of desolation. We have, undoubtedly, the power symbolized in Dan. 7: 8, by the horn having "eyes," and "a mouth speaking great things." A horn is explained in verse 24, to be a kingdom; mouth and eyes represent some blasphemous power, supposed to be the catholic church. That all may be true, but it does not give us the particular event that constitutes the setting up of "the abomination of desolation." If the horn having mouth and eyes is the power, then it is rational to conclude, that when the power symbolized by mouth and eyes is incorporated into the kingdom symbolized by the horn, that we have "the abomination of desolation" set up. Daniel 11: 31.—And arms shall stand on his part, and they shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall take away the daily sacrifice, and they shall place the abomination that maketh desolate." We learn from this quotation, that "the abomination" is to be set up by taking "away the daily sacrifice"; and that it is to be accomplished by the civil power.

Now we come to the question:—When did this event occur? Many different dates have been named in the past, which time has proved to be wrong, and others remain for time to test. Some have fixed upon A. D. 525, as the time when "the abomination of desolation" was set up; and for proof refer to Bower's History of the Popes.

"Bower informs us, History of Popes, Vol. 1, page 325, that Justin, emperor of the east, enacted an edict ordering the Arians to deliver up all their churches to the Catholic Bishops, and the Catholic Bishops to consecrate them anew. After this edict was enacted, the Arians applied to Theodric, the Arian king of Italy, for help. This king sent down an embassy to Constantinople, composed of Pope John, five bishops and four senators, in A. D. 525. The object for which this commission was sent, was to persuade Justin to revoke the above named edict. Bower says, page 326, that 'On his arrival at Constantinople, he was received with the most extraordinary marks of honor, by persons of all conditions and ranks. The nobility and clergy went out to meet him; and he made his entry amidst the loud acclamations of numberless crowds, that flocked from all parts, to see the first Bishop of the Catholic church, who had never before been seen in the east.' He also says that the Patriarch at this time 'Invited the Pope to perform divine service in the great church, together with him. But he would neither accept the invitation, nor even see the Patriarch, till he agreed, not only to yield him the first place, but to seat him on a kind of throne above himself.' We are told that 'The Patriarch indulged him in everything he required, and they celebrated Easter together, with extraordinary pomp and solemnity.'"

I do not see that there is anything in the foregoing testimony, that constitutes a union of state and church. The facts in the case are simply these: Justin, Emperor of the east, a zealous Catholic, issued an edict against the Arians; and Theodric, an Arian in faith, Emperor of Italy, ordered the Pope, who was head of the church of Rome, to go to Constantinople and persuade Justin to revoke the above named edict. Did the Pope accomplish the object of his mission? The same historian says that he did:—hence, the matter rests just where it was before the edict was issued, so far as a union is concerned. Again, the following from Bower is thought to indicate the time of union.

"The Emperor, says the anonymous writer above quoted, met him, among the rest, and could not have honored St. Peter himself more than he did him. (Mark the language, Author.) The Bibliothecarian adds that Justin bowed down to the very ground before the Vicar of the blessed Peter, and, coveting the honor of being crowned by him, received at his hands the imperial diadem."—Bower. Vol. 1, p. 326.

By this act, it is thought, the Emperor acknowledged the supremacy of the church of Rome, and that the church possessed the power to confer secular authority on even Emperor of Rome. [illegible]

What is more natural than for a zealous catholic to honor the Pope, while he believes that the Pope is infallible, and that he has the power to send him to eternal torments? It is but a natural result of his faith. But the point seems to be the last clause of the quotation by Bower from the Bibliothecarian;—that Justin received from the hands of the Pope the "Imperial diadem." This is thought to consummate the union of state and church.

In the first place, it should be observed, Bower says, that it is not probable that the statement of the Bibliothecarian is true. Then again, suppose the Emperor, in his blind superstition and adoration of the Pope's person, craved the honor of having the crown placed upon his head? Does it prove a union of state and church? If so, it seems strange that historians do not give us some articles of agreement between the Emperor and Pope. Bower's doubts in relation to this supposed act, and the silence of historians in relation to any articles, as a basis of the union between state and church, give us good reason to doubt this being the point of time when "The abomination of desolation" was set up. We do not find any event at this time to fulfill the words of the prophet,—"They shall . . . . take away the daily sacrifice"; and this was to be done by the civil power of Rome, in order to set up the abomination of desolation. If, as some say, the taking away of the daily sacrifice was Justin's edict against the Arians, we answer, that edict was revoked; consequently we do not find events here that fill the mould of prophecy.

The time of the end is supposed by some to be 1290 years from the time that the abomination of desolation is set up. This view is based upon the following scripture: Dan. 7: 25, 26.—"And he shall speak great words against the most High, and shall wear out the saints of the most High, and think to change times and laws: and they shall be given into his hand, until a time and times and the dividing of time. But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end." Dan. 11: 33—35.—"And they that understand among the people shall instruct many; yet they shall fall by the sword, and by flame, by captivity, and by spoil many days. Now, when they shall fall, they shall be holpen with a little help: but many shall cleave to them with flatteries. And some of them of understanding shall fall, to try them, and to purge, and to make them white, even to the time of the end: because it is yet for a time appointed." Dan. 12: 11.—"And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days (years). If the abomination of desolation was set up in A. D. 525, then it follows, of course, that 1290 years from that point the time of the end would commence, which would be in 1815; and forty-five years added to that would make up the 1335 years in 1860, when Daniel would stand in his lot. But the evidence, from which the numbers are started, is not sufficient to prove the point, hence I am left in doubt as to the time of the end; consequently cannot believe that the days will end in 1860. Some other points I will notice in my next, in relation to the events that mark "the time of the end."

(To be concluded.)

Correspondence.

From a Methodist Preacher.

[He wishes his name withheld.]

BRO. GRANT:—I feel myself alone. Were it not for the Crisis, I would certainly feel lonely indeed; but through its columns, I hear from the brethren scattered abroad, and it makes my heart rejoice.

Trusting you as a brother, I will now make a confession. I stand identified with the M. E. church; but I look for the speedy personal coming of the Savior. I believe when he comes, he will give eternal life to the righteous, and destroy the wicked. Formerly, I have held an official relation in the society to which I belong; but I was silenced because I saw proper to preach the Bible. I am now preparing to sound again the alarm. I feel it to be my duty to do so. Sinners are perishing around me, and I must warn them of their danger. By the help of God I intend to be a faithful minister, so far as I am able. I am poor; but will do what I can. Pray for me.

From J. A. Sober.

BRO. GRANT:—Through the grace of God I am endeavoring to "witness to both small and great none other things than Moses and the prophets did say should come." And what have they said should come? Why that Jesus would come; first, to offer atonement on Calvary's cross, in behalf of sinners. Second, rise from the dead and ascend up on high to officiate in his priestly office in the presence of the Father; and third, that he would come again to deliver his waiting ones from death, perils, snares and fears.

He will come the second time without sin, or sin-offering, unto salvation. To whom?—Unto them that look for Him." Then and there will be realized, Hosea's prophetic announcement,—"I will redeem them from death: oh death, I will be thy plagues; oh grave, I will be thy destruction." Then the last trump will have sounded, bringing to life those who can and will shout, "oh death, where is thy sting, oh grave, where is thy victory?" The Lord's ever faithful Daniel will then "stand in his lot" to know more of God's wonderful ways, and to fully realize the truthfulness of his inspired words uttered long years ago, that many of the sleepers in the dust are awaking to everlasting life.

I took up my pen to say to the readers of the Crisis that the foregoing are among the truths I am testifying to before the people, persuading them to stand ready to enter into the kingdom of God when it shall appear. And I believe with all my heart the day of glory is near, very near, "nigh, even at the door." The day of God's wrath is impending now. The nations of earth are guilty before God and man. Their day of doom is near. It speedeth on. Omens above, beneath, proclaim it almost due. In prophetic calendar it is just about due. All agree here. But some think the millennium is coming before Christ. But Christ will be here first; then the reign of glory will come in order, scriptural and rational. What reason have we to expect a long time of peace and glory on earth, this side of the coming of Him whose right it is to reign? Does the present state of the world indicate it? Political aspirations run high now, social relations all out of shape and joint, morals at a low ebb, crime and wickedness in high and low places rapidly on the increase, and, forsooth, the millennium of peace about to dawn!! Does war mean millennium?

Cambria, Mich.

From Sr. H. J. Brown.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—The apostle Paul declares to us that we are to look for Jesus Christ from Heaven, who will change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body. What a blessed promise is this! Our bodies defiled by sin, bearing the marks of the curse, to be changed at the appearing of Christ and fashioned into a body like his own. When he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see Him in his beauty, and be changed into the same image. Carrying about daily a body wearied by toil, wasted by sickness, liable to death at any moment, groaning under the temptations and trials of a sinful humanity, doomed to see our friends bowing under the infirmities of toil and age, and wasting with diseases which we have no power to alleviate,—how do our saddened hearts turn from these sins and sorrows, and long to be clothed with our house which is from Heaven, to the better country where the inhabitants shall no more say, I am sick. I know I shall speak the feeling which arises in the heart of many a weary, care-worn pilgrim in view of these things. Amen, even so come, Lord Jesus, come quickly, and bring the redemption of the body.

Dear sisters, why should we desire to clothe these vile bodies with gold and fine apparel? Why are we more anxious to be adorned with these leaves from Satan's flower garden, than to have the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit? These vile bodies need no outward adorning to commend them to our loving Savior. Let us fear that if he finds them thus adorned we shall fail of having them changed to a body like his. My earnest prayer for the beloved people who are looking for Jesus is, that they may remain a peculiar people, of one heart and mind, bearing the cross, and so be ready to meet him when he comes.

Essex, Ct.

From Bro. L. Reimer.

BRO. GRANT:—Please send one of your beloved papers, "The World's Crisis." There is a good deal of inquiring about this "new thing," (and yet as old as the holy Word itself,) and I believe your "World's Crisis" will open the eyes of many who are anxious to know the truth as it is revealed in the blessed Bible. Three or four months ago, I opposed this "new thing" with all my little knowledge of the word of God; but I had to give up my old prejudices, and fall in with the "new thing," as I could not hold on to them any longer. Blessed be God. The Bible begins to be a new book to me and some of my friends, while before I was always shut up in "Doubting Castle."

Philadelphia, March, 1860.

For the Crisis.

Notes by the Way.

BRO. GRANT:—After I preached that funeral sermon in Yankee Settlement a number were anxious for me to return. I commenced a meeting the 3d of March and closed on the 11th. I had something to contend with every night, so that I had a small congregation, but on Sunday evening had out a crowd.

On the 14th, preached at Manchester, Delaware Co., Iowa. Stopped with Bro. Edward A Manning, from Andover, Mass. Could not some brother send this Lot, this pilgrim and stranger, the Crisis to cheer him on his journey? If so, send to the above place.

The Macedonian cry, "Come and help us," I hear from the three adjoining states. I mean to fill the calls as fast as I have time and means so to do.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in South Killingly, Ct., of consumption, March 24th, CAROLINE M. YOUNG, daughter of Jonah S. and Laura Young, aged seventeen years and ten months.

The parents, whose lot it seems to be to follow child after child in quick succession to the grave, penned and gave me the following thoughts:

"Caroline sleepeth! that lovely form, whose feeble knee oft bent submissive to Him who, at his last expiring breath, implored protection. Caroline sleepeth! hushed is that cheerful voice that, ascending high, daily reached the ear of Him who slumbereth not, while divine care and protection is supplicated, and fresh supplies from living streams, to keep revived those hopes, those joys, which live only as they are fed from an endless fountain. She sleeps. Still is the glad accent of praise, that once in glad anthems she delighted to lisp and mingle with those of angelic choristers above. She sleeps—quietly in Jesus sleeps—while with millions who have gone before, she waits the voice of Him who will ere long wake the dead, and gather with angelic harvesters his sleeping ones to himself"

It has not pleased God to give long life to the children of our beloved Brother and Sister Young; but he has given something better, that is Jesus. May God abundant grace bestow, that they may count their frequent afflictions all joy in view of a far more exceeding and eternal harvest of glory.

We improved the occasion, by pointing out some of the bright prospects of the saints of the Most High.

Danielsonville, Ct., March 30th.

Died, in Townsend, Mass., March 19th, 1860, DEA. JOHN BOUTELL, aged ninety-four.

My father, the subject of this notice, was a remarkable man even in his organism, with a well balanced mind. From his early days he had enjoyed that good hope through grace which at all times gave sweet consolation in Christ, as the only name given under heaven to save lost man. He was a Congregationalist of the olden school, consistent in his christian walk, always making the Bible his rule of faith and practice. And although there might have been an improvement in his theology, he was experimentally and practically a christian, ever believing in a resurrection from the dead.

In his last hours he was cheerful in hope, and fell quietly asleep in Jesus, to be waked by the sounding of the last trump to receive his reward.

L. BOUTELL.

Died, in Springfield, Vt., March 25th, 1860, BARTLETT DAMMON, aged eighty-three years and two months.

Bro. Dammon, for many years, has been a bold soldier in the cause of God. He once united with the Methodist people, but for some ten or twelve years he has been looking for and loving the glorious appearing of Jesus Christ in the clouds of heaven. Searching the Scriptures has been his delight and practice for years. He expected immortality and eternal life through Jesus Christ, at his appearing and kingdom. He often expressed a strong hope in God, and of a treasure in heaven. Funeral attended by the writer Addressed a crowded house from the last clause of Prov. 14: 32.

S. COOK.

Died, in Hopkinton, N. H., March 11th, 1860, MRS. HANNAH D. SARGENT, widow of Dea. Moses Sargent, aged eighty-three years and twenty-eight days.

She was never prostrated by disease until her last sickness, which was merely the natural result of old age. Her eyesight and hearing never failed her. She lived a consistent christian for more than fifty years. I had the privilege of watching by her bedside the last night she lived, and heard from her lips many expressions of praise to her God and Savior, and almost her last were—

"Thou dear Redeemer, dying Lamb,
I love to hear of thee;
No music's like thy charming name,
Nor half so sweet can be."

JOHN B. PAINE.

Died, in Meredith, N. H., March 7th, 1860, of consumption, Bro. JOHN CLARK, aged forty-seven years.

The subject of this notice embraced Christ by living faith when about twenty-four years of age, and soon after was baptised and united with the Freewill Baptist Church. He continued a consistent and worthy member until 1842, when the coming of the Lord was preached as presented by the Revelator. Our brother had loved the Lord so well, when the glorious news of the Nobleman's return saluted his ears, it gave him joy; and on examining the evidence, he heartily embraced the doctrine.

Our brother remained firm to the last, believing the Lord had led his people, and would in due time vindicate his cause and deliver his chosen. It is some two years since his health began to decline. The skill of a number of physicians was tried, but all has failed, and our brother has gone down to the grave expecting to sleep until Jesus comes, then to have part in the first resurrection and gain immortality. He leaves a wife and three children to mourn his loss.

The writer attended the funeral. Subject on the occasion was the resurrection of the dead.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[From Liverpool the 17th ult]

ENGLAND.

Some English journals are getting fierce with Napoleon on the Savoy question, which, it is said, will be settled by treaty between France and Sardinia, before the Savoyards are consulted.

Switzerland has sent a protest against the annexation.

It is reported that French troops are under orders for Chambery.

An insurrection in Naples is considered imminent.

LATEST.

The Daily News of the 17th says, that if the statement respecting the mode of ceding Savoy be correct, the event will be more serious in its ultimate [illegible] consequences than any which has occurred since the fall of the great Napoleon. [illegible]

Henceforth, not even the most sanguine will be able to believe in the maintenance of the peace of Europe, and will have to reckon with a power which tramples upon the most sacred rights, and which has cast off respect for everything but material force.

Sooner or later Europe will find itself compelled, in self-defense, to confine this power within the limits of law.

The Herald uses the same language; and the London Post believes, at the present time, the question stands thus:

Sardinia is about to cede Savoy and Nice by treaty to France. France will then consult the population as to whether they choose annexation to France or separate independency.

If they select the latter, then Savoy will be constituted an independent State; if the former, the result will be communicated to the Great Powers.

In case of serious disapproval and opposition on the part of European States, which, however, is not anticipated, then France would probably consent to the establishment of Savoy as an independent State

What is positive is that France will never consent, under any circumstances, to the retention of what are called the French slopes of the Alps, by Sardinia enlarged, as she will be a power inferior only to Prussia.

The Paris correspondent of the Times learns that a second warning, which immediately precedes excommunication, has been sent to Turin. After a certain interval, the bull of excommunication against Victor Emmanuel will be issued.

Two regiments of dragoons quartered at Lyons received marching orders. They are to proceed to Chambery, the capital of Savoy. A regiment of cuirassiers has left Turin to be ready to enter Tuscany and to proceed to enter Florence as soon as the King of Sardinia accepts the annexation.

Other troops have left their quarters to be ready to enter the Romagna.

Gen. Fanti has just organized the army, into four corps, each to be composed of three divisions, two Piedmontese, and the third of Central Italy.

The Paris correspondent of the Times says an autograph letter from the Emperor Napoleon, couched in an angry style, had reached King Victor Emmanuel. The Emperor invites the King not to accept Tuscany in his own name, notwithstanding the recent test of universal suffrage. He may name a Prince of his own house for Tuscany; and, according to the same report, he is debarred from occupying the Romagna, which may be governed by a Vicar acceptable to the Pope, as the Sardinian government declared in advance its acceptance of the result of voting.

ROME, 16th. This morning a great manifestation took place in favor of the Pope at the Vatican.

PARIS, Saturday. The Patrie publishes a letter from Turin, stating that the annexation of Savoy to France has been definitely settled, and also states that the negotiations in regard to Tuscany are in a fair way to a satisfactory conclusion.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times says it is thought that Prince Carignan will be Governor General of Tuscany, unless the Imperial idea of a separate State be carried out. There is great wrath here against the Pope. I am told His Holiness has issued another circular, still stronger than the encyclical letter, on the Romagna affair. A remark is said to have been made in a very high quarter that the Pope would, from the manner in which he is going on, soon make the famous pamphlet "Le Pape et le Congress" a truth. This means that of all his States only Rome would be left to the Pope.

Letters from Rome say that the agitation is so great there as to render it extremely doubtful whether the French army will be able to keep it in subjection much longer.

A second warning to the King of Sardinia from the Pope, which immediately precedes excommunication, is said to have been sent to Turin.

SARDINIA.—The Washington correspondent of the New York Times says:

"Interesting dispatches to the Sardinian Legation here announce that it is the fixed determination of Victor Emmanuel, in spite of the opposition of the French Emperor, to receive the Italian States proposing annexation to Sardinia. Another war may be the result.

Notice.

Shall I go fishing to pay four hundred dollars for a small tenement to shelter my family while I am out in the field? I cannot do it unless some brethren that are able will help me soon. This is not begging, but asking advice. Bro. Ladd advises me to this course. I will work for my family.

HIRAM MUNGER.

A Proposition.

To any one who will send us a new subscriber for one year, we will forward, post paid, a copy of our late discussion with Eld. W. W. Clayton, on the conscious state of the spirit after death, and the destruction of the wicked. And for a new subscriber for six months, we will send a copy of the pamphlets on "Soul" and "Spirit." With a little effort, a thousand names may be added to our list. Let every reader try to aid in scattering the light and truth. Now is the time to work.

For the Crisis.

A Mother's Love.

Kindled thus so holy and so pure a flame,
Kindled on altars of the human breast,
Through chance, and change, and circumstance the same,—
Hath not thy mother's love stood all this test?
She loved thee as thy life, and her love dies
Only when she hath breathed her latest breath;
Revere thy mother, and her tried love prize,
And emulate her holy christian faith.

MARY E. WEBB.

For the Crisis.

Promised Grace.

BRO. GRANT:—May I speak again through the columns of the "Crisis," to those poor souls who are panting for the life-giving water, and yet, from various causes, are prevented from coming to the fountain and drinking a full supply?

It has seemed to me that I had exhausted my resources in endeavoring to point out the difficulties, and the way of deliverance; but a letter received a day or two since from a sister who has perused those numerous articles, and yet lingers around the pool, longing, yet fearing to step in, and be made every whit whole, has awakened my sympathies, and stirred me up to write [illegible] words of encouragement to [illegible] exercised. She will pardon [illegible] to some of the statements made in her letter, they may meet the eye of others who have the same difficulties to encounter.

She, too, as did the other who wrote me, feels that she lacks something she once possessed, before so much opposition was manifested against "women's improving in Sabbath meetings." It seems that the unpopularity of female testimony on the Sabbath brought a heavy cross that she was not willing to bear, and her will rose in opposition to God's will in the matter, and consequently that power and fulness of the Spirit that she had previously enjoyed, left her when this unsubmission was yielded to, and now she labors, and struggles, and weeps before the Lord, because of the lack of former peace; and when she would try to believe on the Lord Jesus, she is crushed with the thought of her unworthiness, and dares not look to Jesus, and give herself to him fully and forever.

Now this dear soul is not alone in her experience. Many, no doubt, who read this article will say, "There, that is just the way I feel, precisely!" Yes, you had this power—this fullness—this assurance of faith and love for the work once, but in an evil hour you laid your hand sacrilegiously upon the altar and took therefrom the consecrated offering,—you robbed God of that solemnly dedicated to his service, and he no longer had your permission to work in you both to will and to perform,— and what was the result? "A lack within"—a "something wanting." You no longer waited with obedient heart upon the Lord, as the faithful servant waits upon his master. True, you performed some duties, but not all. You did not give up prayer, oh, no! but no longer had you access by faith within the vail; no longer could you prevail mightily with God, and bring the blessing down by faith upon your soul. Sometimes you talked, but although your words were well enough, they had not the ring of former days—they did not have the life—the unction in them, penetrating the hearts of others. Your outward deportment was just the same; but the spiritually-minded could discern your lack of former spiritualism.

Some of you have known your loss, and refused to confess it. You have gone right on as though the kernel was still within the shell, but the heart could not enjoy, the soul could not exult in joyous victory; the deep movings of compassion that led you to weep and plead with and for the sinner; the burden that rested upon you for others is all gone; and though you now sometimes warn the ungodly, the heart-feeling is gone; the fountain of tears is dried up, the agony of prayer and labor is not there, and your testimony is powerless. There is something between thy soul and God, and you are too proud to let it be known.

How much to be preferred the broken-heartedness of the sister who pours out to me her grief, believing I can feel for her, and help her. Well, I can, thank God! I know just how; and why? Because I have felt just as she does. That is the reason. Can I help her? Only as the kind friend helps the sick man, when he tells him of a physician who he knows can cure him.

And now I am going to talk with you who are in the same position with her, about this same good Friend, who is the physician of the soul. This sister weeps and groans over her unhappy condition, and would see Jesus, and be restored to his love and enjoy his presence as in former times. But when she kneels to pray, she views herself as so unworthy, that she dares not come to him. Yet, she dares to tell me, a stranger, her feelings, and ask me to instruct her, and I do not have half so much love and sympathy for her, as Jesus does, and has had all the time. A very little of that love has been infused into my heart, and hence I do care for her, and if I could save her from all her sorrow, I would, but [illegible] and it is just what he has long [illegible] to do, but you see he could not [illegible] till she gave herself fully up into his hands, and trusted in him to heal her soul.

How strange it would seem for a man who was ill, to say, "O, I wish I was well as I once was." "Well," says a friend, "why don't you call in Dr. L., he cured you right up when you was sick before?" "I will tell you why; it is because I am so very sick, I don't want to ask him to help me until I get better." And so the man suffers on, wishing he was well, but wont call on Dr. L. for medicine because he is sick. "Why that is the very reason he should call on him," say you; "I thought physicians were on purpose for sick ones, and not for people who are well." Indeed! is that your opinion? Well, I thought that a Savior was provided on purpose for sinners, but some have got it into their heads that it will not do for them to go to the Savior until they have become good, and worthy, and then perhaps he will receive them!

You may just as well say, "I wont eat, because I am hungry. I will wait until I do not feel hungry, and then I will eat!" What class does Jesus Christ receive? "He receiveth sinners and eateth with them." That is true, although a wicked man brought it as an accusation against him. For whom did he die? "For the ungodly." Who did he come to invite to the marriage feast? "Not the righteous, but sinners." To whom did he promise rest? To the "weary, and heavy laden." Would that I could so present Christ—so describe his love as to lead you to trust him!

I said I knew how to sympathize with the sister because I had experienced the same. That is why Jesus can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, having been tempted, and suffered just like us. It was for this very purpose he became "like unto his brethren," and "bore their griefs, and carried their sicknesses." Now, you often think Christ was Divine, and therefore could not feel for poor human nature, in its varied sorrows and sicknesses, but when you remember that he was made flesh and became a man of like passions with us, and was a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief, and tempted in all points like unto us, and that although not a sinner by actual transgression, yet that upon him were laid the iniquities of us all; when you think of all this, and read what he endured, you will not again suppose he does not know how to feel for you in all your sorrows. His mercy is a tender mercy—his love is more than a mother's—his benevolence beyond a father's—his friendship greater than a brother's.

Now, after affording you the greatest proof of this, by laying down his life for you, can you not trust him? Yes, you will. Your aching heart is even now saying, I "will give him my poor, sinful heart, that he may cleanse it with his blood, and make it fit for his abode. Henceforth I am His, to do his will in all things." Hark! Jesus responds to thy heartfelt desire. He speaks to thee: "Go in peace! Be of good cheer, thy sins are all forgiven thee." The tempest-tossed waves are hushed into stillness. A calm broods over the waters. Peace,—the Savior's dying legacy—is thine.

MARY D. WELLCOME.

For the Crisis.

Trust in God.

When Moses led the host of Israel out of their land of bondage, he was followed with readiness and joy for a short time; their faith was strong in him, they felt that he was a true commander, and competent to lead them to a land of plenty, where they would be free from their enemies, and free to worship God in the way of their fathers. But soon they are surrounded on every side by danger, on either hand a wilderness, behind them the Egyptians, and before them the trackless sea. Their hearts fail them, their faith in their leader gone—oh, cry they, we had better served in Egypt than perish in this wilderness! No way of escape for us now, die we must or return.

But no, their leader appears, his eye sparkles with hope, his face radiant with holy confidence in God. He speaks, every eye is fixed upon him, as though his words would be life or death to them. His message is simple—understood by all. My God has commanded me to say to the children of Israel "Go forward." They obey, and are soon rejoicing on the banks of deliverance.

Fellow christian, how is it with thee? When you were in bondage to sin and the world, Christ appeared to you, and gently whispered, "Follow me, and I will give thee that liberty wherewith I make all my followers free." You have followed him with joy a little way; you have been happy in the journey; you have now taken your eyes from your leader and have looked behind; on either side and before you all looks dark; you are disheartened; you close your eyes, and fold your hands, and try to say "thy will be done, oh, Lord."

Listen! a voice disturbs thy repose,—it is the voice of thy Leader saying, "Go forward!"

Christian, follow thy Divine Leader whatever he leads, even though it be through the sea. Go not back to the bondage of sin, of Satan or the world. If the way be dark, press nearer to your Leader. Trust in God! He will lead us beyond the reach of doubts or fears, and enable us at last to sing the "New song" in the "New earth."

The Return of our Lord to be waited for by his People.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

(Concluded.)

4. See that this waiting for Christ has its right practical influence by increasing your spirituality and heavenly-mindedness. Thus it is used in the Holy Scriptures. This hope may be received merely in the intellect and imagination as an interesting and impressive subject without sanctifying the heart. In this way received, it may fill us with dogmatic, positive assumptions, fancied superior knowledge, and cause us to despise more devoted brethren who may not yet see this hope, and thus occasion many stumbling-blocks to its reception. This is a painful abuse of this deep, scriptural truth. Its real use is to raise us continually heavenward, as the apostle teaches. Our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body. (Phil. 3: 20, 21.) All christians quickened together with Christ by the Spirit of God, are now raised up together, and made to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. (Ephes. 2: 6.) The Lord's coming is revealed to bring us to this state of mind. Set your affections on things above, and not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory. (Col. 3: 2—4.) The apostle John joins the same hope with more close abiding in Jesus and increasing purity. He that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as he is pure. (1 John 2: 28, 29; 3: 1—3.)

The more assuredly you can realize in your minds God's testimony to this truth, and the more steadily you can gaze on this blessed hope, looking for it and hastening unto it, the more you will be raised above earth-born cares, sorrows, and troubles, and your heart opened to noble and generous actings for God and his Church. You will be filled with scriptural and bright anticipations of heavenly glory. Its holy joy and happiness will be reflected in heavenly-mindedness, deadness to the world, Christian tempers, holy dispositions, and all the fruits of the Spirit, so that you shall rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory, and the joy of the Lord shall be your strength for every work tending to glorify his name and bless your fellow-men.

Lastly, Let us confess this hope of our Lord's coming before the world. Why has it yet had so little influence? We have been too much ashamed of our hope, and have hid our light under a bushel. Why has it not yet roused, to any great extent, the mocks of the scorner and the revilings of the world? The voice of testimony has hitherto been so feeble that the world has had no occasion to trouble itself about it: the world has not been disturbed in its false peace. Why is it carefully excluded from the mass of our religious periodicals and journals? The testimony to it, from those who hold it, has hitherto been so indistinct, that the conductors of such publications have no idea of the strength of conviction with which it is held by the faithful servants of Christ. We must be more open, bold, and decided in our profession, if we would make a real impression on the whole church of Christ.

Our blessed Master has told us, Let your lights be burning, and ye yourselves like unto men, that wait for their Lord. This implies an open confession of our hope of his return. With the mouth confession is made unto salvation. This is one purpose which he has in view in our attendance on the Lord's Supper; to testify to others our hope that he who died for us will come again. And be it so that we meet with ridicule and reproach from even professing christians for this confession, let us take up this cross also. No doubt Noah had many a scoff and many a mockery to endure, while engaged for one hundred and twenty years in building the ark; yet by faith Noah being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house, by which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith. All the extravagances which, through the special enmity of Satan against this truth, any who may have professed it, may at any time have mingled with it, will be very possibly laid to our charge.

There is no doctrine against which that malignant adversary seems to have had more hatred, nor any which he has more striven to mix up with human infirmity. But the holy Bible ever leads us to combine true sobriety and moderation with the Lord's being at hand. Let us of the day be sober, putting on the breast-plate of faith and love, and for an helmet the hope of salvation. Again, we are told, Wherefore be sober and hope to the end, for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ. And again, Let your moderation be known unto all men. The Lord is at hand. Thus entirely separated from all enthusiasm, and thus intimately associated with all truth and sobermindedness, in the holy Scriptures, is that doctrine of the Lord's speedy return and our waiting for him which we have now set before you. Let us not, then, be ashamed of our hope. Let us avow it before all men.

Indeed, these are the truths eminently suited to the very times through which we are passing; exactly calculated to meet all the errors and iniquities, the Infidelity, the Popery, and the lawlessness of these days. If God have given us this sure light in a dark place, let us lift it on high, and shine as lights in the world, holding forth the Word of life.

This is the seasonable truth for the people of Christ now; it is given by Christ himself, in a voice from heaven, in the account of the sixth vial, under which we are now living. Behold, I come as a thief; blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked and they see his shame. It is, then, clearly according to the mind of Christ that it should be distinctly announced and fully proclaimed. I call upon all his servants then, in the name of the great Lord and Master of all, to testify their hope of his return. Confess him before men, and he will confess you before the angels of God; yea, before his Father in heaven. Thus, when he shall appear, you shall have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming.—Bickersteth.

Light and Darkness.

I am old and blind—
Men point to me as smitten with God's frown;
Afflicted and deserted by my kind,
Yet I am not cast down.

I am weak, yet strong;
I murmur not that I no longer see;
Poor, old and helpless, I the more belong,
Father Supreme, to thee.

Oh! merciful One,
When men are farthest, then Thou art most near;
When friends pass by, my weakness shun,
Thy chariot I bear.

The glorious face
Is leaning toward me, and its holy light
Shines in upon my lonely dwelling place,
And there is no more night.

On my bended knees
I recognize thy purpose clearly shown;
My vision thou hast dimmed, that I may see
Thyself, thyself alone.

I have nought to fear—
This darkness is the shadow of thy wing;
Beneath it, I am almost sacred—here
Can come no evil thing.

Oh! I seem to stand
Trembling where no mortal foot e'er hath been,
Wrapt in the radiance of thy sinless land,
Which eye hath never seen.

Visions come and go,
Shapes of resplendent beauty round me throng;
From angels' lips I seem to hear the flow
Of soft and holy song.

It is nothing now,
When Heaven is opening on my sightless eyes,
When airs from Paradise refresh my brow,
The earth in darkness lies.

In a purer clime
My being fills with rapture—waves of thought
Roll in upon my spirit—strains sublime
Break upon me unsought.

Give me now my lyre,
I feel the stirrings of a gift divine;
Within my bosom glows unearthly fire,
Lit by no skill of mine.

MILTON.

For the Crisis.

Faint, yet Pursuing.

BRO. GRANT:—On leaving the many at Wilbraham last fall, who expressed so much sympathy in my behalf, it was their request that I should communicate through the Crisis my whereabouts, etc. Weeks and months have rapidly flown away, and still no communication has been received from me. Well, causes there are many. An unsettled knowledge for several weeks succeeding my ordination where my lot would be cast, was one reason. My mind became so engaged in the new truths I had embraced, that sleepless nights and loss of appetite were the consequence. I then made less application to study, and labored in the open air. I soon found the change very beneficial. I did not lose any of my interest in Bible subjects, but only kept it in check.

About the middle of last November, Bro. J. Covell, of Muscatine, Iowa, commenced a correspondence with me, relative to my locating among the advent brethren in that place and vicinity. I felt it a duty to go, but had not the means then. Of course, duty had nothing to do with impossibilities. After the lapse of a few weeks, a draft was sent me, the value of which would procure my transportation to that place, where duty seemed to call. Having decided advantageously for a life partnership in the loss and profits of life's joys and sorrows, the decision soon became an action, the notice of which appeared in the Crisis. Farewell visits were made among relatives and friends. A contemplated time for departing to the West had nearly come, when sickness laid its hand heavily upon Mrs. D——, making her a great sufferer. Here I am in the sick room, doing all in my power to relieve weary, restless humanity. Weeks have thus passed—night and day of almost ceaseless watchings. To-day physical exhaustion has almost if not quite reached an irremediable depth. How uncertain is the consummation of human decisions! The reason why Bro. Pratt and the Western brethren were disappointed in not seeing me at the conference is thus made known.

Disappointments! who has them not? Affliction's valley! who has not passed through it? Healing fountain! [illegible] certain restorative? By faith, the stricken heart may find in thee soothing power. But when will mortality cease aching, wasting, perishing? Blissful morning! the eye of faith can view thy glorious dawning. The "King in his beauty" will dedicate thy breaking. The immortal ones will chant thy welcome. Then will the prayer—"Thy kingdom come," be answered. Then will reunion follow separation. A farewell to sorrow will be read upon countenances once sad. Those who have loved will meet again. Fadeless will be the eye, unfaltering the tongue, and no longer tremulous the limbs oft wearied while on life's pilgrimage. Though the way was thorny, it has culminated now in the promised highway.

Weary pilgrim to the heavenly Mecca and New Jerusalem, still pursue thy journeyings. The evergreen pasture will soon be seen. The Life Restorer will soon appear. How soon, I do not know. I pray, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly!" Precious ones are held captive in death. A loved brother was last Sunday looked upon for the last time, previous to depositing in the tomb. His was the christian's hope. As day after day I hear of the death of this or that loved one, I feel that the enemy will not always revel in chilled blood and saddened hearts. His finale is written.

Bro. Grant and beloved pilgrims, contend earnestly; not for principalities and powers, but for "the Faith"—not of human origin, but that "once delivered to the saints." As for me, I have a settled preference to serve the Lord. Whether finally faithful, the recording angel will reveal in that day when life-long works are to be tried.

Selections.

Nearing Deliverance.

According to the most competent, because inspired judge, the future is to be hailed and prayed for, not deprecated by the christian, as if it unbosomed only calamity.

"For now is our salvation nearer than when we believed."—ROM. 13: 11.

The salvation referred to by Paul is unquestionably that large and comprehensive deliverance which is the destiny of all created things, and of all the living rational and responsible beings who have believed in Christ, and are regenerated by his Spirit. Personal salvation is an experience of the present; the salvation alluded to is a fact that lies still in the future. It is not individual safety, but the general salvation of the whole body of the church, to which Paul refers. It is time to awake, because our salvation, or deliverance, is nearer than when we believed; and the night, which means the whole of this existing economy, is far spent; the day, which means the future, everlasting sun shine, that spreads over all the earth, when Christ takes to him his great power, and sways his scepter from sea to sea, is near at hand. He speaks of that future deliverance, which he describes in the 8th chapter of Romans, as the manifestation of the sons of God: the redemption of the earth from its groans, its travail, and its expectancy, and that restoration of all things which had been spoken of by the prophets, and is the distinctive feature of that millennial day which approaches faster and nearer as the centuries roll on. Few can fail to be struck, in reading the epistles of St. Paul, with his constant statement of the nearness and the instancy of the advent of our Lord. He says in one passage, "The Lord is at hand;" in another passage, "looking for that blessed epiphany, the glorious appearing of Jesus Christ, our great God and Savior." St. James says, "Be patient; the Lord is at hand; the Judge is at the door." Nor can any fair reader of the epistles of St. Paul escape constantly perceiving, not a mere matter of hope, but of fact, that the motive and the hope that he puts before christians is not the nearness of their death, but the instancy of the approach of their great and blessed hope, our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. In other words, the governing hope of the christian is not his own personal deliverance at death, but the coming of his Lord.

The day and the hour of his advent are uncertain; the fact of his advent is as certain as rising and as setting suns. If you are anxiously watching the return to your home of some one near and dear to you, how hard you will try to catch a familiar sound amid the wind or the pattering rain, or to see the distant shadow in the moonlight! You feel it your instinctive impulse to seek out any sign of the approach of one who is so intimately associated with you. The watcher on the distant heights looks intently into the east to catch the first beam of the rising sun; the voyager upon a broad and desert sea looks anxiously and often around if he can see some floating weed or some wheeling sea bird to indicate the nearing land, or the whitening cliffs of his native shore, or the mountain-range within the horizon that tell him that his home is at hand. The christian, not exempt from the feelings of all, nor forbidden to cherish them, will often look if he can see any signs of that glorious appearing, gilding with its orient beams the distant east. He will often compare sea, and star, and sky, and latitude and longitude with the revealed and inspired chart that not only lays down the fact that Christ will come, but has spread over it tokens, marks, signs, indications, by which you may gather the high probability that his approach is near.

The christian, like the voyager on a great sea, may often misinterpret; that is possible, for he is human, and in the difficult path of the unfulfilled to err is common. The mariner may take the piece of drift-wood that he finds upon the sea for a fragment too recently torn from the shore, indicating, therefore, his nearness to land, and it may have been long tossed, or it may be something torn by the storm from the depths of the sea. Or he may take some wing-weary bird for a recent emigrant from the land, when really it has lost its way, has been long at sea, and is sinking with fatigue. Or he may mistake that as the first ray of the rising sun, which is only a phosphorescent meteor. But incidental errors will not make him despair; they will only induce him more carefully to watch and wait, certain that the fact itself will be, and that phenomena indicative of its nearness will multiply as it approaches. So the christian may err—may seize some startling scene as appearing to him the token of its nearness; or he may interpret some voice in the wilderness as the sound of his chariot-wheels; or he may think that the transient blaze of the meteor is the burst of the morning sun; but if he find that he has fallen into error in so interpreting, he will not therefore despair, or give up his investigation. And far better have the character of him who intently looks, and in his intense longing treats that as a sign which is not, than the sceptic and freezing apathy of the man whose heart is dead, and whose hopes are cold, and who cares for and looks for none of these things. The incidental error of a few cannot shake or shatter the trust of the many; and the error that is made by one watcher for the advent will only lead another, like a buoy upon a wreck in the channel, to avoid the reef on which his predecessor may have suffered.

But let me notice some of those events which lead us to anticipate, even more than the apostolic church could, the increasing nearness of these great changes. Can one fail to see all over Europe startling events? If earthquakes in divers places, if famines, if pestilences, and plagues, were to be among the earliest forerunners of a great change, are not these most conspicuous now? Does not every day's news bring accounts of them? Does not every paper reveal in different parts of the world one or more, or many, of these facts and phenomena?

I ventured to show the complete fulfilment of the drying up of the Euphrates. If we can identify one fact in history with a specific symbol in the Apocalypse, and if the identification be so exact, complete, and so truly overlapping it that there can scarcely be a mistake, we not only ascertain the fulfillment of a given prophecy, but we ascertain the point of time we occupy in the great calendar of prophecy.

Now one of these events that were to take place under the sixth vial, when the unclean spirits were to gather the nations to that great war—not battle, but war—of Armageddon, was, that the great river Euphrates, the symbol of the Turkish power in Europe, from which the Turks started, and to which, as the reflux of a stream, they are going back again, should be dried up, so that the exhaustion of it, or the waning of the crescent, or the drying up of the Mahometan power in Europe, would be the fulfillment of that. This I stated many years ago, and within this present year we have seen the unmistakable fulfillment of it. And the correspondent of one of the daily papers, writing the other day, speaking of Turkey, says, "Her resources are utterly exhausted." God brings to pass the fulfillment of his own prediction, strangely, indeed, by the very process most justly employed by the western powers to keep up and prevent the evaporation of the great river Euphrates. In the same paper I read, "The admission of the Turkish state into the European system under the counsels and tutelage of the western powers is now inevitable;" that is, it is no longer to be an independent nationality. Of course it will not be; and I am quoting it simply as a proof of the fulfillment of that statement of the Apocalypse.

Another great event that I have alluded to, which shows that our salvation is nearer than when we awoke, or, in other words, that there are tokens of the approach of that great era, is the unequivocal, the irresistible evidence of the decadence and the imminent destruction of that huge sacerdotal tyranny under which Europe has groaned, and which has struck its roots so deep into dynasties, and nations, and governments; I mean the Papal or Western Apostasy. Now this is an event, I may mention, that is one of the most important as a token in the whole Bible. The apostle says that an apostasy, headed by a Pope, the man of sin, should begin from Christ's first advent; and that it should be utterly destroyed by his second advent. He says, first of all, "Whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth;" that is, through the preaching of the gospel; and strike down, at a blow, with the brilliancy, the brightness, of his own personal advent. We read in the Apocalypse, that when the seventh vial is poured out, great Babylon comes into remembrance, to give her the judgment-cup, in drinking which her decay is to be precipitated, her consumption to go on, her sufferings to be increased. And then, at the end of it an angel is to cry from heaven, "Babylon the great is fallen;" and her judgments are to come upon her in one day, and she is to sink like a millstone in the great waters.

• • • •

The Pope trembles in the Vatican. He has a presentiment of the nearness of his doom. What office in Europe would insure his Pontifical life for five years? Now just think what this power was in ancient days: a power that could force a German Emperor to remain doing penance amid the snows in the trenches around the imperial city, till the Pope gave him absolution; a power that could dispose of Britain's crown to whomsoever he pleased; the great power that reigned over the kings of the earth. "How are the mighty fallen! Is this the man that shook kingdoms, that made the earth to tremble? Is he become as one of us?" And what do recent events indicate? The decadence of the system to the very verge, when like the thief in the night, He comes whose right it is to reign; and the whole is struck down; and that great city is literally swallowed up and destroyed by fire; and the smoke of its torment begins to rise for ever and for ever.

If this be the recorded state of things, it is another token that our salvation is nearer than when we believed. I do not quote more. I quote these two as prominent and striking foretokens; and the lesson that they all teach is not fear, not alarm, not terror; but, "Prepare, O Israel, to meet thy God." "Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go out to meet him."—Dr. Cumming.

Reading for Youth.

The Bible.

A WORD TO BOYS AND GIRLS.

"O may these heavenly pages be
Our ever dear delight,
And still new beauties may we see,
And still increasing light."

We now present you the mode or manner of studying this sacred volume, that it may prove a savor of life unto life, not of death unto death.

1. Study the Bible with prayer for enlightenment, for the quickening, sanctifying influence of the Holy Spirit, that you may behold wondrous things out of God's law. We may read the Bible till gray, without that wisdom which cometh from above, and it will still be a dead letter. Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty.

"When the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth." John 16: 13.

2. Read the Bible regularly. A good man of old says: "I have esteemed the words of thy mouth more than my necessary food." This is the true idea. The Bible is daily bread, to be taken regularly, that the seed may grow thereby.

3. Read the Bible attentively. The meaning of the Bible is the Bible. Unless he that reads gets the meaning, it will not do him any good. Hasty reading of a great many chapters at once is of no advantage. Read slowly, a little at a time, and think on what you read, pray over it, and you will understand and remember it.

4. Read the Bible as God's book. Not merely because father or mother wish you to read it, but for a better reason, because God speaks to you in the Bible. When we have seen a little girl run in, her eyes sparkling with joy, crying: Oh! mother, here's a letter from father to me, for my name is on the outside," we always feel to wish she might thus look on the Bible; for it is a letter from our Father in heaven. So feel, and so read; and you will not grow weary of the good book.

These few hints are enough for once. Will not our little readers remember them, and read every day, with great attention, the book of God? We love to see children, as we sometimes do, take their little Bibles every morning, and sit down to read a chapter, without waiting for any one to tell them. Read often, and love to read, dear children, and you will not forget it.

Blessed Bible:—

"Thou truest friend man ever knew,
Thy constancy I've tried;
Where all were false, I found thee true,
My counsellor and guide.

The mines of earth no treasure give
That could this volume buy;
In teaching me the way to live,
It taught me how to die."

Golden Rule.

Children and Men.

Here is a saying of the Scriptures which you may think hard to be understood. The apostle commands us all to be both men and children. You will ask, How is this possible? Let us read and see. Here we have it, in 1 Cor. 14: 20:—"Brethren, be not children in understanding: howbeit, in malice be ye children, but in understanding be MEN."

Children, in comparison with men, are weak: they cannot do what men can: they require persons to watch over and take care of them until they grow up to be able to take care of themselves. And the apostle's meaning is, Get wisdom; be prudent; understand your duty; learn the will of God. In all this try to be like men in comparison with children,—of full size, strong, and knowing what to do. But in malice, quarrelling, hatred, and all unkindness, be weak and helpless as children are in comparison with men.

Few children in very early life have those feelings which may be called malice, or at least, in anything like the strength that it appears in some men. Be, then, all your lives children in this respect. Do not allow yourselves to hate any one. Try to love all. Seek the good of all.

There are no real contradictions in the Bible. Whatever looks like it may be explained.

Speak to the Stranger.

A boy, says a merchant, came into my store years ago, bright, intelligent-looking, desiring me to purchase some goods he had for sale. I felt called upon to say a word to him about his soul, so I merely remarked:

"Do you enjoy religion?"

"No, I don't think much about it."

"Well, don't you think you ought to?"

"Oh, I don't know how to go at it."

I gave him some advice, and he departed. In about a week he came back again, when I found him yet without a knowledge of the Savior. A short time after he came again, and upon my asking how he felt, he replied with rejoicing that the Savior was precious to him, that God had blessed his soul. That young man is now preaching the Gospel.

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for [illegible] cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

A Mother's Love.

Knowest thou so holy and so pure a flame,
Kindled on altars of the human breast,
Through chance, and change, and circumstance the same,—
Hath not thy mother's love stood all this test?
She loved thee from thy life, and her love dies
Only when she hath breathed her latest breath:
Revere thy mother, and her tried love prize,
And emulate her holy christian faith.

For the Crisis.

Promised Grace.

BRO. GRANT:—May I speak again through the columns of the "Crisis," to those poor souls who are panting for the life-giving water, and yet, from various causes, are prevented from coming to the fountain and drinking a full supply?

It has seemed to me that I had exhausted my resources in endeavoring to point out the difficulties, and the way of deliverance; but a letter received a day or two since from a sister who has perused those numerous articles, and yet lingers around the pool, longing, yet fearing to step in, and be made every whit whole, has awakened my sympathies, and stirred me up to write [illegible] words of encouragement to those similarly exercised. She will pardon me if I refer to some of the statements made in her letter, they may meet the eye of others who have the same difficulties to encounter.

She, too, as did the other who wrote me, feels that she lacks something she once possessed, before so much opposition was manifested against "women's improving in Sabbath meetings." It seems that the unpopularity of female testimony on the Sabbath brought a heavy cross that she was not willing to bear, and her will rose in opposition to God's will in the matter, and consequently that power and fulness of the Spirit that she had previously enjoyed, left her when this unsubmission was yielded to, and now she labors, and struggles, and weeps before the Lord, because of the lack of former peace; and when she would try to believe on the Lord Jesus, she is crushed with the thought of her unworthiness, and dares not look to Jesus, and give herself to him fully and forever.

Now this dear soul is not alone in her experience. Many, no doubt, who read this article will say, "There, that is just the way I feel, precisely!" Yes, you had this power—this fullness—this assurance of faith and love for the work once, but in an evil hour you laid your hand sacrilegiously upon the altar and took therefrom the consecrated offering,—you robbed God of that solemnly dedicated to his service, and he no longer had your permission to work in you both to will and to perform,— and what was the result? "A lack within"—a "something wanting." You no longer waited with obedient heart upon the Lord, as the faithful servant waits upon his master. True, you performed some duties, but not all. You did not give up prayer, oh, no! but no longer had you access by faith within the vail; no longer could you prevail mightily with God, and bring the blessing down by faith upon your soul. Sometimes you talked, but although your words were well enough, they had not the ring of former days—they did not have the life—the unction in them, penetrating the hearts of others. Your outward deportment was just the same; but the spiritually-minded could discern your lack of former spiritualism.

Some of you have known your loss, and refused to confess it. You have gone right on as though the kernel was still within the shell, but the heart could not enjoy, the soul could not exult in joyous victory; the deep movings of compassion that led you to weep and plead with and for the sinner; the burden that rested upon you for others is all gone; and though you now sometimes warn the ungodly, the heart-feeling is gone; the fountain of tears is dried up, the agony of prayer and labor is not there, and your testimony is powerless. There is something between thy soul and God, and you are too proud to let it be known.

How much to be preferred the broken-heartedness of the sister who pours out to me her grief, believing I can feel for her, and help her. Well, I can, thank God! I know just how; and why? Because I have felt just as she does. That is the reason. Can I help her? Only as the kind friend helps the sick man, when he tells him of a physician who he knows can cure him.

And now I am going to talk with you who are in the same position with her, about this same good Friend, who is the physician of the soul. This sister weeps and groans over her unhappy condition, and would see Jesus, and be restored to his love and enjoy his presence as in former times. But when she kneels to pray, she views herself as so unworthy, that she dares not come to him. Yet, she dares to tell me, a stranger, her feelings, and ask me to instruct her, and I do not have half so much love and sympathy for her, as Jesus does, and has had all the time. A very little of that love has been infused into my heart, and hence I do care for her, and if I could save her from all her sorrow, I would, but Jesus can, and it is just what he has long wanted to do, but you see he could not until she gave herself fully up into his hands, and trusted in him to heal her soul.

How strange it would seem for a man who was ill, to say, "O, I wish I was well as I once was." "Well," says a friend, "why don't you call in Dr. L., he cured you right up when you was sick before?" "I will tell you why; it is because I am so very sick, I don't want to ask him to help me until I get better." And so the man suffers on, wishing he was well, but wont call on Dr. L. for medicine because he is sick. "Why that is the very reason he should call on him," say you; "I thought physicians were on purpose for sick ones, and not for people who are well." Indeed! is that your opinion? Well, I thought that a Savior was provided on purpose for sinners, but some have got it into their heads that it will not do for them to go to the Savior until they have become good, and worthy, and then perhaps he will receive them!

You may just as well say, "I wont eat, because I am hungry. I will wait until I do not feel hungry, and then I will eat!" What class does Jesus Christ receive? "He receiveth sinners and eateth with them." That is true, although a wicked man brought it as an accusation against him. For whom did he die? "For the ungodly." Who did he come to invite to the marriage feast? "Not the righteous, but sinners." To whom did he promise rest? To the "weary, and heavy laden." Would that I could so present Christ—so describe his love as to lead you to trust him!

I said I knew how to sympathize with the sister because I had experienced the same. That is why Jesus can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, having been tempted, and suffered just like us. It was for this very purpose he became "like unto his brethren," and "bore their griefs, and carried their sicknesses." Now, you often think Christ was Divine, and therefore could not feel for poor human nature, in its varied sorrows and sicknesses, but when you remember that he was made flesh and became a man of like passions with us, and was a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief, and tempted in all points like unto us, and that although not a sinner by actual transgression, yet that upon him were laid the iniquities of us all; when you think of all this, and read what he endured, you will not again suppose he does not know how to feel for you in all your sorrows. His mercy is a tender mercy—his love is more than a mother's—his benevolence beyond a father's—his friendship greater than a brother's.

Now, after affording you the greatest proof of this, by laying down his life for you, can you not trust him? Yes, you will. Your aching heart is even now saying, I "will give him my poor, sinful heart, that he may cleanse it with his blood, and make it fit for his abode. Henceforth I am His, to do his will in all things." Hark! Jesus responds to thy heartfelt desire. He speaks to thee: "Go in peace! Be of good cheer, thy sins are all forgiven thee." The tempest-tossed waves are hushed into stillness. A calm broods over the waters. Peace,—the Savior's dying legacy—is thine.

Trust in God.

When Moses led the host of Israel out of their land of bondage, he was followed with readiness and joy for a short time; their faith was strong in him, they felt that he was a true commander, and competent to lead them to a land of plenty, where they would be free from their enemies, and free to worship God in the way of their fathers. But soon they are surrounded on every side by danger, on either hand a wilderness, behind them the Egyptians, and before them the trackless sea. Their hearts fail them, their faith in their leader gone—oh, cry they, we had better served in Egypt than perish in this wilderness! No way of escape for us now, die we must or return.

But no, their leader appears, his eye sparkles with hope, his face radiant with holy confidence in God. He speaks, every eye is fixed upon him, as though his words would be life or death to them. His message is simple—understood by all. My God has commanded me to say to the children of Israel "Go forward." They obey, and are soon rejoicing on the banks of deliverance.

Fellow christian, how is it with thee? When you were in bondage to sin and the world, Christ appeared to you, and gently whispered, "Follow me, and I will give thee that liberty wherewith I make all my followers free." You have followed him with joy a little way; you have been happy in the journey; you have now taken your eyes from your leader and have looked behind; on either side and before you all looks dark; you are disheartened; you close your eyes, and fold your hands, and try to say "thy will be done, oh Lord."

Listen! a voice disturbs thy repose—it is the voice of thy Leader saying, "Go forward!"

Christian, follow thy Divine Leader whithersoever he leads, even though it be through the sea. Go not back to the bondage of sin, of Satan or the world. [illegible] the way be dark, press nearer to your Leader. Trust in God. He will lead us beyond the reach of foes or fears, and enable us at last to sing the "New song" in the New earth.

The Return of our Lord to be waited for by his People.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

(Concluded.)

4. See that this waiting for Christ has its right practical influence by increasing your spirituality and heavenly-mindedness. Thus it is used in the Holy Scriptures. This hope may be received merely in the intellect and imagination as an interesting and impressive subject without sanctifying the heart. In this way received, it may fill us with dogmatic, positive assumptions, fancied superior knowledge, and cause us to despise more devoted brethren who may not yet see this hope, and thus occasion many stumbling-blocks to its reception. This is a painful abuse of this deep, scriptural truth. Its real use is to raise us continually heavenward, as the apostle teaches. Our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body. (Phil. 3: 20, 21.) All christians quickened together with Christ by the Spirit of God, are now raised up together, and made to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. (Ephes. 2: 6.) The Lord's coming is revealed to bring us to this state of mind. Set your affections on things above, and not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory. (Col. 3: 2—4.) The apostle John joins the same hope with more close abiding in Jesus and increasing purity. He that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as he is pure. (1 John 2: 28, 29; 3: 1—3.)

The more assuredly you can realize in your minds God's testimony to this truth, and the more steadily you can gaze on this blessed hope, looking for it and hastening unto it, the more you will be raised above earth-born cares, sorrows, and troubles, and your heart opened to noble and generous actings for God and his Church. You will be filled with scriptural and bright anticipations of heavenly glory. Its holy joy and happiness will be reflected in heavenly-mindedness, deadness to the world, Christian tempers, holy dispositions, and all the fruits of the Spirit, so that you shall rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory, and the joy of the Lord shall be your strength for every work tending to glorify his name and bless your fellow-men.

Lastly, Let us confess this hope of our Lord's coming before the world. Why has it yet had so little influence? We have been too much ashamed of our hope, and have hid our light under a bushel. Why has it not yet roused, to any great extent, the mocks of the scorner and the revilings of the world? The voice of testimony has hitherto been so feeble that the world has had no occasion to trouble itself about it: the world has not been disturbed in its false peace. Why is it carefully excluded from the mass of our religious periodicals and journals? The testimony to it, from those who hold it, has hitherto been so indistinct, that the conductors of such publications have no idea of the strength of conviction with which it is held by the faithful servants of Christ. We must be more open, bold, and decided in our profession, if we would make a real impression on the whole church of Christ.

Our blessed Master has told us, Let your lights be burning, and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord. This implies an open confession of our hope of his return. With the mouth confession is made unto salvation. This is one purpose which he has in view in our attendance on the Lord's Supper; to testify to others our hope that he who died for us will come again. And be it so that we meet with ridicule and reproach from even professing christians for this confession, let us take up this cross also. No doubt Noah had many a scoff and many a mockery to endure, while engaged for one hundred and twenty years in building the ark; yet by faith Noah being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house, by which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith. All the extravagances which, through the special enmity of Satan against this truth, any who may have professed it, may at any time have mingled with it, will be very possibly laid to our charge.

There is no doctrine against which that malignant adversary seems to have had more hatred, nor any which he has more striven to mix up with human infirmity. But the holy Bible ever leads us to combine true sobriety and moderation with the Lord's being at hand. Let us of the day be sober, putting on the breast-plate of faith and love, and for an helmet the hope of salvation. Again, we are told, Wherefore be sober and hope to the end, for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ. And again, Let your moderation be known unto all men. The Lord is at hand. Thus entirely separated from all enthusiasm, and thus intimately associated with all truth and sober-mindedness, in the holy Scriptures, is that doctrine of the Lord's speedy return and our waiting for him which we have now set before you. Let us not, then, be ashamed of our hope. Let us avow it before all men.

Indeed, these are the truths eminently suited to the very times through which we are passing; exactly calculated to meet all the errors and iniquities, the Infidelity, the Popery, and the lawlessness of these days. If God have given us this sure light in a dark place, let us lift it on high, and shine as lights in the world, holding forth the Word of life.

This is the seasonable truth for the people of Christ now; it is given by Christ himself, in a voice from heaven, in the account of the sixth vial, under which we are now living. Behold, I come as a thief; blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked and they see his shame. It is, then, clearly according to the mind of Christ that it should be distinctly announced and fully proclaimed. I call upon all his servants then, in the name of the great Lord and Master of all, to testify their hope of his return. Confess him before men, and he will confess you before the angels of God; yea, before his Father in heaven. Thus, when he shall appear, you shall have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming.—Bickersteth.

Light and Darkness.

I am old and blind—
Men point to me as smitten with God's frown;
Afflicted and deserted by my kind,
Yet I am not cast down.

I am weak, yet strong;
I murmur not that I no longer see;
Poor, old and helpless, I the more belong,
Father Supreme, to thee.

Oh! merciful One,
When men are farthest, then Thou art most near;
When friends pass by, my weakness shun,
Thy chariot I hear.

The glorious face
Is leaning toward me, and its holy light
Shines in upon my lonely dwelling place,
And there is no more night.

On my bended knees
I recognize thy purpose clearly shown;
My vision thou hast dimmed, that I may see
Thyself, thyself alone.

I have nought to fear—
This darkness is the shadow of thy wing;
Beneath it, I am almost sacred—here
Can come no evil thing.

Oh! I seem to stand
Trembling where no mortal foot e'er hath been,
Wrapt in the radiance of thy sinless land,
Which eye hath never seen.

Visions come and go,
Shapes of resplendent beauty round me throng;
From angels' lips I seem to hear the flow
Of soft and holy song.

It is nothing now,
When Heaven is opening on my sightless eyes,
When airs from Paradise refresh my brow,
The earth in darkness lies.

In a purer clime
My being fills with rapture—waves of thought
Roll in upon my spirit—strains sublime
Break upon me unsought.

Give me now my lyre,
I feel the stirrings of a gift divine;
Within my bosom glows unearthly fire,
Lit by no skill of mine.

For the Crisis.

Faint, yet Pursuing.

BRO. GRANT:—On leaving the many at Wilbraham last fall, who expressed so much sympathy in my behalf, it was their request that I should communicate through the Crisis my whereabouts, etc. Weeks and months have rapidly flown away, and still no communication has been received from me. Well, causes there are many. An unsettled knowledge for several weeks succeeding my ordination where my lot would be cast, was one reason. My mind became so engaged in the new truths I had embraced, that sleepless nights and loss of appetite were the consequence. I then made less application to study, and labored in the open air. I soon found the change very beneficial. I did not lose any of my interest in Bible subjects, but only kept it in check.

About the middle of last November, Bro. J. Covell, of Muscatine, Iowa, commenced a correspondence with me, relative to my locating among the advent brethren in that place and vicinity. I felt it a duty to go, but had not the means then. Of course, duty had nothing to do with impossibilities. After the lapse of a few weeks, a draft was sent me, the value of which would procure my transportation to that place, where duty seemed to call. Having decided advantageously for a life partnership in the loss and profits of life's joys and sorrows, the decision soon became an action, the notice of which appeared in the Crisis. Farewell visits were made among relatives and friends. A contemplated time for departing to the West had nearly come, when sickness laid its hand heavily upon Mrs. D——, making her a great sufferer. Here I am in the sick room, doing all in my power to relieve weary, restless humanity. Weeks have thus passed—night and day of almost ceaseless watchings. To-day physical exhaustion has almost if not quite reached an irremediable depth. How uncertain is the consummation of human decisions! The reason why Bro. Pratt and the Western brethren were disappointed in not seeing me at the conference is thus made known.

Disappointments! who has them not? Affliction's valley! who has not passed through it? Healing fountain! can mortals quaff thy waters, and find in thee a certain restorative? By faith, the stricken heart may find in thee soothing power. But when will mortality cease aching, wasting, perishing? Blissful morning! the eye of faith can view thy glorious dawning. The "King in his beauty" will dedicate thy breaking. The immortal ones will chant thy welcome. Then will the prayer—"Thy kingdom come," be answered. Then will reunion follow separation. A farewell to sorrow will be read upon countenances once sad. Those who have loved will meet again. Fadeless will be the eye, unfaltering the tongue, and no longer tremulous the limbs oft wearied while on life's pilgrimage. Though the way was thorny, it has culminated now in the promised highway.

Weary pilgrim to the heavenly Mecca and New Jerusalem, still pursue thy journeyings. The evergreen pasture will soon be seen. The Life Restorer will soon appear. How soon, I do not know. I pray, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly!" Precious ones are held captive in death. A loved brother was last Sunday looked upon for the last time, previous to depositing in the tomb. His was the christian's hope. As day after day I hear of the death of this or that loved one, I feel that the enemy will not always revel in chilled blood and saddened hearts. His finale is written.

Bro. Grant and beloved pilgrims, contend earnestly; not for principalities and powers, but for "the Faith"—not of human origin, but that "once delivered to the saints." As for me, I have a settled preference to serve the Lord. Whether finally faithful, the recording angel will reveal in that day when life-long works are to be tried.

Selections.

Nearing Deliverance.

According to the most competent, because inspired judge, the future is to be hailed and prayed for, not deprecated by the christian, as if it unbosomed only calamity.

"For now is our salvation nearer than when we believed."—ROM. 13: 11.

The salvation referred to by Paul is unquestionably that large and comprehensive deliverance which is the destiny of all created things, and of all the living rational and responsible beings who have believed in Christ, and are regenerated by his Spirit. Personal salvation is an experience of the present; the salvation alluded to is a fact that lies still in the future. It is not individual safety, but the general salvation of the whole body of the church, to which Paul refers. It is time to awake, because our salvation, or deliverance, is nearer than when we believed; and the night, which means the whole of this existing economy, is far spent; the day, which means the future, everlasting sun shine, that spreads over all the earth, when Christ takes to him his great power, and sways his scepter from sea to sea, is near at hand. He speaks of that future deliverance, which he describes in the 8th chapter of Romans, as the manifestation of the sons of God: the redemption of the earth from its groans, its travail, and its expectancy, and that restoration of all things which had been spoken of by the prophets, and is the distinctive feature of that millennial day which approaches faster and nearer as the centuries roll on. Few can fail to be struck, in reading the epistles of St. Paul, with his constant statement of the nearness and the instancy of the advent of our Lord. He says in one passage, "The Lord is at hand;" in another passage, "looking for that blessed epiphany, the glorious appearing of Jesus Christ, our great God and Savior." St. James says, "Be patient; the Lord is at hand; the Judge is at the door." Nor can any fair reader of the epistles of St. Paul escape constantly perceiving, not a mere matter of hope, but of fact, that the motive and the hope that he puts before christians is not the nearness of their death, but the instancy of the approach of their great and blessed hope, our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. In other words, the governing hope of the christian is not his own personal deliverance at death, but the coming of his Lord.

The day and the hour of his advent are uncertain; the fact of his advent is as certain as rising and as setting suns. If you are anxiously watching the return to your home of some one near and dear to you, how hard you will try to catch a familiar sound amid the wind or the pattering rain, or to see the distant shadow in the moonlight! You feel it your instinctive impulse to seek out any sign of the approach of one who is so intimately associated with you. The watcher on the distant heights looks intently into the east to catch the first beam of the rising sun; the voyager upon a broad and desert sea looks anxiously and often around if he can see some floating weed or some wheeling sea bird to indicate the nearing land, or the whitening cliffs of his native shore, or the mountain-range within the horizon that tell him that his home is at hand. The christian, not exempt from the feelings of all, nor forbidden to cherish them, will often look if he can see any signs of that glorious appearing, gilding with its orient beams the distant east. He will often compare sea, and star, and sky, and latitude and longitude with the revealed and inspired chart that not only lays down the fact that Christ will come, but has spread over it tokens, marks, signs, indications, by which you may gather the high probability that his approach is near.

The christian, like the voyager on a great sea, may often misinterpret; that is possible, for he is human; and in the difficult path of the unfulfilled to err is common. The mariner may take the piece of drift-wood that he finds upon the sea for a fragment too recently torn from the shore, indicating, therefore, his nearness to land, and it may have been long tossed, or it may be something torn by the storm from the depths of the sea. Or he may take some wing-weary bird for a recent emigrant from the land, when really it has lost its way, has been long at sea, and is sinking with fatigue. Or he may mistake that as the first ray of the rising sun, which is only a phosphorescent meteor. But incidental errors will not make him despair; they will only induce him more carefully to watch and wait, certain that the fact itself will be, and that phenomena indicative of its nearness will multiply as it approaches. So the christian may err—may seize some startling scene as appearing to him the token of its nearness; or he may interpret some voice in the wilderness as the sound of his chariot wheels; or he may think that the transient blaze of the meteor is the burst of the morning sun; but if he find that he has fallen into error in so interpreting, he will not therefore despair, or give up his investigation. And far better have the character of him who intently looks, and in his intense longing treats that as a sign which is not, than the sceptic and freezing apathy of the man whose heart is dead, and whose hopes are cold, and who cares for and looks for none of these things. The incidental error of a few cannot shake or shatter the trust of the many; and the error that is made by one watcher for the advent will only lead another, like a buoy upon a wreck in the channel, to avoid the reef on which his predecessor may have suffered.

* * * *

But let me notice some of those events which lead us to anticipate, even more than the apostolic church could, the increasing nearness of these great changes. Can one fail to see all over Europe startling events? If earthquakes in divers places, if famines, if pestilences, and plagues, were to be among the earliest forerunners of a great change, are not these most conspicuous now? Does not every day's news bring accounts of them? Does not every paper reveal in different parts of the world one or more, or many, of these facts and phenomena?

* * * *

I ventured to show the complete fulfilment of the drying up of the Euphrates. If we can identify one fact in history with a specific symbol in the Apocalypse, and if the identification be so exact, complete, and so truly overlapping it that there can scarcely be a mistake, we not only ascertain the fulfillment of a given prophecy, but we ascertain the point of time we occupy in the great calendar of prophecy.

Now one of these events that were to take place under the sixth vial, when the unclean spirits were to gather the nations to that great war—not battle, but war—of Armageddon, was, that the great river Euphrates, the symbol of the Turkish power in Europe, from which the Turks started, and to which, as the reflux of a stream, they are going back again, should be dried up, so that the exhaustion of it, or the waning of the crescent, or the drying up of the Mahometan power in Europe, would be the fulfillment of that. This I stated many years ago, and within this present year we have seen the unmistakable fulfillment of it. And the correspondent of one of the daily papers, writing the other day, speaking of Turkey, says, "Her resources are utterly exhausted." God brings to pass the fulfillment of his own prediction, strangely, indeed, by the very process most justly employed by the western powers to keep up and prevent the evaporation of the great river Euphrates. In the same paper I read, "The admission of the Turkish state into the European system under the counsels and tutelage of the western powers is now inevitable;" that is, it is no longer to be an independent nationality. Of course it will not be; and I am quoting it simply as a proof of the fulfillment of that statement of the Apocalypse.

* * * *

Another great event that I have alluded to, which shows that our salvation is nearer than when we awoke, or, in other words, that there are tokens of the approach of that great era, is the unequivocal, the irresistible evidence of the decadence and the imminent destruction of that huge sacerdotal tyranny under which Europe has groaned, and which has struck its roots so deep into dynasties, and nations, and governments; I mean the Papal or Western Apostasy. Now this is an event, I may mention, that is one of the most important as a token in the whole Bible. The apostle says that an apostasy, headed by a Pope, the man of sin, should begin from Christ's first advent; and that it should be utterly destroyed by his second advent. He says, first of all, "Whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth;" that is, through the preaching of the gospel; and strike down, at a blow, with the brilliancy, the brightness, of his own personal advent. We read in the Apocalypse, that when the seventh vial is poured out, great Babylon comes into remembrance, to give her the judgment-cup, in drinking which her decay is to be precipitated, her consumption to go on, her sufferings to be increased. And then, at the end of it an angel is to cry from heaven, "Babylon the great is fallen;" and her judgments are to come upon her in one day, and she is to sink like a millstone in the great waters.

* * * *

The Pope trembles in the Vatican. He has a presentiment of the nearness of his doom. What office in Europe would insure his Pontifical life for five years? Now just think what this power was in ancient days: a power that could force a German Emperor to remain doing penance amid the snows in the trenches around the imperial city, till the Pope gave him absolution; a power that could dispose of Britain's crown to whomsoever he pleased; the great power that reigned over the kings of the earth. "How are the mighty fallen! Is this the man that shook kingdoms, that made the earth to tremble? Is he become as one of us?" And what do recent events indicate? The decadence of the system to the very verge, when like the thief in the night, He comes whose right it is to reign; and the whole is struck down; and that great city is literally swallowed up and destroyed by fire; and the smoke of its torment begins to rise for ever and for ever.

* * * *

If this be the recorded state of things, it is another token that our salvation is nearer than when we believed. I do not quote more. I quote these two as prominent and striking foretokens; and the lesson that they all teach is not fear, not alarm, not terror; but, "Prepare, O Israel, to meet thy God. Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go out to meet him."—Dr. Cumming.

Reading for Youth.

The Bible.

A WORD TO BOYS AND GIRLS.

"O may these heavenly pages be
Our ever dear delight,
And still new beauties may we see,
And still increasing light."

We now present you the mode or manner of studying this sacred volume, that it may prove a savor of life unto life, not of death unto death.

1. Study the Bible with prayer for enlightenment, for the quickening, sanctifying influence of the Holy Spirit, that you may behold wondrous things out of God's law. We may read the Bible till gray, without that wisdom which cometh from above, and it will still be a dead letter. Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty.

"When the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth." John 16: 13.

2. Read the Bible regularly. A good man of old says: "I have esteemed the words of thy mouth more than my necessary food." This is the true idea. The Bible is daily bread, to be taken regularly, that the seed may grow thereby.

3. Read the Bible attentively. The meaning of the Bible is the Bible. Unless he that reads gets the meaning, it will not do him any good. Hasty reading of a great many chapters at once is of no advantage. Read slowly, a little at a time, and think on what you read, pray over it, and you will understand and remember it.

4. Read the Bible as God's book. Not merely because father or mother wish you to read it, but for a better reason, because God speaks to you in the Bible. When we have seen a little girl run in, her eyes sparkling with joy, crying: Oh! mother, here's a letter from father to me, for my name is on the outside," we always feel to wish she might thus look on the Bible; for it is a letter from our Father in heaven. So feel, and so read; and you will not grow weary of the good book.

These few hints are enough for once. Will not our little readers remember them, and read every day, with great attention, the book of God? We love to see children, as we sometimes do, take their little Bibles every morning, and sit down to read a chapter, without waiting for any one to tell them. Read often, and love to read, dear children, and you will not forget it.

Blessed Bible:—

"Thou truest friend man ever knew,
Thy constancy I've tried;
Where all were false, I found thee true,
My counsellor and guide.

The mines of earth no treasure give
That could this volume buy;
In teaching me the way to live,
It taught me how to die."

Golden Rule.

Children and Men.

Here is a saying of the Scriptures which you may think hard to be understood. The apostle commands us all to be both men and children. You will ask, How is this possible? Let us read and see. Here we have it, in 1 Cor. 14: 20:—"Brethren, be not children in understanding: howbeit, in malice be ye children, but in understanding be MEN."

Children, in comparison with men, are weak: they cannot do what men can: they require persons to watch over and take care of them until they grow up to be able to take care of themselves. And the apostle's meaning is, Get wisdom; be prudent; understand your duty; learn the will of God. In all this try to be like men in comparison with children,—of full size, strong, and knowing what to do. But in malice, quarrelling, hatred, and all unkindness, be weak and helpless as children are in comparison with men.

Few children in very early life have those feelings which may be called malice, or at least, in anything like the strength that it appears in some men. Be, then, all your lives children in this respect. Do not allow yourselves to hate any one. Try to love all. Seek the good of all.

There are no real contradictions in the Bible. Whatever looks like it may be explained.

Speak to the Stranger.

A boy, says a merchant, came into my store years ago, bright, intelligent-looking, desiring me to purchase some goods he had for sale. I felt called upon to say a word to him about his soul, so I merely remarked:

"Do you enjoy religion?"
"No, I don't think much about it."
"Well, don't you think you ought to?"
"Oh, I don't know how to go at it."

I gave him some advice, and he departed. In about a week he came back again, when I found him yet without a knowledge of the Savior. A short time after he came again, and upon my asking how he felt, he replied with rejoicing that the Savior was precious to him, that God had blessed his soul. That young man is now preaching the Gospel.

The Rich Man and Lazarus.

BY J. HOWELL.

No. 4.

TEXT.—"The rich man also died, and was buried; and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom."—Lk. 16: 22, 23.

Observe a few extracts from Dr. Kitto's Biblical Lit., vol. I, pp. 797–9 on the term "Hades, a Greek word by which the Septuagint translates the Hebrew 'sheol,' denoting the abode or world of the dead, in which sense it occurs frequently in the New Testament, where it is usually rendered 'hell' in the English version. The word hades means literally that which is in darkness. . . . The question whether this (that is, hades, is the receptacle of souls existing in a separate state,) is or is not the doctrine of the Scriptures, is one of much importance, and has, first and last, excited no small amount of discussion. It is a doctrine received by a large portion of the nominal christian church; and it forms the foundation of the Roman Catholic doctrine of purgatory, for which there would be no ground but for this interpretation of the word hades.

The question, therefore, rests entirely upon the interpretation of this word. In the classical writers it is used to denote Orcus, or the infernal regions. At the first view the classical signification would seem to support the sense above indicated. On further consideration, however, we are referred back to the Hebrew sheol: for the Greek term did not come to the Hebrews from any classical source, or with any classical meanings, but through the Septuagint as a translation of their own word; and whether correctly translating it or not is a matter of critical opinion. The word hades is, therefore, in no wise binding upon us in any classical meaning which may be assigned to it. The real question, therefore, is, what is the meaning which sheol bears in the Old Testament, and hades in the New?

A careful examination of the passages in which these words occur will probably lead to the conclusion, that they afford no real sanction to the notion of an intermediate place of the kind indicated, but are used by inspired writers to denote the grave—the resting place of the bodies both of the righteous and the wicked; and that they are also used to signify hell, the abode of miserable spirits. But it would be difficult to produce any instance in which they can be shown to signify the abode of the spirits of just men made perfect, either before or after a resurrection."

Here Dr. Kitto gives up one class of the supposed living spirit residents of hades. Dr. Enoch Pond, Knapp and Mayer [illegible]. He continues:

"In the great majority of instances sheol is in the Old Testament used to signify the grave, and in most of these cases it is so translated in the authorized version. It can bear no other meaning in such texts [illegible] as Gen. 37: 35; 42: 38; 1 Sam. 2: 6; 1 Kings 2: 6; Job 14: 13; 17: 13, 16; and in numerous other passages in the writings of David, Solomon and the prophets. But as the grave is regarded by most persons, and was more especially so by the ancients, with awe and darkness, so the word denoting it soon came to be applied to that more dark and gloomy world which was to be the abiding place of the miserable."

Observe, it does not literally mean such a place, but for the above reason the word "came to be applied" thus, and that is to the place of final punishment.

Again. "Where our translators supposed the word to have this sense, they rendered it by 'hell.' Some of the passages in which this has been done may be doubtful; but there are others of which a question can scarcely be entertained; such are those (as Job 11: 8; Ps. 139: 8; Amos 9: 2;) in which the word denotes the opposite of heaven, which cannot be the grave, nor the general state or region of the dead, but hell. . . . The word hell is not the Scriptural antithesis of heaven, but earth. See Isa. 55: 9; Ps. 103: 11; Matt. 24: 35.

Still more decisive are such passages as Ps. 9: 17; Prov. 23: 9; in which sheol cannot mean any place, in this world or the next, to which the righteous as well as the wicked are sent, but the penal abode of the wicked as distinguished from and opposed to the righteous. The only case in which such passages could by any possibility be supposed to mean the grave, would be if the grave—that is, extinction—were the final doom of the unrighteous."

Well, that is exactly their doom; therefore Dr. Kitto's texts are no objections to the unconsciousness of man in death, for they apply to the future punishment of the wicked. Dr. Kitto then says:

"In the New Testament the word hades is used in much the same sense as sheol in the Old, except that in a less proportion of cases can it be construed to signify 'the grave.' There are still, however, instances in which it is used in this sense, as in Acts 2: 31; 1 Cor. 15: 55; but in general, the hades of the New Testament appears to be no other than the world of future punishment. (E. G. Matt. 11: 23; 16: 18; Lk. 16. 23.)—Dr. Enoch Pond, on the intermediate place, in the American Biblical Repository, for April, 1841, whom we have here chiefly followed.—Dr. Kitto."

In reply to the last remarks, on the term hades denoting "no other than the world of future punishments," we suggest that this is impossible if Rev. 20: 13, 14 is any authority on this point, as good as Dr. Pond. We think it rather more reliable. That positively declares two things.

First, that hades delivers up the dead, as does death, "which are IN it."

Secondly. That death and hades were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. "And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire."—Rev. 20: 15. "Hades," then, after delivering up its charge, is itself destroyed where the wicked are; therefore it cannot denote the place of future punishment. As to its meaning, by reference to the margin, it will be seen that the translators understood it to mean "the grave."—Rev. 20: 13.

The Scriptures referred to at the close of Dr. Pond's article we have already examined, and as the positive declaration in Rev. 20: 13, 14 defines hades as the receptacle of the dead, by affirming that it delivers up the dead which are IN it, we deny that the term hades is applied once, Scripturally, to signify the place of separate conscious life spirit entities, and those who believe that to be the case are under obligation to either prove it, or relinquish it, by every principle of moral right. The definition we have suggested from the verbal declaration of Rev. 20: 13, 14, is perfectly justified by the comparison of the terms employed in verse 13. The term "sea" refers to place. "Death" to state. "Hades" to place. The "dead" come from the places—the sea and hades, and from the state of death. "The dead" from the sea, death, and hades, are in the last clause of verse 13 denominated "man." "And they (the dead,) were judged every man according to their works." Let it be remembered that the term "man" is never appropriated, in a single Scripture text, to designate any thing supposed to be in or of man, or living independently of man, called spirit, which is in the neuter gender, but the term man is always masculine. "Man," then, is in the sea, death, and hades; and at the resurrection of the dead, the sea, death, and hades, will deliver up the dead which are in them; therefore, hades is the receptacle of the dead.

Should any one affirm that the term hades must sometimes signify the state of death, or decide with Mr. Wakefield, that "the universal meaning of hades is the state [illegible] of death, because the term sepulchrum, or grave, is not strictly applicable to such as have been consumed by fire;" this would in no respect invalidate the above definition, for then it would only be the term which would express the state into which the dying were received, and at the resurrection could deliver up the dead which are in it. The heathen notion, then, of hades being the abode of separate living conscious spirit entities, is perfectly exploded by the clear shining light of Rev. 20: 13, 14; and the term hades, in Lk. 16: 23, is proved to be employed parabolically, otherwise it is positively contradictory of Revelation.

In view of this, and the fact stated by Dr. Pond, quoted by Dr. Kitto, that the doctrine of conscious spirit existence "forms the foundation of the Roman Catholic doctrine of purgatory, for which there would be no ground but for this interpretation of the word hades—that the question, therefore, rests entirely upon the interpretation of this word—that the word hades is therefore in no wise binding upon us in any classical meaning which may be assigned to it"—the manner in which, as he above remarks, the word "came to be applied" to the place of the miserable—that the passages where these words occur "afford no real sanction to the notion of an intermediate place of the kind indicated;" and the fact, that "the only case in which such passages could by any possibility be supposed to mean the grave, would be if the grave [or death state,] that is, extinction, were the final doom of the unrighteous;"—and that such is their doom, there being no future eternal life out of Jesus Christ, how can we possibly come to any other conclusion, with the word of God in our hands, than that the record of the rich man and Lazarus is a parable, and a parable only? O let us never build a theory of conscious spirit existence on a parable, and especially upon a parable in which there cannot be found a noun expressive of such an entity, or to which the pronoun, supposed or imagined to designate it, must exist without any noun to which it can sustain a truly grammatical relation.

The parable of the rich man and Lazarus was never originated to prove any such sentiment, which is at the same time subversive of the revealed design of the resurrection—the basis principle of purgatory—the support of the devil's literary contribution, (Gen. 3: 4)—the fuel to feed, and the wind to fan, the fire of heathen sacrifices—the only energizing life principle of modern demonology—a positive denial of the literal import of the Scriptures, instituting an imaginary penalty with which to punish the sinner, in opposition to the time when, and the place where, the Bible affirms the wicked shall be punished.

O let us believe God that "the dead know not any thing," and that where they are "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom IN the sheol (grave) whither thou goest."

For the Crisis.

Time of the End.

BY J. HEMENWAY.

(Concluded.)

Having given our reasons for doubting that A. D. 525 is the starting point for the 1290 years, our doubts are increased, when we look for events in 1815, to fulfill the prophecy that marks the commencement of the time of the end. The events that mark the commencement of the time of the end are named in the following scriptures: Dan. 11: 35.—"And some of them of understanding shall fall, to try them, and to purge, and to make them white, even to the time of the end." In verse 40 of chap. 11, we have another event marked, which was to transpire at the time of the end. This verse reads as follows: "And at the time of the end shall the king of the south push at him, and the king of the north shall come against him, like a whirlwind, with chariots, and with horsemen, and with many ships; and he shall enter into the countries, and shall overflow and pass over."

What events are we to look for to determine where the time of the end commences? 1st. The great tribulation must end, or the people of God must cease to be put to death by the civil power of Rome, in connection with the church of Rome. Did the persecution under papacy continue up to 1815? It is said that the last act of that power in persecuting the church was about A. D. 1814. If that is the point, then the time of the end commenced in 1814, instead of 1815, and the days would have ended in 1850. If the ending of the persecution marks the time of the end, then of course we must commence the time of the end at the point of time where the persecution ends; not a year or more after. The next event to be noticed that determines where the time of the end commences is in verse 40. "AT the time of the end shall the king of the south push at him, and the king of the north shall come against him like a whirlwind, with chariots, and with horsemen, and with many ships, and he shall enter into the countries and shall overflow and pass over. He shall enter into the glorious land and many countries shall be overthrown: but these shall escape out of his hand, even Edom, and Moab, and the chief of the children of Ammon. He shall stretch forth his hand also upon the countries; and the land of Egypt shall not escape. But he shall have power over the treasures of gold and of silver, and over all the precious things of Egypt: and the Lybians and the Ethiopians shall be at his steps. But tidings out of the east and out of the north shall trouble him: therefore he shall go forth with great fury to destroy, and utterly to make away many. And he shall plant the tabernacles of his palaces between the seas in the glorious holy mountain; yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help him."—Dan. 11: 40—45.

What event in the foregoing testimony marks the commencement of the time of the end? Is it when the king of the south pushes at a certain king?—or is it when the king of the north "comes against him?"—or when he shall "pass over?"—or when he enters the "glorious land?"—or when he "shall plant the tabernacles of his palaces between the seas in the glorious holy mountain?" Which of the above named events marks the commencement of the time of the end? They all take place in the time of the end, but some one of them must be the one that marks the commencement. I think it must be clearly seen that the language of the prophet settles the question beyond all dispute. "At the time of the end shall the king of the south push at him." The time of the end commences when the king of the south pushes at the certain king; this is the first act, and it must be the event from which to commence the time of the end. If we can ascertain who the king is that is pushed at, then I think there will be no difficulty in determining who the king of the south is.

The question before us is, who is the him to be pushed at? In order to settle this question it will be necessary to go back, for him being a pronoun must refer to some noun spoken of in a previous part of the prophecy. The individual spoken of, can be found nowhere nearer the 40th verse than in the 36th. All who will take the trouble to read from the 36th to the 40th verses inclusive, will readily discover that the him that is pushed at is the king that shall do according to his will. Who then is this king? To this question there are various answers. But those that entertain the view that 1815 is the point where the time of the end begins, take the position that the power here spoken of is "the abomination of desolation," or the power that is connected with the church of Rome at this time; and that it is France. If so, then of course Spain is the king of the south, and England is the king of the north. If this position be right, then we must look for Spain to push at France, as the event by which we can determine where the time of the end commences. I now refer to history to see when the king of the south pushed at the willful king.

"Allison, in his history of Europe, states that Jan. 14, 1809, a treaty was entered into between England and Spain, offensive and defensive. His language is as follows: 'At length, the 14th of January, Mr. Canning had the satisfaction of signing a treaty of peace and alliance between the two states, by which it was stipulated that the King of England shall assist to the utmost of his power in the struggle against the tyranny and usurpation of France, and promises not to acknowledge any other King of Spain and the Indies than Ferdinand VII., his heirs, or such lawful successors as the Spanish nation shall acknowledge; and the Spanish government engages never, in any case, to cede to France any part of the territories or possessions of the Spanish monarchy, in any part of the world; and both the high contracting parties agree to make common cause against France, and not to make peace but by common consent.' He continues in the following words:—'When it is recollected that this treaty was concluded after the Spanish armies had been utterly routed and dispersed by the overwhelming forces of Napoleon, when their capitol was taken, more than half their provinces overrun, and on the very day the British forces embarked at Corunna, after their disastrous retreat from Leon, it must be admitted that the annals of the world do not afford a more sublime example of constancy in adversity, and heroic fidelity to engagements on the part of both the contracting powers.'

'The spirits of the Spaniards, which had been sunk to an extraordinary degree by the disasters of the preceding campaign, the capture of their capitol, and retreat of the English troops from Galicia, were first revived by the intelligence of the treaty so opportunely and generously concluded by Great Britain, at the moment of their greatest depression, by which she engaged never to conclude a separate peace with Napoleon; and by the resolution expressed in parliament by the ministers, notwithstanding the gloomy foreboding of the opposition, never to abandon the cause of Spanish independence. * * * * The central junta, which was now established at Deville, issued an animated proclamation to their countrymen, in which, after recounting the propitious circumstances which were now appearing in their favor, they strongly recommended the general adoption of the guerilla system of warfare, and renewed their protestations never to make peace while a single Frenchman polluted the Spanish territory.'"

All can see by the above, that Spain was the leading power in the alliance against France, and that previous to this alliance of 1809, Spain had pushed at France, and had failed, hence the alliance with England. If we are to take Spain for the king of the south, and France for the willful king, then our date for the commencement of the time of the end would be as early as 1809. Time has proved that to be wrong, hence, we must conclude that there is a wrong application of scripture somewhere.

It is said that 1815 is the point from which to commence the time of the end, from the fact that England, in alliance with other nations, overthrew Napoleon, who was at the head of the French empire. Admitting the facts in the case, there is a difficulty. England is taken to be the king of the north, and the prophecy makes the king of the north coming against him, the second event in the time of the end. It will not answer to the prediction of the prophet to say that Spain was in the alliance of 1814 with England; because the king of the north is the leading power in the war of 1815. In the prophecy, we have first, the king of the south as the leading power against the certain king. Second, we have the king of the north as the leading power;—now which of these powers is it that moves first? The king of the south. Then, of course, when this power pushes at the willful king there is where the time of the end begins; not where many powers under the direction of the king of the north come against him and "overflow and pass over."

Then again, it is doing violence to the prophecy to couple these events together, and call it the fulfillment of the prediction of the prophet,—"At the time of the end shall the king of the south push at him;" when the events are some six years apart. But some may say, the work was commenced by the king of the south, about 1809, and the events of 1815 completed the work; and that we should commence the time of the end where the work is completed. The prophet does not say that the completion of the work commences the time of the end; but that it is when the king of the south pushes at the willful king. It is not proper to bring the Bible to our opinions, but we should bring our opinions to the Bible; and when we find that the scripture conflicts with our interpretation of some prophecy, we should give up our theories rather than make the scripture bend to our views.

It is evident to my mind, that there is a wrong application of events to prophecy somewhere in the theory that makes the time of the end commence in 1815; and I think that it may be seen plainly, that one wrong application is in calling the events of 1815, the king of the south pushing at the willful king. In this article, I have given some of my reasons for doubting that 1815 is the point where the time of the end commences, and I have many more that I might bring forward, but my article is lengthened out much longer than I intended when I began.

Let us have a mind to search the scriptures, and learn what is there taught; and while we love the time of reward, and rejoice in the evidences of the coming of our Lord being near at hand, let us not be so earnest to get the time, as to misapply scripture to make it out. A mistake of faith in relation to the matter, will not help on the cause of truth, but rather serve to lessen confidence in that which is good. May the Lord help us to be humble, gentle and Christ-like, that we may walk in the light, that we may be ready for the coming of the Just One.

THE TESTIMONY OF A CHRISTIAN LIFE.—"I never saw christianity so well and so palpably imaged forth in the whole walk and conversation as in the life of Alexander Anderson. His life I reckon of more value than all the 'Evidences of Christianity' I have ever read. He was the best and the most loveable man I have yet known, or now ever expect to know in this world."—Memoir, by Rev. N. L. W[illegible].

For the Crisis.

A Demonstration as to the Extirpation of Evil.

There are three primal parts of Holy Scripture which combine to demonstrate the utter extirpation of all evil—human and infernal—of man or the devil. Then as this Scriptural demonstration is confirmed by the still higher moral demonstration derived from the known necessities of the case, and the loving character of the Almighty, it is truth. Beyond all peradventure it is solid like the "Rock of ages." Note its immovable bases.

I. The Lord's prayer embodies and expresses the idea of the earth's entire purification—"Thy kingdom come; thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." Each part and all parts, without exception, are here embraced. The whole earth is then the subject and the sphere of this inspired prayer.

An answer to this prayer will secure the will of God done in earth as it is in heaven. This will be good enough! Heaven is the highest sphere of purity, prosperity and perfection; and this will be transferred to earth, and "fill the whole earth as the waters cover the sea." This will be full enough! No crook or crevice, hollow or hole in the sea is left unfilled.

Other forms of this prayer (Ps. 7: 9, 104: 35) destroy the wicked "out of the earth," and bring wickedness to an end. Then this wide world, in all its length and breadth, will be the counterpart of heaven. The heaven and earth, however, comprehend the creation of God from the beginning; and hence it is clear that this prayer reaches on to the purposed perfection of all things spoken in Christ.—Eph. 1: 10.

II. The ultimate prophecies take the same all comprehending range, reaching to the killing of the old serpent, the destruction of death and hell,—nay, to the destruction of the works of the devil.—Gen. 3: 15; Hos. 13: 14; Rev. 20: 14; 1 Cor. 15: 26, 54: Heb. 2: 14; 1 John 3: 8. The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head; which process always kills. "Destroy death and him that hath the power of death, that is, the devil." "Death and hell shall be cast into the lake of fire." "O hell, I will be thy destruction!" Death itself will be destroyed." "If any plead for Baal," let them hear it. Let their enemies (if they be divinities or abiding realities,) plead for themselves. In the name of the Lord their doom is pronounced—their sentence sealed. When this blessed end shall have been obtained, the Lord's prayer may be fairly answered; but not till then.

III. The promises as ultimated in prophetic vision, are alike lofty, far-reaching and complete; and always extend on to absolute, universal, and everlasting perfection in the new heaven and new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness—righteousness only and always. Amen. 1 Chron. 16: 23–30; Ps. 46; 47; 72; 150; Isa. 65: 17; Hag. 2: 6-7; Heb. 12: 26; 2 Pet. 3: 12–14; Rev. 21: 1–4; 22: 3. Then all things that shall exist will be "new"—made perfect; for there will be no more curse—no more death, sorrow, crying, pain; for the former things will have passed away. Every thing that hath breath will then praise the Lord. "Every creature in heaven, and on the earth and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them heard I saying, blessing and honor, and glory and power be unto Him that sitteth on the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever. Amen."

Thus the prayer will be answered, the prophecy fulfilled, and the full measure of prophetic vision verified. "God's glory will cover the heavens, and the earth be full of his praise."

Take this syllogism.

These numerous, harmonious, and primary portions of the Holy Scriptures are truth.—John 17: 17; 2 Tim. 3: 16.

But the truth is the right representation of the facts in the case.

Therefore death and devil, and sin and hell, shall be destroyed; and this was the point to be demonstrated.

Again. This destruction of enemies is said to be moral (or spiritual.) But moral applies to lawful, upright and beneficial. Therefore, the idea of a moral destruction makes death and devil and hell lawful! Which at once confounds the objector, and compels us to fall back on the conclusion that the destruction is real.

Death is the eldest born of sin, which is a rebel from birth, and ought never to have been born at all. It is only an outlaw that must be taken and in due time destroyed. The devil deserves destruction beyond all rebels against heaven, because he is the arch rebel. Hell is the grand cesspool—the receptacle of the offscouring and pollution of death and the devil—in a [illegible] world. By consequence their destruction can but be literal and real. The Lord will bring forth judgment unto victory. This victory leaves no place for their foes in heaven or in earth. Their "place shall not be."—Ps. 37: 10. God is love—sin is the abominable thing that he hates. But the Lamb of God is to take away the sin of the world. Therefore sin must cease in the universe of God. Amen.

The Sleeping Church.

"They all slumbered and slept."—MATT. 25: 5.

After giving the prescription in the 24th chapter, "Therefore be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh; our Lord illustrates it by this most instructive parable. The portion of it which I select for special meditation is, "All of them slumbered and slept." Instead of watching—the duty enjoined in the previous chapter, and the duty which the parable is spoken to illustrate in this chapter—they all of them, mark you, christian and unchristian, the foolish five and the wise five, slumbered and slept; five of them slept so soundly that they lost the glorious and golden opportunity, and the other five only awoke or were awakened with difficulty, and trimmed their lamps, and, according to the custom of eastern marriages, went out in the dark with their lamps burning, to accompany the bridegroom to the festal scenes which were on such occasions to take place.

I will try here to illustrate the nature of the sleep which these virgins slept. It is sinful, perilous; and unless awakened from by some great interposition, it issues still in the sleep of death.

The Spirit not only enjoins watchfulness, but guards against sleeping. "Let us not sleep as do others; they that sleep, sleep in the night." Constantly we are warned against sleeping, not with the eyelids, for that is nature; but with the heart, the conscience, the intellect, for that would be sin. There are three sorts of sleep spoken of in the Bible: there is the sleep which nature needs,— which is natural and necessary. There is another sleep which the Bible often speaks of; "They that sleep in Christ;" "Them that sleep in Christ will he bring with him." * * * * *

"Tired nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep,"

There is, lastly, the sleep here spoken of that sleep which is fraught with peril; that inner insensibility which ruined the five foolish virgins, and from the opiate power of which the wise virgins were snatched as if by a miracle.

* * * *

A christian falling asleep, in the moral sense of that word, not only fails to take an interest in those subjects already referred to; he also lays himself open to Satan, who like a ravenous lion, goes about seeking whom he may devour; or to evil passions, that, like serpents, twine round his heart and sting him to the quick; or he falls so sound asleep upon the pillow of a fancied security, that some great moral catastrophe ends his sleep in that sleep from which there is no awaking. The most useless life is the most defenceless state. In sleep there is also waste and decay. If a man were to sleep long enough, he would die of inanition. We do not eat and drink when we are asleep; we simply rest. Apply this to sleeping christians, to the virgins that slept. They raise no cry for bread, "Evermore give us this living bread;" they have no sense of hunger; they utter no cry, "Give us this living water, that we may thirst [illegible]" they do not feel the need [illegible] Savior, salvation; they are [illegible] they feel no want, and they [illegible] and if they sleep long enough [illegible] necessarily in the sleep of death [illegible] the perils of spiritual sleep, as [illegible] and suggested by the very expression [illegible] are employed by our blessed Lord [illegible] he says these virgins slumbered and [illegible] What is the cause of this moral or spiritual sleep? The first is either entertaining doctrines that are positively false, or turning to a wrong account doctrines that are in themselves true.

"A second cause of this sleepiness is taking too great and absorbing interest in any of the pursuits or things of this world. Our danger lies less in crossing the line which forms the margin of forbidden things, and more in being absorbed altogether in things most lawful, but in their excess provocative of a sleep from which we may never be aroused. The things of this world, be it science, or literature, or [illegible] it any of those amusements, enjoyments and employments which in themselves are intrinsically right, [illegible] create this stupor in relation to religious things.

Not only does outward prosperity [illegible] this sleep, but even health has too [illegible]

Promised Grace.

BRO. GRANT:—May I speak again through the columns of the "Crisis," to those poor souls who are panting for the life-giving water, and yet, from various causes, are prevented from coming to the fountain and drinking a full supply?

It has seemed to me that I had exhausted my resources in endeavoring to point out the difficulties, and the way of deliverance; but a letter received a day or two since from a sister who has perused those numerous articles, and yet lingers around the pool, longing, yet fearing to step in, and be made every whit whole, has awakened my sympathies, and stirred me up to write [illegible] words of encouragement to [illegible] exercised. She will pardon [illegible] to some of the statements made in her letter, they may meet the eye of others who have the same difficulties to encounter.

She, too, as did the other who wrote me, feels that she lacks something she once possessed, before so much opposition was manifested against "women's improving in Sabbath meetings." It seems that the unpopularity of female testimony on the Sabbath brought a heavy cross that she was not willing to bear, and her will rose in opposition to God's will in the matter, and consequently that power and fulness of the Spirit that she had previously enjoyed, left her when this unsubmission was yielded to, and now she labors, and struggles, and weeps before the Lord, because of the lack of former peace; and when she would try to believe on the Lord Jesus, she is crushed with the thought of her unworthiness, and dares not look to Jesus, and give herself to him fully and forever.

Now this dear soul is not alone in her experience. Many, no doubt, who read this article will say, "There, that is just the way I feel, precisely!" Yes, you had this power—this fullness—this assurance of faith and love for the work once, but in an evil hour you laid your hand sacrilegiously upon the altar and took therefrom the consecrated offering,—you robbed God of that solemnly dedicated to his service, and he no longer had your permission to work in you both to will and to perform,— and what was the result? "A lack within"—a "something wanting." You no longer waited with obedient heart upon the Lord, as the faithful servant waits upon his master. True, you performed some duties, but not all. You did not give up prayer, oh, no! but no longer had you access by faith within the vail; no longer could you prevail mightily with God, and bring the blessing down by faith upon your soul. Sometimes you talked, but although your words were well enough, they had not the ring of former days—they did not have the life—the unction in them, penetrating the hearts of others [illegible]. Your outward deportment was just the same; but the spiritually-minded could discern your lack of former spiritualism.

Some of you have known your loss, and refused to confess it. You have gone right on as though the kernel was still within the shell, but the heart could not enjoy, the soul could not exult in joyous victory; the deep movings of compassion that led you to weep and plead with and for the sinner; the burden that rested upon you for others is all gone; and though you now sometimes warn the ungodly, the heart-feeling is gone; the fountain of tears is dried up, the agony of prayer and labor is not there, and your testimony is powerless. There is something between thy soul and God, and you are too proud to let it be known.

How much to be preferred the brokenheartedness of the sister who pours out to me her grief, believing I can feel for her, and help her. Well, I can, thank God! I know just how; and why? Because I have felt just as she does. That is the reason. Can I help her? Only as the kind friend helps the sick man, when he tells him of a physician who he knows can cure him.

And now I am going to talk with you who are in the same position with her, about this same good Friend, who is the physician of the soul. This sister weeps and groans over her unhappy condition, and would see Jesus, and be restored to his love and enjoy his presence as in former times. But when she kneels to pray, she views herself as so unworthy, that she dares not come to him. Yet, she dares to tell me, a stranger, her feelings, and ask me to instruct her, and I do not have half so much love and sympathy for her, as Jesus does, and has had all the time. A very little of that love has been infused into my heart, and hence I do care for her, and if I could save her from all her sorrow, I would, but [illegible] and trusted in him to heal her soul.

How strange it would seem for a man who was ill, to say, "O, I wish I was well as I once was." "Well," says a friend, "why don't you call in Dr. L., he cured you right up when you was sick before?" "I will tell you why; it is because I am so very sick, I don't want to ask him to help me until I get better." And so the man suffers on, wishing he was well, but wont call on Dr. L. for medicine because he is sick. "Why that is the very reason he should call on him," say you; "I thought physicians were on purpose for sick ones, and not for people who are well." Indeed! is that your opinion? Well, I thought that a Savior was provided on purpose for sinners, but some have got it into their heads that it will not do for them to go to the Savior until they have become good, and worthy, and then perhaps he will receive them!

You may just as well say, "I wont eat, because I am hungry. I will wait until I do not feel hungry, and then I will eat!" What class does Jesus Christ receive? "He receiveth sinners and eateth with them." That is true, although a wicked man brought it as an accusation against him. For whom did he die? "For the ungodly." Who did he come to invite to the marriage feast? "Not the righteous, but sinners." To whom did he promise rest? To the "weary, and heavy laden." Would that I could so present Christ—so describe his love as to lead you to trust him!

I said I knew how to sympathize with the sister because I had experienced the same. That is why Jesus can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, having been tempted, and suffered just like us. It was for this very purpose he became "like unto his brethren," and "bore their griefs, and carried their sicknesses." Now, you often think Christ was Divine, and therefore could not feel for poor human nature, in its varied sorrows and sicknesses, but when you remember that he was made flesh and became a man of like passions with us, and was a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief, and tempted in all points like unto us, and that although not a sinner by actual transgression, yet that upon him were laid the iniquities of us all; when you think of all this, and read what he endured, you will not again suppose he does not know how to feel for you in all your sorrows. His mercy is a tender mercy—his love is more than a mother's—his benevolence beyond a father's—his friendship greater than a brother's.

Now, after affording you the greatest proof of this, by laying down his life for you, can you not trust him? Yes, you will. Your aching heart is even now saying, I "will give him my poor, sinful heart, that he may cleanse it with his blood, and make it fit for his abode. Henceforth I am His, to do his will in all things." Hark! Jesus responds to thy heartfelt desire. He speaks to thee: "Go in peace! Be of good cheer, thy sins are all forgiven thee." The tempest-tossed waves are hushed into stillness. A calm broods over the waters. Peace,—the Savior's dying legacy—is thine.

Trust in God.

When Moses led the host of Israel out of their land of bondage, he was followed with readiness and joy for a short time; their faith was strong in him, they felt that he was a true commander, and competent to lead them to a land of plenty, where they would be free from their enemies, and free to worship God in the way of their fathers. But soon they are surrounded on every side by danger, on either hand a wilderness, behind them the Egyptians, and before them the trackless sea. Their hearts fail them, their faith in their leader gone—oh, cry they, we had better served in Egypt than perish in this wilderness! No way of escape for us now, die we must or return.

But no, their leader appears, his eye sparkles with hope, his face radiant with holy confidence in God. He speaks, every eye is fixed upon him, as though his words would be life or death to them. His message is simple—understood by all. My God has commanded me to say to the children of Israel "Go forward." They obey, and are soon rejoicing on the banks of deliverance.

Fellow christian, how is it with thee? When you were in bondage to sin and the world, Christ appeared to you, and gently whispered, "Follow me, and I will give thee that liberty wherewith I make all my followers free." You have followed him with joy a little way; you have been happy in the journey; you have now taken your eyes from your leader and have looked behind; on either side and before you all looks dark; you are disheartened; you close your eyes, and fold your hands; and try to say "thy will be done, oh Lord."

Listen! a voice disturbs thy repose,—it is the voice of thy Leader saying, "Go forward!"

Christian, follow thy Divine Leader whithersoever he leads, even though it be through the sea. Go not back to the bondage of sin or Satan or the world. [illegible] the way be dark, press nearer to your Leader. Trust in God! He will lead [illegible]

The Return of our Lord to be waited for by his People.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

(Concluded.)

4. See that this waiting for Christ has its right practical influence by increasing your spirituality and heavenly-mindedness. Thus it is used in the Holy Scriptures. This hope may be received merely in the intellect and imagination as an interesting and impressive subject without sanctifying the heart. In this way received, it may fill us with dogmatic, positive assumptions, fancied superior knowledge, and cause us to despise more devoted brethren who may not yet see this hope, and thus occasion many stumbling-blocks to its reception. This is a painful abuse of this deep, scriptural truth. Its real use is to raise us continually heavenward, as the apostle teaches. Our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body. (Phil. 3: 20, 21.) All christians quickened together with Christ by the Spirit of God, are now raised up together, and made to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. (Ephes. 2: 6.) The Lord's coming is revealed to bring us to this state of mind. Set your affections on things above, and not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory. (Col. 3: 2—4.) The apostle John joins the same hope with more close abiding in Jesus and increasing purity. He that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as he is pure. (1 John 2: 28, 29; 3: 1—3.)

The more assuredly you can realize in your minds God's testimony to this truth, and the more steadily you can gaze on this blessed hope, looking for it and hastening unto it, the more you will be raised above earth-born cares, sorrows, and troubles, and your heart opened to noble and generous actings for God and his Church. You will be filled with scriptural and bright anticipations of heavenly glory. Its holy joy and happiness will be reflected in heavenly-mindedness, deadness to the world, Christian tempers, holy dispositions, and all the fruits of the Spirit, so that you shall rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory, and the joy of the Lord shall be your strength for every work tending to glorify his name and bless your fellow-men.

Lastly, Let us confess this hope of our Lord's coming before the world. Why has it yet had so little influence? We have been too much ashamed of our hope, and have hid our light under a bushel. Why has it not yet roused, to any great extent, the mocks of the scorner and the revilings of the world? The voice of testimony has hitherto been so feeble that the world has had no occasion to trouble itself about it: the world has not been disturbed in its false peace. Why is it carefully excluded from the mass of our religious periodicals and journals? The testimony to it, from those who hold it, has hitherto been so indistinct, that the conductors of such publications have no idea of the strength of conviction with which it is held by the faithful servants of Christ. We must be more open, bold, and decided in our profession, if we would make a real impression on the whole church of Christ.

Our blessed Master has told us, Let your lights be burning, and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord. This implies an open confession of our hope of his return. With the mouth confession is made unto salvation. This is one purpose which he has in view in our attendance on the Lord's Supper; to testify to others our hope that he who died for us will come again. And be it so that we meet with ridicule and reproach from even professing christians for this confession, let us take up this cross also. No doubt Noah had many a scoff and many a mockery to endure, while engaged for one hundred and twenty years in building the ark; yet by faith Noah being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house, by which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith. All the extravagances which, through the special enmity of Satan against this truth, any who may have professed it, may at any time have mingled with it, will be very possibly laid to our charge.

There is no doctrine against which that malignant adversary seems to have had more hatred, nor any which he has more striven to mix up with human infirmity. But the holy Bible ever leads us to combine true sobriety and moderation with the Lord's being at hand. Let us of the day be sober, putting on the breast-plate of faith and love, and for an helmet the hope of salvation. Again, we are told, Wherefore be sober and hope to the end, for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ. And again, Let your moderation be known unto all men. The Lord is at hand. Thus entirely separated from all enthusiasm, and thus intimately associated with all truth and sober-mindedness, in the holy Scriptures, is that doctrine of the Lord's speedy return and our waiting for him which we have now [illegible]

Indeed, these are the truths eminently suited to the very times through which we are passing; exactly calculated to meet all the errors and iniquities, the Infidelity, the Popery, and the lawlessness of these days. If God have given us this sure light in a dark place, let us lift it on high, and shine as lights in the world, holding forth the Word of life.

This is the seasonable truth for the people of Christ now; it is given by Christ himself, in a voice from heaven, in the account of the sixth vial, under which we are now living. Behold, I come as a thief; blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked and they see his shame. It is, then, clearly according to the mind of Christ that it should be distinctly announced and fully proclaimed. I call upon all his servants then, in the name of the great Lord and Master of all, to testify their hope of his return. Confess him before men, and he will confess you before the angels of God; yea, before his Father in heaven. Thus, when he shall appear, you shall have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming.—Bickersteth.

Light and Darkness.

I am old and blind—
Men point to me as smitten with God's frown;
Afflicted and deserted by my kind,
Yet I am not cast down.

I am weak, yet strong;
I murmur not that I no longer see;
Poor, old and helpless, I the more belong,
Father Supreme, to thee.

Oh! merciful One,
When men are farthest, then Thou art most near;
When friends pass by, my weakness shun,
Thy chariot I hear.

The glorious face
Is leaning toward me, and its holy light
Shines in upon my lonely dwelling place,
And there is no more night.

On my bended knees
I recognize thy purpose clearly shown;
My vision thou hast dimmed, that I may see
Thyself, thyself alone.

I have nought to fear—
This darkness is the shadow of thy wing;
Beneath it, I am almost sacred—here
Can come no evil thing.

Oh! I seem to stand
Trembling where no mortal foot e'er hath been,
Wrapt in the radiance of thy sinless land,
Which eye hath never seen.

Visions come and go,
Shapes of resplendent beauty round me throng;
From angels' lips I seem to hear the flow
Of soft and holy song.

It is nothing now,
When Heaven is opening on my sightless eyes,
When airs from Paradise refresh my brow,
The earth in darkness lies.

In a purer clime
My being fills with rapture—waves of thought
Roll in upon my spirit—strains sublime
Break upon me unsought.

Give me now my lyre,
I feel the stirrings of a gift divine;
Within my bosom glows unearthly fire,
Lit by no skill of mine.

MILTON.

For the Crisis.

Faint, yet Pursuing.

BRO. GRANT:—On leaving the many at Wilbraham last fall, who expressed so much sympathy in my behalf, it was their request that I should communicate through the Crisis my whereabouts, etc. Weeks and months have rapidly flown away, and still no communication has been received from me. Well, causes there are many. An unsettled knowledge for several weeks succeeding my ordination where my lot would be cast, was one reason. My mind became so engaged in the new truths I had embraced, that sleepless nights and loss of appetite were the consequence. I then made less application to study, and labored in the open air. I soon found the change very beneficial. I did not lose any of my interest in Bible subjects, but only kept it in check.

About the middle of last November, Bro. J. Covell, of Muscatine, Iowa, commenced a correspondence with me, relative to my locating among the advent brethren in that place and vicinity. I felt it a duty to go, but had not the means then. Of course, duty had nothing to do with impossibilities. After the lapse of a few weeks, a draft was sent me, the value of which would procure my transportation to that place, where duty seemed to call. Having decided advantageously for a life partnership in the loss and profits of life's joys and sorrows, the decision soon became an action, the notice of which appeared in the Crisis. Farewell visits were made among relatives and friends. A contemplated time for departing to the West had nearly come, when sickness laid its hand heavily upon Mrs. D——, making her a great sufferer. Here I am in the sick room, doing all in my power to relieve weary, restless humanity. Weeks have thus passed—night and day of almost ceaseless watchings. To-day physical exhaustion has almost if not quite reached an irremediable depth. How uncertain is the consummation of human decisions! The reason why Bro. Pratt and the Western brethren were disappointed in not seeing me at the conference is thus made known.

Disappointments! who has them not? Affliction's valley! who [illegible] [illegible] heart may find in thee soothing power. But when will mortality cease aching, wasting, perishing? Blissful morning! the eye of faith can view thy glorious dawning. The "King in his beauty" will dedicate thy breaking. The immortal ones will chant thy welcome. Then will the prayer—"Thy kingdom come," be answered. Then will reunion follow separation. A farewell to sorrow will be read upon countenances once sad. Those who have loved will meet again. Fadeless will be the eye, unfaltering the tongue, and no longer tremulous the limbs oft wearied while on life's pilgrimage. Though the way was thorny, it has culminated now in the promised highway.

Weary pilgrim to the heavenly Mecca and New Jerusalem, still pursue thy journeyings. The evergreen pasture will soon be seen. The Life Restorer will soon appear. How soon, I do not know. I pray, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly!" Precious ones are held captive in death. A loved brother was last Sunday looked upon for the last time, previous to depositing in the tomb. His was the christian's hope. As day after day I hear of the death of this or that loved one, I feel that the enemy will not always revel in chilled blood and saddened hearts. His finale is written.

Bro. Grant and beloved pilgrims, contend earnestly; not for principalities and powers, but for "the Faith"—not of human origin, but that "once delivered to the saints." As for me, I have a settled preference to serve the Lord. Whether finally faithful, the recording angel will reveal in that day when life-long works are to be tried.

Selections.

Nearing Deliverance.

According to the most competent, because inspired judge, the future is to be hailed and prayed for, not deprecated by the christian, as if it unbosomed only calamity.

"For now is our salvation nearer than when we believed."—ROM. 13: 11.

The salvation referred to by Paul is unquestionably that large and comprehensive deliverance which is the destiny of all created things, and of all the living rational and responsible beings who have believed in Christ, and are regenerated by his Spirit. Personal salvation is an experience of the present; the salvation alluded to is a fact that lies still in the future. It is not individual safety, but the general salvation of the whole body of the church, to which Paul refers. It is time to awake, because our salvation, or deliverance, is nearer than when we believed; and the night, which means the whole of this existing economy, is far spent; the day, which means the future, everlasting sun shine, that spreads over all the earth, when Christ takes to him his great power, and sways his scepter from sea to sea, is near at hand. He speaks of that future deliverance, which he describes in the 8th chapter of Romans, as the manifestation of the sons of God: the redemption of the earth from its groans, its travail, and its expectancy, and that restoration of all things which had been spoken of by the prophets, and is the distinctive feature of that millennial day which approaches faster and nearer as the centuries roll on. Few can fail to be struck, in reading the epistles of St. Paul, with his constant statement of the nearness and the instancy of the advent of our Lord. He says in one passage, "The Lord is at hand;" in another passage, "looking for that blessed epiphany, the glorious appearing of Jesus Christ, our great God and Savior." St. James says, "Be patient; the Lord is at hand; the Judge is at the door." Nor can any fair reader of the epistles of St. Paul escape constantly perceiving, not a mere matter of hope, but of fact, that the motive and the hope that he puts before christians is not the nearness of their death, but the instancy of the approach of their great and blessed hope, our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. In other words, the governing hope of the christian is not his own personal deliverance at death, but the coming of his Lord.

The day and the hour of his advent are uncertain; the fact of his advent is as certain as rising and as setting suns. If you are anxiously watching the return to your home of some one near and dear to you, how hard you will try to catch a familiar sound amid the wind or the pattering rain, or to see the distant shadow in the moonlight! You feel it your instinctive impulse to seek out any sign of the approach of one who is so intimately associated with you. The watcher on the distant heights looks intently into the east to catch the first beam of the rising sun; the voyager upon a broad and desert sea looks anxiously and often around if he can see some floating weed or some wheeling sea bird to indicate the nearing land, or the whitening cliffs of his native shore, or the mountain-range within the horizon that tell him that his home is at hand. The christian, not exempt from the feelings of all, nor forbidden to cherish them, will often look if he can see any signs of that glorious appearing, gilding with its orient beams the distant east. He will often compare sea, and star, and sky, and latitude and longitude with the revealed and inspired chart that not only lays down the fact that Christ will come, but has spread over it tokens, marks, signs, indications, by which you may gather the high probability that his approach is near.

The christian, like the voyager on a great sea, may often misinterpret; that is possible, for he is human; and in the difficult path of the unfulfilled to err is common. The mariner may take the piece of drift-wood that he finds upon the sea for a fragment too recently torn from the shore, indicating, therefore, his nearness to land, and it may have been long [illegible] lost its way, has been long at sea, and is sinking with fatigue. Or he may mistake that as the first ray of the rising sun, which is only a phosphorescent meteor. But incidental errors will not make him despair; they will only induce him more carefully to watch and wait, certain that the fact itself will be, and that phenomena indicative of its nearness will multiply as it approaches. So the christian may err—may seize some startling scene as appearing to him the token of its nearness; or he may interpret some voice in the wilderness as the sound of his chariot-wheels; or he may think that the transient blaze of the meteor is the burst of the morning sun; but if he find that he has fallen into error in so interpreting, he will not therefore despair, or give up his investigation. And far better have the character of him who intently looks, and in his intense longing treats that as a sign which is not, than the sceptic and freezing apathy of the man whose heart is dead, and whose hopes are cold, and who cares for and looks for none of these things. The incidental error of a few cannot shake or shatter the trust of the many; and the error that is made by one watcher for the advent will only lead another, like a buoy upon a wreck in the channel, to avoid the reef on which his predecessor may have suffered.

* * * *

But let me notice some of those events which lead us to anticipate, even more than the apostolic church could, the increasing nearness of these great changes. Can one fail to see all over Europe startling events? If earthquakes in divers places, if famines, if pestilences, and plagues, were to be among the earliest forerunners of a great change, are not these most conspicuous now? Does not every day's news bring accounts of them? Does not every paper reveal in different parts of the world one or more, or many, of these facts and phenomena?

* * * *

I ventured to show the complete fulfilment of the drying up of the Euphrates. If we can identify one fact in history with a specific symbol in the Apocalypse, and if the identification be so exact, complete, and so truly overlapping it that there can scarcely be a mistake, we not only ascertain the fulfillment of a given prophecy, but we ascertain the point of time we occupy in the great calendar of prophecy.

Now one of these events that were to take place under the sixth vial, when the unclean spirits were to gather the nations to that great war—not battle, but war—of Armageddon, was, that the great river Euphrates, the symbol of the Turkish power in Europe, from which the Turks started, and to which, as the reflux of a stream, they are going back again, should be dried up, so that the exhaustion of it, or the waning of the crescent, or the drying up of the Mahometan power in Europe, would be the fulfillment of that. This I stated many years ago, and within this present year we have seen the unmistakable fulfillment of it. And the correspondent of one of the daily papers, writing the other day, speaking of Turkey, says, "Her resources are utterly exhausted." God brings to pass the fulfillment of his own prediction, strangely, indeed, by the very process most justly employed by the western powers to keep up and prevent the evaporation of the great river Euphrates. In the same paper I read, "The admission of the Turkish state into the European system under the counsels and tutelage of the western powers is now inevitable;" that is, it is no longer to be an independent nationality. Of course it will not be; and I am quoting it simply as a proof of the fulfillment of that statement of the Apocalypse.

* * * *

Another great event that I have alluded to, which shows that our salvation is nearer than when we awoke, or, in other words, that there are tokens of the approach of that great era, is the unequivocal, the irresistible evidence of the decadence and the imminent destruction of that huge sacerdotal tyranny under which Europe has groaned, and which has struck its roots so deep into dynasties, and nations, and governments; I mean the Papal or Western Apostasy. Now this is an event, I may mention, that is one of the most important as a token in the whole Bible. The apostle says that an apostasy, headed by a Pope, the man of sin, should begin from Christ's first advent; and that it should be utterly destroyed by his second advent. He says, first of all, "Whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth;" that is, through the preaching of the gospel; and strike down, at a blow, with the brilliancy, the brightness, of his own personal advent. We read in the Apocalypse, that when the seventh vial is poured out, great Babylon comes into remembrance, to give her the judgment-cup, in drinking which her decay is to be precipitated, her consumption to go on, her sufferings to be increased. And then at the end of it an angel is to cry from heaven, "Babylon the great is fallen;" and her judgments are to come upon her in one day, and she is to sink like a millstone in the great waters.

* * * *

The Pope trembles in the Vatican. He has a presentiment of the nearness of his doom. What office in Europe would insure his Pontifical life for five years? Now just think what this power was in ancient days: a power that could force a German Emperor to remain doing penance amid the snows in the trenches around the imperial city, till the Pope gave him absolution; a power that could dispose of Britain's crown to whomsoever he pleased; the great power that reigned over the kings of the earth. "How are the mighty fallen! Is this the man that shook kingdoms, that made the earth to tremble? Is he become as one of us?" And what do recent events indicate? The decadence of the system to the very verge, when like the thief in the night, He comes whose right it is to reign; and the whole is struck down; and that great city is literally swallowed up and destroyed by fire; and the smoke of its torment begins to rise for ever and for ever.

* * * *

If this be the recorded state of things, it is another token that our salvation is nearer than when we believed. I do not quote more. I quote these two as prominent and striking foretokens; and the lesson that they all teach is not fear, not alarm, not terror; but, "Prepare, O Israel, to meet thy God." Behold the Bridegroom [illegible]

Reading for Youth.

The Bible.

A WORD TO BOYS AND GIRLS.

"O may these heavenly pages be
Our ever dear delight,
And still new beauties may we see,
And still increasing light."

We now present you the mode or manner of studying this sacred volume, that it may prove a savor of life unto life, not of death unto death.

1. Study the Bible with prayer for enlightenment, for the quickening, sanctifying influence of the Holy Spirit, that you may behold wondrous things out of God's law. We may read the Bible till gray, without that wisdom which cometh from above, and it will still be a dead letter. Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty.

"When the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth." John 16: 13.

2. Read the Bible regularly. A good man of old says: "I have esteemed the words of thy mouth more than my necessary food." This is the true idea. The Bible is daily bread, to be taken regularly, that the seed may grow thereby.

3. Read the Bible attentively. The meaning of the Bible is the Bible. Unless he that reads gets the meaning, it will not do him any good. Hasty reading of a great many chapters at once is of no advantage. Read slowly, a little at a time, and think on what you read, pray over it, and you will understand and remember it.

4. Read the Bible as God's book. Not merely because father or mother wish you to read it, but for a better reason, because God speaks to you in the Bible. When we have seen a little girl run in, her eyes sparkling with joy, crying: Oh! mother, here's a letter from father to me, for my name is on the outside," we always feel to wish she might thus look on the Bible; for it is a letter from our Father in heaven. So feel, and so read; and you will not grow weary of the good book.

These few hints are enough for once. Will not our little readers remember them, and read every day, with great attention, the book of God? We love to see children, as we sometimes do, take their little Bibles every morning, and sit down to read a chapter, without waiting for any one to tell them. Read often, and love to read, dear children, and you will not forget it.

Blessed Bible:—

"Thou truest friend man ever knew,
Thy constancy I've tried;
Where all were false, I found thee true,
My counsellor and guide.

The mines of earth no treasure give
That could this volume buy;
In teaching me the way to live,
It taught me how to die."

Golden Rule.

Children and Men.

Here is a saying of the Scriptures which you may think hard to be understood. The apostle commands us all to be both men and children. You will ask, How is this possible? Let us read and see. Here we have it, in 1 Cor. 14: 20:—"Brethren, be not children in understanding: howbeit, in malice be ye children, but in understanding be MEN."

Children, in comparison with men, are weak: they cannot do what men can: they require persons to watch over and take care of them until they grow up to be able to take care of themselves. And the apostle's meaning is, Get wisdom; be prudent; understand your duty; learn the will of God. In all this try to be like men in comparison with children,—of full size, strong, and knowing what to do. But in malice, quarrelling, hatred, and all unkindness, be weak and helpless as children are in comparison with men.

Few children in very early life have those feelings which may be called malice, or at least, in anything like the strength that it appears in some men. Be, then, all your lives children in this respect. Do not allow yourselves to hate any one. Try to love all. Seek the good of all.

There are no real contradictions in the Bible. Whatever looks like it may be explained.

Speak to the Stranger.

A boy, says a merchant, came into my store years ago, bright, intelligent-looking, desiring me to purchase some goods he had for sale. I felt called upon to say a word to him about his soul, so I merely remarked:

"Do you enjoy religion?"
"No, I don't think much about it."
"Well, don't you think you ought to?"
"Oh, I don't know how to go at it."

I gave him some advice, and he departed. In about a week he came back again, when I found him yet without a knowledge of the Savior. A short time after he came again, and upon my asking how he felt, he replied with rejoicing that the Savior was precious to him, that God had blessed his soul. That young man is now preaching the Gospel.

A Mother's Love.

Knowest thou so holy and so pure a flame,
Kindled on altars of the human breast,
Through chance, and change, and circumstance the same,—
Hath not thy mother's love stood all this test?
She loved thee ere thy life, and her love dies
Only when she hath breathed her latest breath:
Revere thy mother, and her tried love prize,
And emulate her holy christian faith.

Promised Grace.

BRO. GRANT:—May I speak again through the columns of the "Crisis," to those poor souls who are panting for the life-giving water, and yet, from various causes, are prevented from coming to the fountain and drinking a full supply?

It has seemed to me that I had exhausted my resources in endeavoring to point out the difficulties, and the way of deliverance; but a letter received a day or two since from a sister who has perused those numerous articles, and yet lingers around the pool, longing, yet fearing to step in, and be made every whit whole, has awakened my sympathies, and stirred me up to write [illegible] words of encouragement to th[illegible] exercised. She will pardon [illegible] to some of the statements made in her letter, they may meet the eye of others who have the same difficulties to encounter.

She, too, as did the other who wrote me, feels that she lacks something she once possessed, before so much opposition was manifested against "women's improving in Sabbath meetings." It seems that the unpopularity of female testimony on the Sabbath brought a heavy cross that she was not willing to bear, and her will rose in opposition to God's will in the matter, and consequently that power and fulness of the Spirit that she had previously enjoyed, left her when this unsubmission was yielded to, and now she labors, and struggles, and weeps before the Lord, because of the lack of former peace; and when she would try to believe on the Lord Jesus, she is crushed with the thought of her unworthiness, and dares not look to Jesus, and give herself to him fully and forever.

Now this dear soul is not alone in her experience. Many, no doubt, who read this article will say, "There, that is just the way I feel, precisely!" Yes, you had this power—this fullness—this assurance of faith and love for the work once, but in an evil hour you laid your hand sacrilegiously upon the altar and took therefrom the consecrated offering,—you robbed God of that solemnly dedicated to his service, and he no longer had your permission to work in you both to will and to perform,— and what was the result? "A lack within"—a "something wanting." You no longer waited with obedient heart upon the Lord, as the faithful servant waits upon his master. True, you performed some duties, but not all. You did not give up prayer, oh, no! but no longer had you access by faith within the vail; no longer could you prevail mightily with God, and bring the blessing down by faith upon your soul. Sometimes you talked, but although your words were well enough, they had not the ring of former days—they did not have the life—the unction in them, penetrating the hearts of others [illegible]. Your outward deportment was just the same; but the spiritually-minded could discern your lack of former spiritualism.

Some of you have known your loss, and refused to confess it. You have gone right on as though the kernel was still within the shell, but the heart could not enjoy, the soul could not exult in joyous victory; the deep movings of compassion that led you to weep and plead with and for the sinner; the burden that rested upon you for others is all gone; and though you now sometimes warn the ungodly, the heart-feeling is gone; the fountain of tears is dried up, the agony of prayer and labor is not there, and your testimony is powerless. There is something between thy soul and God, and you are too proud to let it be known.

How much to be preferred the brokenheartedness of the sister who pours out to me her grief, believing I can feel for her, and help her. Well, I can, thank God! I know just how; and why? Because I have felt just as she does. That is the reason. Can I help her? Only as the kind friend helps the sick man, when he tells him of a physician who he knows can cure him.

And now I am going to talk with you who are in the same position with her, about this same good Friend, who is the physician of the soul. This sister weeps and groans over her unhappy condition, and would see Jesus, and be restored to his love and enjoy his presence as in former times. [illegible] and trusted in him to heal her soul.

How strange it would seem for a man who was ill, to say, "O, I wish I was well as I once was." "Well," says a friend, "why don't you call in Dr. L., he cured you right up when you was sick before?" "I will tell you why; it is because I am so very sick, I don't want to ask him to help me until I get better." And so the man suffers on, wishing he was well, but wont call on Dr. L. for medicine because he is sick. "Why that is the very reason he should call on him," say you; "I thought physicians were on purpose for sick ones, and not for people who are well." Indeed! is that your opinion? Well, I thought that a Savior was provided on purpose for sinners, but some have got it into their heads that it will not do for them to go to the Savior until they have become good, and worthy, and then perhaps he will receive them!

You may just as well say, "I wont eat, because I am hungry. I will wait until I do not feel hungry, and then I will eat!" What class does Jesus Christ receive? "He receiveth sinners and eateth with them." That is true, although a wicked man brought it as an accusation against him. For whom did he die? "For the ungodly." Who did he come to invite to the marriage feast? "Not the righteous, but sinners." To whom did he promise rest? To the "weary, and heavy laden." Would that I could so present Christ—so describe his love as to lead you to trust him!

I said I knew how to sympathize with the sister because I had experienced the same. That is why Jesus can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, having been tempted, and suffered just like us. It was for this very purpose he became "like unto his brethren," and "bore their griefs, and carried their sicknesses." Now, you often think Christ was Divine, and therefore could not feel for poor human nature, in its varied sorrows and sicknesses, but when you remember that he was made flesh and became a man of like passions with us, and was a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief, and tempted in all points like unto us, and that although not a sinner by actual transgression, yet that upon him were laid the iniquities of us all; when you think of all this, and read what he endured, you will not again suppose he does not know how to feel for you in all your sorrows. His mercy is a tender mercy—his love is more than a mother's—his benevolence beyond a father's—his friendship greater than a brother's.

Now, after affording you the greatest proof of this, by laying down his life for you, can you not trust him? Yes, you will. Your aching heart is even now saying, I "will give him my poor, sinful heart, that he may cleanse it with his blood, and make it fit for his abode. Henceforth I am His, to do his will in all things." Hark! Jesus responds to thy heartfelt desire. He speaks to thee: "Go in peace! Be of good cheer, thy sins are all forgiven thee." The tempest-tossed waves are hushed into stillness. A calm broods over the waters. Peace,—the Savior's dying legacy—is thine.

Trust in God.

When Moses led the host of Israel out of their land of bondage, he was followed with readiness and joy for a short time; their faith was strong in him, they felt that he was a true commander, and competent to lead them to a land of plenty, where they would be free from their enemies, and free to worship God in the way of their fathers. But soon they are surrounded on every side by danger, on either hand a wilderness, behind them the Egyptians, and before them the trackless sea. Their hearts fail them, their faith in their leader gone—oh, cry they, we had better served in Egypt than perish in this wilderness! No way of escape for us now, die we must or return.

But no, their leader appears, his eye sparkles with hope, his face radiant with holy confidence in God. He speaks, every eye is fixed upon him, as though his words would be life or death to them. His message is simple—understood by all. My God has commanded me to say to the children of Israel "Go forward." They obey, and are soon rejoicing on the banks of deliverance.

Fellow christian, how is it with thee? When you were in bondage to sin and the world, Christ appeared to you, and gently whispered, "Follow me, and I will give thee that liberty wherewith I make all my followers free." You have followed him with joy a little way; you have been happy in the journey; you have now taken your eyes from your leader and have looked behind; on either side and before you all looks dark; you are disheartened; you close your eyes, and fold your hands; and try to say "thy will be done, oh Lord." Listen! a voice disturbs thy repose— it is the voice of thy Leader saying, "Go forward." [illegible]

The Return of our Lord to be waited for by his People.

PRACTICAL REMARKS.

(Concluded.)

4. See that this waiting for Christ has its right practical influence by increasing your spirituality and heavenly-mindedness. Thus it is used in the Holy Scriptures. This hope may be received merely in the intellect and imagination as an interesting and impressive subject without sanctifying the heart. In this way received, it may fill us with dogmatic, positive assumptions, fancied superior knowledge, and cause us to despise more devoted brethren who may not yet see this hope, and thus occasion many stumbling-blocks to its reception. This is a painful abuse of this deep, scriptural truth. Its real use is to raise us continually heavenward, as the apostle teaches. Our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body. (Phil. 3: 20, 21.) All christians quickened together with Christ by the Spirit of God, are now raised up together, and made to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. (Ephes. 2: 6.) The Lord's coming is revealed to bring us to this state of mind. Set your affections on things above, and not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory. (Col. 3: 2—4.) The apostle John joins the same hope with more close abiding in Jesus and increasing purity. He that hath this hope in him purifieth himself even as he is pure. (1 John 2: 28, 29; 3: 1—3.)

The more assuredly you can realize in your minds God's testimony to this truth, and the more steadily you can gaze on this blessed hope, looking for it and hastening unto it, the more you will be raised above earth-born cares, sorrows, and troubles, and your heart opened to noble and generous actings for God and his Church. You will be filled with scriptural and bright anticipations of heavenly glory. Its holy joy and happiness will be reflected in heavenly-mindedness, deadness to the world, Christian tempers, holy dispositions, and all the fruits of the Spirit, so that you shall rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory, and the joy of the Lord shall be your strength for every work tending to glorify his name and bless your fellow-men.

Lastly, Let us confess this hope of our Lord's coming before the world. Why has it yet had so little influence? We have been too much ashamed of our hope, and have hid our light under a bushel. Why has it not yet roused, to any great extent, the mocks of the scorner and the revilings of the world? The voice of testimony has hitherto been so feeble that the world has had no occasion to trouble itself about it: the world has not been disturbed in its false peace. Why is it carefully excluded from the mass of our religious periodicals and journals? The testimony to it, from those who hold it, has hitherto been so indistinct, that the conductors of such publications have no idea of the strength of conviction with which it is held by the faithful servants of Christ. We must be more open, bold, and decided in our profession, if we would make a real impression on the whole church of Christ.

Our blessed Master has told us, Let your lights be burning, and ye yourselves like unto men, that wait for their Lord. This implies an open confession of our hope of his return. With the mouth confession is made unto salvation. This is one purpose which he has in view in our attendance on the Lord's Supper; to testify to others our hope that he who died for us will come again. And be it so that we meet with ridicule and reproach from even professing christians for this confession, let us take up this cross also. No doubt Noah had many a scoff and many a mockery to endure, while engaged for one hundred and twenty years in building the ark; yet by faith Noah being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house, by which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith. All the extravagances which, through the special enmity of Satan against this truth, any who may have professed it, may at any time have mingled with it, will be very possibly laid to our charge.

There is no doctrine against which that malignant adversary seems to have had more hatred, nor any which he has more striven to mix up with human infirmity. But the holy Bible ever leads us to combine true sobriety and moderation with the Lord's being at hand. Let us of the day be sober, putting on the breast-plate of faith and love, and for an helmet the hope of salvation. Again, we are told, Wherefore [illegible] be sober, and hope to the end, for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ. And again, Let your moderation be known unto all men. The Lord is at hand. Thus entirely separated from all enthusiasm, and thus intimately associated with all truth and soberness, [illegible]

Indeed, these are the truths eminently suited to the very times through which we are passing; exactly calculated to meet all the errors and iniquities, the Infidelity, the Popery, and the lawlessness of these days. If God have given us this sure light in a dark place, let us lift it on high, and shine as lights in the world, holding forth the Word of life.

This is the seasonable truth for the people of Christ now; it is given by Christ himself, in a voice from heaven, in the account of the sixth vial, under which we are now living. Behold, I come as a thief; blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked and they see his shame. It is, then, clearly according to the mind of Christ that it should be distinctly announced and fully proclaimed. I call upon all his servants then, in the name of the great Lord and Master of all, to testify their hope of his return. Confess him before men, and he will confess you before the angels of God; yea, before his Father in heaven. Thus, when he shall appear, you shall have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming.—Bickersteth.

Light and Darkness.

I am old and blind—
Men point to me as smitten with God's frown;
Afflicted and deserted by my kind,
Yet I am not cast down.

I am weak, yet strong;
I murmur not that I no longer see;
Poor, old and helpless, I the more belong,
Father Supreme, to thee.

Oh! merciful One,
When men are farthest, then Thou art most near;
When friends pass by, my weakness shun,
Thy chariot I hear.

The glorious face
Is leaning toward me, and its holy light
Shines in upon my lonely dwelling place,
And there is no more night.

On my bended knees
I recognize thy purpose clearly shown;
My vision thou hast dimmed, that I may see
Thyself, thyself alone.

I have nought to fear—
This darkness is the shadow of thy wing;
Beneath it, I am almost sacred—here
Can come no evil thing.

Oh! I seem to stand
Trembling where no mortal foot e'er hath been,
Wrapt in the radiance of thy sinless land,
Which eye hath never seen.

Visions come and go,
Shapes of resplendent beauty round me throng,
From angels' lips I seem to hear the flow
Of soft and holy song.

It is nothing now,
When Heaven is opening on my sightless eyes,
When airs from Paradise refresh my brow,
The earth in darkness lies.

In a purer clime
My being fills with rapture—waves of thought
Roll in upon my spirit—strains sublime
Break upon me unsought.

Give me now my lyre,
I feel the stirrings of a gift divine;
Within my bosom glows unearthly fire,
Lit by no skill of mine.

MILTON.

For the Crisis.

Faint, yet Pursuing.

BRO. GRANT:—On leaving the many at Wilbraham last fall, who expressed so much sympathy in my behalf, it was their request that I should communicate through the Crisis my whereabouts, etc. Weeks and months have rapidly flown away, and still no communication has been received from me. Well, causes there are many. An unsettled knowledge for several weeks succeeding my ordination where my lot would be cast, was one reason. My mind became so engaged in the new truths I had embraced, that sleepless nights and loss of appetite were the consequence. I then made less application to study, and labored in the open air. I soon found the change very beneficial. I did not lose any of my interest in Bible subjects, but only kept it in check.

About the middle of last November, Bro. J. Covell, of Muscatine, Iowa, commenced a correspondence with me, relative to my locating among the advent brethren in that place and vicinity. I felt it a duty to go, but had not the means then. Of course, duty had nothing to do with impossibilities. After the lapse of a few weeks, a draft was sent me, the value of which would procure my transportation to that place, where duty seemed to call. Having decided advantageously for a life partnership in the loss and profits of life's joys and sorrows, the decision soon became an action, the notice of which appeared in the Crisis. Farewell visits were made among relatives and friends. A contemplated time for departing to the West had nearly come, when sickness laid its hand heavily upon Mrs. D——, making her a great sufferer. Here I am in the sick room, doing all in my power to relieve weary, restless humanity. Weeks have thus passed—night and day of almost ceaseless watchings. To-day physical exhaustion has [illegible] an irresistible depth. How uncertain is the consummation of human decisions! The reason why Bro. Pratt and the Western brethren were disappointed in not seeing me at the conference is thus made known. Disappointments [illegible] heart may find in thee soothing power. But when will mortality cease aching, wasting, perishing? Blissful morning! the eye of faith can view thy glorious dawning. The "King in his beauty" will dedicate thy breaking. The immortal ones will chant thy welcome. Then will the prayer—"Thy kingdom come," be answered. Then will reunion follow separation. A farewell to sorrow will be read upon countenances once sad. Those who have loved will meet again. Fadeless will be the eye, unfaltering the tongue, and no longer tremulous the limbs oft wearied while on life's pilgrimage. Though the way was thorny, it has culminated now in the promised highway.

Weary pilgrim to the heavenly Mecca and New Jerusalem, still pursue thy journeyings. The evergreen pasture will soon be seen. The Life Restorer will soon appear. How soon, I do not know. I pray, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly!" Precious ones are held captive in death. A loved brother was last Sunday looked upon for the last time, previous to depositing in the tomb. His was the christian's hope. As day after day I hear of the death of this or that loved one, I feel that the enemy will not always revel in chilled blood and saddened hearts. His finale is written.

Bro. Grant and beloved pilgrims, contend earnestly; not for principalities and powers, but for "the Faith"—not of human origin, but that "once delivered to the saints." As for me, I have a settled preference to serve the Lord. Whether finally faithful, the recording angel will reveal in that day when life-long works are to be tried.

Nearing Deliverance.

According to the most competent, because inspired judge, the future is to be hailed and prayed for, not deprecated by the christian, as if it unbosomed only calamity.

"For now is our salvation nearer than when we believed."—ROM. 13: 11.

The salvation referred to by Paul is unquestionably that large and comprehensive deliverance which is the destiny of all created things, and of all the living rational and responsible beings who have believed in Christ, and are regenerated by his Spirit. Personal salvation is an experience of the present; the salvation alluded to is a fact that lies still in the future. It is not individual safety, but the general salvation of the whole body of the church, to which Paul refers. It is time to awake, because our salvation, or deliverance, is nearer than when we believed; and the night, which means the whole of this existing economy, is far spent; the day, which means the future, everlasting sun shine, that spreads over all the earth, when Christ takes to him his great power, and sways his scepter from sea to sea, is near at hand. He speaks of that future deliverance, which he describes in the 8th chapter of Romans, as the manifestation of the sons of God: the redemption of the earth from its groans, its travail, and its expectancy, and that restoration of all things which had been spoken of by the prophets, and is the distinctive feature of that millennial day which approaches faster and nearer as the centuries roll on. Few can fail to be struck, in reading the epistles of St. Paul, with his constant statement of the nearness and the instancy of the advent of our Lord. He says in one passage, "The Lord is at hand;" in another passage, "looking for that blessed epiphany, the glorious appearing of Jesus Christ, our great God and Savior." St. James says, "Be patient; the Lord is at hand; the Judge is at the door." Nor can any fair reader of the epistles of St. Paul escape constantly perceiving, not a mere matter of hope, but of fact, that the motive and the hope that he puts before christians is not the nearness of their death, but the instancy of the approach of their great and blessed hope, our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. In other words, the governing hope of the christian is not his own personal deliverance at death, but the coming of his Lord.

The day and the hour of his advent are uncertain; the fact of his advent is as certain as rising and as setting suns. If you are anxiously watching the return to your home of some one near and dear to you, how hard you will try to catch a familiar sound amid the wind or the pattering rain, or to see the distant shadow in the moonlight! You feel it your instinctive impulse to seek out any sign of the approach of one who is so intimately associated with you. The watcher on the distant heights looks intently into the east to catch the first beam of the rising sun; the voyager upon a broad and desert sea looks anxiously and often around if he can see some floating weed or some wheeling sea bird to indicate the nearing land, or the whitening cliffs of his native shore, or the mountain-range within the horizon that tell him that his home is at hand. The christian, not exempt from the feelings of all, nor forbidden to cherish them, will often look if he can see any signs of that glorious appearing, gilding with its orient beams the distant east. He will often compare sea, and star, and sky, and latitude and longitude with the revealed and inspired chart that not only lays down the fact that Christ will come, but has spread over it tokens, marks, signs, indications, by which you may gather the high probability that his approach is near. The christian, like the voyager on a great sea, may often misinterpret; that is possible, for he is human; and [illegible] to err is common. The mariner may take the piece of drift-wood that he finds upon the sea for a fragment too recently torn from the shore [illegible] lost its way, has been long at sea, and is sinking with fatigue. Or he may mistake that as the first ray of the rising sun, which is only a phosphorescent meteor. But incidental errors will not make him despair; they will only induce him more carefully to watch and wait, certain that the fact itself will be, and that phenomena indicative of its nearness will multiply as it approaches. So the christian may err—may seize some startling scene as appearing to him the token of its nearness; or he may interpret some voice in the wilderness as the sound of his chariot-wheels; or he may think that the transient blaze of the meteor is the burst of the morning sun; but if he find that he has fallen into error in so interpreting, he will not therefore despair, or give up his investigation. And far better have the character of him who intently looks, and in his intense longing treats that as a sign which is not, than the sceptic and freezing apathy of the man whose heart is dead, and whose hopes are cold, and who cares for and looks for none of these things. The incidental error of a few cannot shake or shatter the trust of the many; and the error that is made by one watcher for the advent will only lead another, like a buoy upon a wreck in the channel, to avoid the reef on which his predecessor may have suffered.

* * * *

But let me notice some of those events which lead us to anticipate, even more than the apostolic church could, the increasing nearness of these great changes. Can one fail to see all over Europe startling events? If earthquakes in divers places, if famines, if pestilences, and plagues, were to be among the earliest forerunners of a great change, are not these most conspicuous now? Does not every day's news bring accounts of them? Does not every paper reveal in different parts of the world one or more, or many, of these facts and phenomena?

I ventured to show the complete fulfillment of the drying up of the Euphrates. If we can identify one fact in history with a specific symbol in the Apocalypse, and if the identification be so exact, complete, and so truly overlapping it that there can scarcely be a mistake, we not only ascertain the fulfillment of a given prophecy, but we ascertain the point of time we occupy in the great calendar of prophecy.

Now one of these events that were to take place under the sixth vial, when the unclean spirits were to gather the nations to that great war—not battle, but war—of Armageddon, was, that the great river Euphrates, the symbol of the Turkish power in Europe, from which the Turks started, and to which, as the reflux of a stream, they are going back again, should be dried up, so that the exhaustion of it, or the waning of the crescent, or the drying up of the Mahometan power in Europe, would be the fulfillment of that. This I stated many years ago, and within this present year we have seen the unmistakable fulfillment of it. And the correspondent of one of the daily papers, writing the other day, speaking of Turkey, says, "Her resources are utterly exhausted." God brings to pass the fulfillment of his own prediction, strangely, indeed, by the very process most justly employed by the western powers to keep up and prevent the evaporation of the great river Euphrates. In the same paper I read, "The admission of the Turkish state into the European system under the counsels and tutelage of the western powers is now inevitable;" that is, it is no longer to be an independent nationality. Of course it will not be; and I am quoting it simply as a proof of the fulfillment of that statement of the Apocalypse.

* * * *

Another great event that I have alluded to, which shows that our salvation is nearer than when we awoke, or, in other words, that there are tokens of the approach of that great era, is the unequivocal, the irresistible evidence of the decadence and the imminent destruction of that huge sacerdotal tyranny under which Europe has groaned, and which has struck its roots so deep into dynasties, and nations, and governments; I mean the Papal or Western Apostasy. Now this is an event, I may mention, that is one of the most important as a token in the whole Bible. The apostle says that an apostasy, headed by a Pope the man of sin, should begin from Christ's first advent; and that it should be utterly destroyed by his second advent. He says, first of all, "Whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth;" that is, through the preaching of the gospel; and strike down, at a blow, with the brilliancy, the brightness, of his own personal advent. We read in the Apocalypse, that when the seventh vial is poured out, great Babylon comes into remembrance, to give her the judgment-cup, in drinking which her decay is to be precipitated, her consumption to go on, her sufferings to be increased. And then at the end of it an angel is to cry from heaven, "Babylon the great is fallen;" and her judgments are to come upon her in one day, and she is to sink like a millstone in the great waters.

* * * *

The Pope trembles in the Vatican. He has a presentiment of the nearness of his doom. What office in Europe would insure his Pontifical life for five years? Now just think what this power was in ancient days: a power that could force a German Emperor to remain doing penance amid the snows in the trenches around the imperial city, till the Pope gave him absolution; a power that could dispose of Britain's crown to whomsoever he pleased; the great power that reigned over the kings of the earth. "How are the mighty fallen! Is this the man that shook kingdoms, that made the earth to tremble? Is he become as one of us?" And what do recent events indicate? The decadence of the system to the very verge, when like the thief in the night, He comes whose right it is to reign; and the whole is struck down; and that great city is literally swallowed up and destroyed by fire; and the smoke of its torment begins to rise for ever and ever.

If this be the recorded state of things, it is another token that our salvation is nearer than when we believed. [illegible]

Reading for Youth.

The Bible.

A WORD TO BOYS AND GIRLS.

"O may these heavenly pages be
Our ever dear delight,
And still new beauties may we see,
And still increasing light."

We now present you the mode or manner of studying this sacred volume, that it may prove a savor of life unto life, not of death unto death.

1. Study the Bible with prayer for enlightenment, for the quickening, sanctifying influence of the Holy Spirit, that you may behold wondrous things out of God's law. We may read the Bible till gray, without that wisdom which cometh from above, and it will still be a dead letter. Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty.

"When the Spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth." John 16: 13.

2. Read the Bible regularly. A godly man of old says: "I have esteemed the words of thy mouth more than my necessary food." This is the true idea. The Bible is daily bread, to be taken regularly, that the seed may grow thereby.

3. Read the Bible attentively. The meaning of the Bible is the Bible. Unless he that reads gets the meaning, it will not do him any good. Hasty reading of a great many chapters at once is of no advantage. Read slowly, a little at a time, and think on what you read, pray over it, and you will understand and remember it.

4. Read the Bible as God's book. Not merely because father or mother wish you to read it, but for a better reason, because God speaks to you in the Bible. When we have seen a little girl run in, her eyes sparkling with joy, crying: "Oh! mother, here's a letter from father to me, for my name is on the outside," we always feel to wish she might thus look on the Bible; for it is a letter from our Father in heaven. So feel, and so read; and you will not grow weary of the good book.

These few hints are enough for once. Will not our little readers remember them, and read every day, with great attention, the book of God? We love to see children, as we sometimes do, take their little Bibles every morning, and sit down to read a chapter, without waiting for any one to tell them. Read often, and love to read, dear children, and you will not forget it.

Blessed Bible:—

"Thou truest friend man ever knew,
Thy constancy I've tried;
Where all were false, I found thee true,
My counsellor and guide.

The mines of earth no treasure give
That could this volume buy;
In teaching me the way to live,
It taught me how to die."

Golden Rule.

Children and Men.

Here is a saying of the Scriptures which you may think hard to be understood. The apostle commands us all to be both men and children. You will ask, How is this possible? Let us read and see. Here we have it, in 1 Cor. 14: 20:—"Brethren, be not children in understanding: howbeit, in malice be ye children, but in understanding be MEN."

Children, in comparison with men, are weak: they cannot do what men can: they require persons to watch over and take care of them until they grow up to be able to take care of themselves. And the apostle's meaning is, Get wisdom; be prudent; understand your duty; learn the will of God. In all this try to be like men in comparison with children,—of full size, strong, and knowing what to do. But in malice, quarrelling, hatred, and all unkindness, be weak and helpless as children are in comparison with men.

Few children in very early life have those feelings which may be called malice, or at least, in anything like the strength that it appears in some men. Be, then, all your lives children in this respect. Do not allow yourselves to hate any one. Try to love all. Seek the good of all.

There are no real contradictions in the Bible. Whatever looks like it may be explained.

Speak to the Stranger.

A boy, says a merchant, came into my store years ago, bright, intelligent-looking, desiring me to purchase some goods he had for sale. I felt called upon to say a word to him about his soul, so I merely remarked:

"Do you enjoy religion?"

"No, I don't think much about it."

"Well, don't you think you ought to?"

"Oh, I don't know how to go at it."

I gave him some advice, and he departed. In about a week he came back again, when I found him yet without a knowledge of the Savior. A short time after he came again, and upon my asking how he felt, he replied with rejoicing that the Savior was precious to him, that God had blessed his soul. That young man is now preaching the Gospel.

Pray without Ceasing.

When the waves of life o'erwhelm thee,
And thy head is bowed with grief,
All is dark and drear around thee,
And thou sighest for relief—
Pray, christian, pray.

When a thousand cares are pressing
Day and night a heavy load,
Seek, oh seek a Father's blessing,
Cast the burden on thy God.
Pray, christian, pray.

If the world allures thee, turn not
From the strait and narrow way;
If temptations thick beset thee,
And would lead thy feet astray,
Pray, christian, pray.

When thou seest a world around thee
Pressing on to endless death,
While the wail of suffering millions
Goeth up with every breath,
Pray, christian, pray.

Health or sickness, pain or pleasure,
Want or plenty, smiles or tears—
Whate'er comes, still without ceasing
To that mighty One who hears,
Pray, christian, pray.

The Rich Man and Lazarus.

BY J. HOWELL.

No. 4.

TEXT.—"The rich man also died, and was buried; and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom."—Lk. 16: 22, 23.

Observe a few extracts from Dr. Kitto's Biblical Lit., vol. I, pp. 797–9 on the term "Hades, a Greek word by which the Septuagint translates the Hebrew 'sheol,' denoting the abode or world of the dead, in which sense it occurs frequently in the New Testament, where it is usually rendered 'hell' in the English version. The word hades means literally that which is in darkness. . . . The question whether this (that is, hades, is the receptacle of souls existing in a separate state,) is or is not the doctrine of the Scriptures, is one of much importance, and has, first and last, excited no small amount of discussion. It is a doctrine received by a large portion of the nominal christian church; and it forms the foundation of the Roman Catholic doctrine of purgatory, for which there would be no ground but for this interpretation of the word hades.

The question, therefore, rests entirely upon the interpretation of this word. In the classical writers it is used to denote Orcus, or the infernal regions. At the first view the classical signification would seem to support the sense above indicated. On further consideration, however, we are referred back to the Hebrew sheol: for the Greek term did not come to the Hebrews from any classical source, or with any classical meanings, but through the Septuagint, as a translation of their own word; and whether correctly translating it or not is a matter of critical opinion. The word hades is, therefore, in no wise binding upon us in any classical meaning which may be assigned to it. The real question, therefore, is, what is the meaning which sheol bears in the Old Testament, and hades in the New?

A careful examination of the passages in which these words occur will probably lead to the conclusion, that they afford no real sanction to the notion of an intermediate place of the kind indicated, but are used by inspired writers to denote the grave—the resting place of the bodies both of the righteous and the wicked; and that they are also used to signify hell, the abode of miserable spirits. But it would be difficult to produce any instance in which they can be shown to signify the abode of the spirits of just men made perfect, either before or after a resurrection.

Here Dr. Kitto gives up one class of the supposed living spirit residents of hades; Dr. Enoch Pond, Knapp and Meyer agreed. He continues:

"In the great majority of instances sheol is in the Old Testament used to signify the grave, and in most of these cases it is translated in the authorized version [illegible] as Gen. 37: 35; 42: 38; 1 Sam. 2: 6; 1 Kings 2: 6; Job 14: 13; 17: 13, 16; and in numerous other passages in the writings of David, Solomon and the prophets. But as the grave is regarded by most persons, and was more especially so by the ancients, with awe and darkness, so the word denoting it soon came to be applied to that more dark and gloomy world which was to be the abiding place of the miserable."

Observe, it does not literally mean such a place, but for the above reason the word "came to be applied" thus, and that is to the place of final punishment.

Again. "Where our translators supposed the word to have this sense, they rendered it by 'hell.' Some of the passages in which this has been done may be doubtful; but there are others of which a question can scarcely be entertained; such are those (as Job 11: 8; Ps. 139: 8; Amos 9: 2;) in which the word denotes the opposite of heaven, which cannot be the grave, nor the general state or region of the dead, but hell. . . . The word hell is not the Scriptural antithesis of heaven, but earth. See Isa. 55: 9; Ps. 103: 11; Matt. 24: 35.

Still more decisive are such passages as Ps. 9: 17; Prov. 23: 9; in which sheol cannot mean any place, in this world or the next, to which the righteous as well as the wicked are sent, but the penal abode of the wicked as distinguished from and opposed to the righteous. The only case in which such passages could by any possibility be supposed to mean the grave, would be if the grave—that is, extinction—were the final doom of the unrighteous."

Well, that is exactly their doom; therefore Dr. Kitto's texts are no objections to the unconsciousness of man in death, for they apply to the future punishment of the wicked. Dr. Kitto then says:

"In the New Testament the word hades is used in much the same sense as sheol in the Old, except that in a less proportion of cases can it be construed to signify 'the grave.' There are still, however, instances in which it is used in this sense, as in Acts 2: 31; 1 Cor. 15: 55; but in general, the hades of the New Testament appears to be no other than the world of future punishment. (E. G. Matt. 11: 23; 16: 18; Lk. 16. 23.)—Dr. Enoch Pond, on the intermediate place, in the American Biblical Repository, for April, 1841, whom we have here chiefly followed.—Dr. Kitto."

In reply to the last remarks, on the term hades denoting "no other than the world of future punishments," we suggest that this is impossible if Rev. 20: 13, 14 is any authority on this point, as good as Dr. Pond. We think it rather more reliable. That positively declares two things.

First, that hades delivers up the dead, as does death, "which are IN it."

Secondly. That death and hades were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. "And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire."—Rev. 20: 15. "Hades," then, after delivering up its charge, is itself destroyed where the wicked are; therefore it cannot denote the place of future punishment. As to its meaning, by reference to the margin, it will be seen that the translators understood it to mean "the grave."—Rev. 20: 13.

The Scriptures referred to at the close of Dr. Pond's article we have already examined, and as the positive declaration in Rev. 20: 13, 14 defines hades as the receptacle of the dead, by affirming that it delivers up the dead which are IN it, we deny that the term hades is applied once, Scripturally, to signify the place of separate conscious life spirit entities, and those who believe that to be the case are under obligation to either prove it, or relinquish it, by every principle of moral right. The definition we have suggested from the verbal declaration of Rev. 20: 13, 14, is perfectly justified by the comparison of the terms employed in verse 13. The term "sea" refers to place. "Death" to state. "Hades" to place. The "dead" come from the places—the sea and hades, and from the state of death. "The dead" from the sea, death, and hades, are in the last clause of verse 13 denominated "man." "And they (the dead,) were judged every man according to their works." Let it be remembered that the term "man" is never appropriated, in a single Scripture text, to designate any thing supposed to be in or of man, or living independently of man, called spirit; which is in the neuter gender, but the term man is always masculine. "Man," then, is in the sea, death, and hades; and at the resurrection of the dead, the sea, death, and hades, will deliver up the dead which are in them; therefore hades is the receptacle of the dead.

Should any one affirm, that the term hades must sometimes signify the state of death, or decide with Mr. Wakefield, that the universal meaning of [illegible] of death, because the term sepulchrum, or grave, is not strictly applicable to such as have been consumed by fire;" this would in no respect invalidate the above definition, for then it would only be the term which would express the state into which the dying were received, and at the resurrection could deliver up the dead which are in it. The heathen notion, then, of hades being the abode of separate living conscious spirit entities, is perfectly exploded by the clear shining light of Rev. 20: 13, 14; and the term hades, in Lk. 16: 23, is proved to be employed parabolically, otherwise it is positively contradictory of Revelation.

In view of this, and the fact stated by Dr. Pond, quoted by Dr. Kitto, that the doctrine of conscious spirit existence "forms the foundation of the Roman Catholic doctrine of purgatory, for which there would be no ground but for this interpretation of the word hades—that the question, therefore, rests entirely upon the interpretation of this word—that the word hades is therefore in no wise binding upon us in any classical meaning which may be assigned to it"—the manner in which, as he above remarks, the word "came to be applied" to the place of the miserable—that the passages where these words occur "afford no real sanction to the notion of an intermediate place of the kind indicated;" and the fact, that "the only case in which such passages could by any possibility be supposed to mean the grave, would be if the grave [or death state,] that is, extinction, were the final doom of the unrighteous;"—and that such is their doom, there being no future eternal life out of Jesus Christ, how can we possibly come to any other conclusion, with the word of God in our hands, than that the record of the rich man and Lazarus is a parable, and a parable only? O let us never build a theory of conscious spirit existence on a parable, and especially upon a parable in which there cannot be found a noun expressive of such an entity, or to which the pronoun, supposed or imagined to designate it, must exist without any noun to which it can sustain a truly grammatical relation.

The parable of the rich man and Lazarus was never originated to prove any such sentiment, which is at the same time subversive of the revealed design of the resurrection—the basis principle of purgatory—the support of the devil's literary contribution, (Gen. 3: 4)—the fuel to feed, and the wind to fan, the fire of heathen sacrifices—the only energizing life principle of modern demonology—a positive denial of the literal import of the Scriptures, instituting an imaginary penalty with which to punish the sinner, in opposition to the time when, and the place where, the Bible affirms the wicked shall be punished.

O let us believe God that "the dead know not any thing," and that where they are "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom IN the sheol (grave) whither thou goest."

For the Crisis.

Time of the End.

BY J. HEMENWAY.

(Concluded.)

Having given our reasons for doubting that A. D. 525 is the starting point for the 1290 years, our doubts are increased, when we look for events in 1815, to fulfill the prophecy that marks the commencement of the time of the end. The events that mark the commencement of the time of the end are named in the following scriptures: Dan. 11: 35.—"And some of them of understanding shall fall, to try them, and to purge, and to make them white, even to the time of the end." In verse 40 of chap. 11, we have another event marked, which was to transpire at the time of the end. This verse reads as follows: "And at the time of the end shall the king of the south push at him, and the king of the north shall come against him, like a whirlwind, with chariots, and with horsemen, and with many ships; and he shall enter into the countries, and shall overflow and pass over."

What events are we to look for to determine where the time of the end commences? 1st. The great tribulation must end, or the people of God must cease to be put to death by the civil power of Rome, in connection with the church of Rome. Did the persecution under papacy continue up to 1815? It is said that the last act of that power in persecuting the church was about A. D. 1814. If that is the point, then the time of the end commenced in 1814, instead of 1815, and the days would have ended in 1850. If the ending of the persecution marks the time of the end, then of course, we must commence the time of the end at the point of time where the persecution ends; not a year or three [illegible]

[illegible] determines where the time of the end commences is in verse 40. "AT the time of the end shall the king of the south push at him, and the king of the north shall come against him like a whirlwind, with chariots, and with horsemen, and with many ships, and he shall enter into the countries and shall overflow and pass over. He shall enter into the glorious land and many countries shall be overthrown: but these shall escape out of his hand, even Edom, and Moab, and the chief of the children of Ammon. He shall stretch forth his hand also upon the countries; and the land of Egypt shall not escape. But he shall have power over the treasures of gold and of silver, and over all the precious things of Egypt: and the Lybians and the Ethiopians shall be at his steps. But tidings out of the east and out of the north shall trouble him: therefore he shall go forth with great fury to destroy, and utterly to make away many. And he shall plant the tabernacles of his palaces between the seas in the glorious holy mountain; yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help him."—Dan. 11: 40—45.

What event in the foregoing testimony marks the commencement of the time of the end? Is it when the king of the south pushes at a certain king?—or is it when the king of the north "comes against him?"—or when he shall "pass over?"—or when he enters the "glorious land?"—or when he "shall plant the tabernacles of his palaces between the seas in the glorious holy mountain?" Which of the above named events marks the commencement of the time of the end? They all take place in the time of the end, but some one of them must be the one that marks the commencement. I think it must be clearly seen that the language of the prophet settles the question beyond all dispute. "At the time of the end shall the king of the south push at him." The time of the end commences when the king of the south pushes at the certain king; this is the first act, and it must be the event from which to commence the time of the end. If we can ascertain who the king is that is pushed at, then I think there will be no difficulty in determining who the king of the south is.

The question before us is, who is the him to be pushed at? In order to settle this question it will be necessary to go back, for him being a pronoun must refer to some noun spoken of in a previous part of the prophecy. The individual spoken of, can be found nowhere nearer the 40th verse than in the 36th. All who will take the trouble to read from the 36th to the 40th verses inclusive, will readily discover that the him that is pushed at is the king that shall do according to his will. Who then is this king? To this question there are various answers. But those that entertain the view that 1815 is the point where the time of the end begins, take the position that the power here spoken of is "the abomination of desolation," or the power that is connected with the church of Rome at this time; and that it is France. If so, then of course Spain is the king of the south, and England is the king of the north. If this position be right, then we must look for Spain to push at France, as the event by which we can determine where the time of the end commences. I now refer to history to see when the king of the south pushed at the willful king.

"Allison, in his history of Europe, states that Jan. 14, 1809, a treaty was entered into between England and Spain, offensive and defensive. His language is as follows: 'At length, the 14th of January, Mr. Canning had the satisfaction of signing a treaty of peace and alliance between the two states, by which it was stipulated that the King of England shall assist to the utmost of his power in the struggle against the tyranny and usurpation of France, and promises not to acknowledge any other King of Spain and the Indies than Ferdinand VII., his heirs, or such lawful successors as the Spanish nation shall acknowledge; and the Spanish government engages never, in any case, to cede to France any part of the territories or possessions of the Spanish monarchy, in any part of the world; and both the high contracting parties agree to make common cause against France, and not to make peace but by common consent.' He continues in the following words:—'When it is recollected that this treaty was concluded after the Spanish armies had been utterly routed and dispersed by the overwhelming forces of Napoleon, when their capitol was taken, more than half their provinces overrun, and on the very day the British forces embarked at Corunna, after their disastrous retreat from Leon, it must be admitted that the annals of the world do not afford a more sublime example of constancy in adversity, and heroic fidelity to engagements on the part of both the contracting powers.'

'The spirits of the Spaniards, which had been sunk to an extraordinary degree by the disasters of the preceding campaign, the capture of their capitol, and retreat of the English troops from Galicia, were first revived by the intelligence of the treaty so opportunely and generously concluded by Great Britain, at the moment of their greatest [illegible], by which she engaged [illegible] Napoleon; and by the resolution expressed in parliament by the ministers, notwithstanding the gloomy foreboding of the opposition, never to abandon the cause of Spanish independence. * * * * The central junta, which was now established at Deville, issued an animated proclamation to their countrymen, in which, after recounting the propitious circumstances which were now appearing in their favor, they strongly recommended the general adoption of the guerilla system of warfare, and renewed their protestations never to make peace while a single Frenchman polluted the Spanish territory.'"

All can see by the above, that Spain was the leading power in the alliance against France, and that previous to this alliance of 1809, Spain had pushed at France, and had failed, hence the alliance with England. If we are to take Spain for the king of the south, and France for the willful king, then our date for the commencement of the time of the end would be as early as 1809. Time has proved that to be wrong, hence, we must conclude that there is a wrong application of scripture somewhere.

It is said that 1815 is the point from which to commence the time of the end, from the fact that England, in alliance with other nations, overthrew Napoleon, who was at the head of the French empire. Admitting the facts in the case, there is a difficulty. England is taken to be the king of the north, and the prophecy makes the king of the north coming against him, the second event in the time of the end. It will not answer to the prediction of the prophet to say that Spain was in the alliance of 1814 with England; because the king of the north is the leading power in the war of 1815. In the prophecy, we have first, the king of the south as the leading power against the certain king. Second, we have the king of the north as the leading power;—now which of these powers is it that moves first? The king of the south. Then, of course, when this power pushes at the willful king there is where the time of the end begins; not where many powers under the direction of the king of the north come against him and "overflow and pass over."

Then again, it is doing violence to the prophecy to couple these events together, and call it the fulfillment of the prediction of the prophet,—"At the time of the end shall the king of the south push at him;" when the events are some six years apart. But some may say, the work was commenced by the king of the south, about 1809, and the events of 1815 completed the work; and that we should commence the time of the end where the work is completed. The prophet does not say that the completion of the work commences the time of the end; but that it is when the king of the south pushes at the willful king. It is not proper to bring the Bible to our opinions, but we should bring our opinions to the Bible; and when we find that the scripture conflicts with our interpretation of some prophecy, we should give up our theories rather than make the scripture bend to our views.

It is evident to my mind, that there is a wrong application of events to prophecy somewhere in the theory that makes the time of the end commence in 1815; and I think that it may be seen plainly, that one wrong application is in calling the events of 1815, the king of the south pushing at the willful king. In this article, I have given some of my reasons for doubting that 1815 is the point where the time of the end commences, and I have many more that I might bring forward, but my article is lengthened out much longer than I intended when I began.

Let us have a mind to search the scriptures, and learn what is there taught; and while we love the time of reward, and rejoice in the evidences of the coming of our Lord being near at hand, let us not be so earnest to get the time, as to misapply scripture to make it out. A mistake of faith in relation to the matter, will not help on the cause of truth, but rather serve to lessen confidence in that which is good. May the Lord help us to be humble, gentle and Christ-like, that we may walk in the light, that we may be ready for the coming of the Just One.

THE TESTIMONY OF A CHRISTIAN LIFE.—"I never saw christianity so well and so palpably imaged forth in the whole walk and conversation as in the life of Alexander Anderson. His life I reckon of more value than all the 'Evidences of Christianity' I have ever read. He was the best and the most loveable man I have yet known, or now ever expect to know in this world."—Memoir, by Rev. N. L. Walker.

☞ To bless God for mercies is the way to increase them; to bless him for miseries is the way to remove them. No good lives so long as that which is thankfully improved; no evil dies so soon as that which is patiently endured.

For the Crisis.

A Demonstration as to the Extirpation of Evil.

There are three primal parts of Holy Scripture which combine to demonstrate the utter extirpation of all evil—human and infernal—of man or the devil. Then as this Scriptural demonstration is confirmed by the still higher moral demonstration derived from the known necessities of the case, and the loving character of the Almighty, it is truth. Beyond all peradventure it is solid like the "Rock of ages." Note its immovable bases.

I. The Lord's prayer embodies and expresses the idea of the earth's entire purification—"Thy kingdom come; thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." Each part and all parts, without exception, are here embraced. The whole earth is then the subject and the sphere of this inspired prayer.

An answer to this prayer will secure the will of God done in earth as it is in heaven. This will be good enough! Heaven is the highest sphere of purity, prosperity and perfection; and this will be transferred to earth, and "fill the whole earth as the waters cover the sea." This will be full enough! No crook or crevice, hollow or hole in the sea is left unfilled.

Other forms of this prayer (Ps. 7: 9, 104: 35) destroy the wicked "out of the earth," and bring wickedness to an end. Then this wide world, in all its length and breadth, will be the counterpart of heaven. The heaven and earth, however, comprehend the creation of God from the beginning; and hence it is clear that this prayer reaches on to the purposed perfection of all things spoken in Christ.—Eph. 1: 10.

II. The ultimate prophecies take the same all comprehending range, reaching to the killing of the old serpent, the destruction of death and hell,—nay, to the destruction of the works of the devil.—Gen. 3: 15; Hos. 13: 14; Rev. 20: 14; 1 Cor. 15: 26, 54: Heb. 2: 14, 1 John 3: 8. The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head; which process always kills. "Destroy death and him that hath the power of death, that is, the devil." "Death and hell shall be cast into the lake of fire." "O hell, I will be thy destruction!" Death itself will be destroyed." "If any plead for Baal," let them hear it. Let their enemies (if they be divinities or abiding realities,) plead for themselves. In the name of the Lord their doom is pronounced—their sentence sealed. When this blessed end shall have been obtained, the Lord's prayer may be fairly answered; but not till then.

III. The promises as ultimated in prophetic vision, are alike lofty, far-reaching and complete; and always extend on to absolute, universal, and everlasting perfection in the new heaven and new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness—righteousness only and always. Amen. 1 Chron. 16: 23–30; Ps. 46; 47; 72; 150; Isa. 65: 17; Hag. 2: 6-7; Heb. 12: 26; 2 Pet. 3: 12–14; Rev. 21: 1–4; 22: 3. Then all things that shall exist will be "new"—made perfect; for there will be no more curse—no more death, sorrow, crying, pain; for the former things will have passed away. Every thing that hath breath will then praise the Lord. "Every creature in heaven, and on the earth and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them heard I saying, blessing and honor, and glory and power be unto Him that sitteth on the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever. Amen."

Thus the prayer will be answered, the prophecy fulfilled, and the full measure of prophetic vision verified. "God's glory will cover the heavens, and the earth be full of his praise."

Take this syllogism.

These numerous, harmonious, and primary portions of the Holy Scriptures are truth.—John 17: 17; 2 Tim. 3: 16.

But the truth is the right representation of the facts in the case.

Therefore death and devil, and sin and hell, shall be destroyed; and this was the point to be demonstrated.

Again. This destruction of enemies is said to be moral (or spiritual.) But moral applies to lawful, upright and beneficial. Therefore, the idea of a moral destruction makes death and devil and hell lawful! Which at once confounds the objector, and compels us to fall back on the conclusion that the destruction is real.

Death is the eldest born of sin, which is a rebel from birth, and ought never to have been born at all. It is only an outlaw that must be taken and in due time destroyed. The devil deserves [illegible] beyond all rebels against heaven, because he is the arch rebel. Hell is the grand cesspool—the receptacle of the offscouring and pollution of death and the devil—in a fallen world. By consequence their destruction can but be literal and real. The Lord will bring forth judgment unto victory. This victory leaves no place for their foes in heaven or in earth. Their "place shall not be."—Ps. 37: 10. God is love—sin is the abominable thing that he hates. But the Lamb of God is to take away the sin of the world. Therefore sin must cease in the universe of God. Amen.

The Sleeping Church.

"They all slumbered and slept."—MATT. 25: 5.

After giving the prescription in the 24th chapter, "Therefore be ye also ready; for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh; our Lord illustrates it by this most instructive parable. The portion of it which I select for special meditation is, "All of them slumbered and slept." Instead of watching—the duty enjoined in the previous chapter, and the duty which the parable is spoken to illustrate in this chapter—they all of them, mark you, christian and unchristian, the foolish five and the wise five, slumbered and slept; five of them slept so soundly that they lost the glorious and golden opportunity, and the other five only awoke or were awakened with difficulty, and trimmed their lamps, and, according to the custom of eastern marriages, went out in the dark with their lamps burning, to accompany the bridegroom to the festal scenes which were on such occasions to take place.

I will try here to illustrate the nature of the sleep which these virgins slept. It is sinful, perilous; and unless awakened from by some great interposition, it issues still in the sleep of death.

The Spirit not only enjoins watchfulness, but guards against sleeping. "Let us not sleep as do others; they that sleep, sleep in the night." Constantly we are warned against sleeping, not with the eyelids, for that is nature; but with the heart, the conscience, the intellect, for that would be sin. There are three sorts of sleep spoken of in the Bible: there is the sleep which nature needs,— which is natural and necessary. There is another sleep which the Bible often speaks of; "They that sleep in Christ;" "Them that sleep in Christ will he bring with him." * * * * *

"Tired nature's sweet restorer, balmy sleep,"

There is, lastly, the sleep here spoken of, that sleep which is fraught with peril; that inner insensibility which ruined the five foolish virgins, and from the opiate power of which the wise virgins were snatched as if by a miracle.

* * * *

A christian falling asleep, in the moral sense of that word, not only fails to take an interest in those subjects already referred to; he also lays himself open to Satan, who, like a ravenous lion, goes about seeking whom he may devour; or to evil passions, that, like serpents, twine round his heart and sting him to the quick; or he falls so sound asleep upon the pillow of a fancied security, that some great moral catastrophe ends his sleep in that sleep from which there is no awakening. The most useless life is the most defenceless state. In sleep there is also waste and decay. If a man were to sleep long enough, he would die of inanition. We do not eat and drink when we are asleep; we simply rest. Apply this to sleeping christians, to the virgins that slept. They raise no cry for bread, "Evermore give us this living bread;" they have no sense of hunger; they utter no cry, "Give us this living water, that we may thirst [illegible] they do not feel the need [illegible] Savior, salvation; they are [illegible] they feel no want, and they [illegible] and if they sleep long enough [illegible] necessarily in the sleep of death [illegible] the perils of spiritual sleep, [illegible] and suggested by the very ex[illegible] are employed by our blessed Lord [illegible] he says these virgins slumbered and [illegible] What is the cause of this moral or [illegible]itual sleep? The first is either entertaining doctrines that are positively false, or turning to a wrong account doctrines that are in themselves true.

* * * *

"A second cause of this slumber is taking too great and absorbing interest in any of the pursuits or things of this world. Our danger lies less in crossing the line which forms the margin of forbidden things, and more in being absorbed altogether in things most lawful, but in their excess provocative of a sleep from which we may never be aroused. The things of this world, be it science, or literature, or money, be it any of these [illegible] and employments which in themselves are intrinsically right, [illegible] to create this stupor in reference to religious things.

Not only does external prosperity cause this sleep, but even health has this ten-deney. Who are the most spiritually minded men? Generally speaking, those who have had the greatest losses and crosses, whose estates have been taken from them, whose wealth has taken wings, who have drunk deep of the cup of sickness and suffering.

Let me mention some dissuasives from sleeping. You are redeemed with precious blood. How can a man cease to feel who accepts that grand fact, and feels its infinite value? Every picture of a christian in the Bible is that of a racer. Will the racer win the race if he fall asleep on the course? Will the soldier gain the victory who falls asleep in the ranks? Is it possible that the wrestler will succeed, who becomes the victim of stupor and insensibility? Awake, says God, thou that sleepest, and Christ will give thee life.

Another reason why you should not sleep is, that which these virgins forgot, namely, "The Bridegroom cometh." Does a bride sleep when the bridegroom comes to meet her in the sanctuary? If christians be, according to that beautiful figure, the bride, as they are, "The bride hath made herself ready;" and if Christ, the Bridegroom, comes from heaven; and the very figure, a bridegroom coming to his bride, should not occasion terror, but the very reverse; if then, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," be the cry, if the signs of nature intimate it, if the convulsions of the nations foreshow it, if men's hearts failing them for fear of the things that are coming on all parts of the earth show it; surely, surely, the cry, "The Bridegroom cometh," is a reason why we should not only not sleep, but why we should be found where we should like him to find us.

One day that Bridegroom will come; and if he do not come, death will come. If I were a member of parliament, I should be very willing to be found on my legs advocating the cause of my country and the good of human-kind; or if I were a tradesman, I should not fear to be found behind the counter selling the best goods at an honest price to every customer; if I were a sailor, I should be quite happy to be found fulfilling my duties on the deck; if a soldier on the field of battle, awful as that is;—each of these would be the post of duty. Wherever duty carries me, wherever I am engaged in a lawful exercise, or enjoyment if you will, there I should not object to be found when the Bridegroom cometh."—Dr. Cumming.

Sketch of Travels and Labors.

Feb. 9th.—Started to fill my appointments in the western part of Maine. Arrived at Lewiston, and put up with Bro. Dickson. Sister D., who has been a faithful servant of Christ, has recently lost her health and speech. She is now improving some. May the Lord restore her. Friday the 10th, was too stormy to travel, so I visited several of the brethren. They have no meetings now, and but little prospect of reviving them. Saturday I did the best I could to get to my appointment, but was obliged to stop over Sunday in South Paris. Put up at my old home with Bro. Knight,—where we are always welcome. It was thought I should have the privilege of preaching in the Methodist house a part of the day, and a word was passed to the minister by one of his members that such was their request. But I was not spoken to during the day, although the minister knew me. At evening a formal request was made to him by a church member in behalf of several, for me to preach, when the minister said that a council was had on the matter at noon, and they decided it would not do to let me preach. He then came to me pleasantly, and said, "Be free in the prayer meeting, and say all you wish." I did so, and the Lord blessed me with words to say.

Went to South Waterford, found the brethren generally inactive, glad to see me, [illegible] wanting the truth preached. Some [illegible] doing what they can, others [illegible] more if they would arise [illegible] against their own houses. [illegible] them four evenings, and on [illegible] had a good hearing, excepting [illegible] so stormy the people could not [illegible]. Some are wanting the truth, [illegible] anxious that we should preach to [illegible] often. I trust it was not in vain that [illegible] visited them.

Visited East Stoneham,—a place where [illegible] preached five discourses two years ago,—the first they ever heard of Adventism. They had not forgotten me, nor the word preached. Several had since been converted. Bro. J. Howe, from Waterford, has moved into the place. When I arrived the people seemed much interested to have meetings. We preached five discourses and held one prayer meeting. Great attention was paid to the word, and all but one —a licensed Methodist preacher—were glad for the meetings. This preacher attended, but advised others to stay away. I could not get him to talk or pray. He reproved two other preachers for taking part. One remarked, "It was worthy of Rome." So [illegible] manifest. The last evening one of the most respectable men in the place, told his condition as a sinner, endorsed what had been preached, promised to seek the Lord, and asked the prayers of God's people. One woman confessed her wanderings and covenanted anew with the Lord. It was a blessed meeting. At the closing moments, seven men and women arose and covenanted to begin that night to seek the Lord. Several others, next day, promised to do the same. God will be glorified in this effort and bring good out of it. The blessed hope is embraced and will take root there. Many want to hear more of this way. They were anxious I should spend another week there, but other engagements prevented.

Returned to Paris, preached one evening in the house of Bro. Knight, to a few who had ears to hear, then went to Woodstock. Found Bro. Wm. Chamberlain "in the faith," and interested. Preached two evenings to a full hall, attention good, and the christian portion fed on the word of the Lord, and were ready to confess its truth. But this was once a hot bed of fanaticism (in '43 and '44,) and the older ones were doubtless in some fear. There had been no Advent preaching in the place for fifteen years. Spiritualism has taken deep root and played the devil's game there the last few years. I proposed a lecture to show them what Spiritualism is, and its tendency. The hall was crowded, and I gave them a faithful Bible history of the head of the family,—the devil, also of his angels,—demons. Then read copious extracts from the writings and resolutions of the leading teachers and mediums of modern Spiritualism, showing its infidelity, anti-law, anti-gospel, anti-virtuous character, its extreme corruptions, etc., etc. This was a new view to the most of the disciples of this new development of the devil. Their leaders were out, and one, the most prominent, promised to speak after me. I found him of much service in asking questions while I spoke. It refreshed my mind, and opened the way for me. As I closed, I gave him the liberty to speak; but he was not quite ready. He said, "I do not feel posted up, it is late, and the brother has the Bible to his tongue's end, from one end to the other, but I don't think he understands it right." We bless God for the triumph of truth. I was invited to give the same lecture in the Baptist meeting-house, at Bryant's Pond village, on Sunday evening, which I did to a full house of attentive hearers. Thus the Lord opened the way to get some of the signs of this time of preparation for the world's harvest, before those who had not heard. May it be blessed to the good of some.

There is an open door throughout that region for the gospel of the kingdom. Who can occupy it? Masses are starving for lack of the word of life. Many earnestly entreated me to visit them again. Perhaps I may be able to do so; but the many places which call for preaching cannot be supplied. As I returned home to attend to other duties, my heart cried out to God to send forth more laborers into his vineyard. O that men would see and feel the importance of the gospel hope more fully, and the duty of having it faithfully preached for the recovery of the lost! May we all learn more of our duty to God and each other, give him glory for his mercy, and be saved in his soon coming kingdom. Amen.

Living Testimony.

A living testimony will not be given in vain or return void; it is like an electrical machine; every thing that comes in contact with it receives an impulse. It is so with a living church. I saw this exemplified at the late Conference at Chapman Hall. A young man who was on his way to the theatre, was passing by, and hearing the singing went in and took a seat. A brother got up and said a few words. On taking his seat, the young man said, if he could feel as happy as that man, he would give all he was worth. He said he never enjoyed religion, and seldom went to meeting; but he said the man showed by his words and actions that he felt what he said. He saw it in his eyes.

How important that professors of religion should be filled with the Spirit. Every word and action would then be in the circle in which he moves, like the pulsations of the heart, giving vitality to the whole system. His countenance would speak if his tongue was silent. I heard of a man who had been to a camp meeting, and on his return went into a cotton factory, looked round a while, and went out without saying a word, but his appearance sent conviction to the heart of one at least, and conversion soon followed. Let us have the spirit and mind that was in Christ Jesus.

THE CREEDS OF THE WORLD.—Mr. C. F. W. Deitterich, a statistician and director of the Statistical Department of Berlin, estimating the population of the world at 1,300,000,000, sets down the Asiatic religions as believed by 600,000,000, or about forty-six per cent.; the Christian religion by 335,000,000, or about twenty-five per cent.; Pagans, 200,000,000, or about fifteen per cent.; Mohammedans, 160,000,000, or about twelve per cent. The three hundred and thirty-five million Christians are again divided into one hundred and seventy million Roman Catholics, or about fifty per cent.; eighty million Protestants, about twenty-five per cent.; and seventy-six million Greek Catholics, about twenty-two per cent.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, APRIL 11, 1860.

Relief for the Distressed; or, How we got out of "Doubting Castle."

No. 16.

We have carefully examined nineteen Divisions and forty-seven sections of "Doubting Castle" in search for truth and light, and thus far have found only error and darkness. As we advance, the old "Castle" looks worse and worse; and we were never so well satisfied as now, that the whole institution is based on fables, ingeniously set forth to perplex the honest hearted pilgrims to Zion's land. Thank the Lord of glory that the day is at hand when his truth will triumph, and error will fall to rise no more forever.

In the twentieth Division of "Doubting Castle," Bro. Burnham found the following strange questions:

"If all there is of man ceases at death, how can he have a resurrection? (48) Must not that which is extinct be recreated to come into existence again? (49) How can man be identified without a germ? (50) How can man be 'CLOTHED UPON' unless there is SOMETHING TO CLOTHE?" (51)

48. Resurrection is defined a "return from the grave." If man does not cease to live at death, how can he have a resurrection? Resurrection has no reference to what is alive. The first question in Div. 20 carries the idea that the soul is to raise the body; hence if the whole man is dead, then there is no soul to raise him. If this is not the idea, we see no force in the question. Suppose for a moment, that "Doubting Castle" theology is true; and that at death the soul leaves the body, just as a man leaves a house that is to be pulled down and set up again. What difference will it make concerning the re-building of the house, whether the man is dead or alive, unless he is to rebuild it himself, or assist others in doing it?

49. We pass to the second inquiry: must not that which is extinct be recreated to come into existence again? We would answer this question by asking another; must not that which is raised from the dead, cease to live, before it can have a resurrection? The apostle affirms, "The dead shall be raised." Again he says, "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?"—Acts 26 : 8. When Christ raised the widow's son and Lazarus from the dead, he did not re-create them, but brought them to life again by a resurrection. They were as dead one day after "the breath of life" left them, as they would have been in one thousand years from that time; and could be raised as easily by the Lord at the end of the latter, as the former period; but in neither case is it recreation, but resurrection.

These questions from the faculty of "Doubting Castle" show that they have but little confidence in the great, cardinal doctrine of christianity—the resurrection of the dead. Indeed, why should they have? If, as they believe, at death "the real man" does not die, but only slips out of the body, as a man would from a pest-house, to move into a beautiful mansion prepared for him by some rich friend; why should he have any thing more to do with the old house, or body that died of the small pox? Why talk about the resurrection of the dead, if men are not dead?

50. We pass to the next question: "How can man be identified without a germ?"

How do we identify our friends? Suppose a man is killed in some disaster, as the "Lawrence calamity," do the children identify their father by some "germ," that is "immaterial," "uncompounded," "indivisible," "indissoluble," "intangible," with neither "exterior" nor "interior;" as the soul is defined by the supporters of "Doubting Castle?" or by the real, tangible organism, which they have known as their father? How was Jesus identified after his resurrection? Hear him. "Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself." In his hands and upon his feet were the prints of the nails, which helped to identify him. He says, "handle me and see." Thus we identify our friends, and not by some invisible, indefineable germ as taught in "Doubting Castle."

51. We pass to notice the fourth question posted upon the walls of the twentieth Division of the "Castle:" "How can man be 'clothed upon' unless there is something to clothe?"

Really, this is quite a sensible question, and we would like to repeat it. How could that be clothed that has neither "exterior" nor "interior," that which is "immaterial," having no "body or parts?" How? But we can see, and understand, how a "man" may be clothed or unclothed; such a being as God calls man, which is a material, tangible being, made of the dust of the ground in the "likeness" of his Creator.

The more we examine the theology of "Doubting Castle," the more ridiculous and absurd it looks; and we are astonished that we were ever persuaded to believe it for a moment; but we most heartily thank the Lord for delivering us from such vain philosophy and wild theological fables.

But we must not stop now to rejoice, but hasten on to the assistance of our dear Bro. Burnham and others who have been ensnared by the specious wiles of the "Doubting Castle" supporters.

We will enter the twenty-first Division. Here Bro. B. found the following:

"Christ told the Jewish High Priest that he should see the Lord coming, at his second advent, in the clouds of heaven. We have no evidence that the High Priest was converted before his death—rather, strong Bible evidence to the contrary—and therefore it follows, that either the High Priest must be conscious out of the body, to witness the event, or be raised, in his wickedness, with the righteous." (52)

52. Suppose we admit, for argument's sake, the position taken by the managers of "Doubting Castle," which is, that the High Priest, to whom the Savior addressed himself, is now alive, and has been for over eighteen hundred years. Where is he? "In hades." Where is that? "In the earth." How then can he "see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven," while he remains in the earth? Besides, his eyes and brain returned to dust long ago; how is he to have the sensation of sight without these? And still further, the Bible affirms that in hades, where he is said to be, there is no knowledge; how then can he know any thing about the coming of the Lord, before he is raised from the dead? We see then that it is absolutely necessary that the High Priest be raised from the dead before he can "see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power."—Matt. 26 : 64. The angel said to John, "Every eye shall see him; but as none can see him while they remain in hades, it follows as a sequence, that all the dead must be raised before they can see Christ.

As we can see no proof in this Division that man is conscious between death and the resurrection, we pass to the next.

DIVISION twenty-two. Here we find the following:—

"The apostle Peter speaks of putting 'off this my tabernacle.' What puts it off? Is it the breath, life, heat, ai , or the intelligent spirit? This putting off he calls his 'decease.' So then, when a man deceases, something puts off something." (53)

53. In answer to the inquiry, "What puts off?" we reply, it is the one represented by the pronoun "I" and "my;" and none can doubt but they stand for Peter himself, in the passage under examination. If "I" and "my" represent the "intelligent spirit" living in Peter's body, which is called the "tabernacle," then it follows that this "intelligent spirit" does all the talking. Let us listen. "Moreover, I ['the intelligent spirit'] will endeavor that ye may be able after my ['the intelligent spirits'] decease, to have these things always in remembrance." It will be observed that there is not a word about the decease of the tabernacle, but it is the I and my which we are told is the "intelligent spirit"!!! This view is fatal to "Doubting Castle" theology. Hence we shall have to go further, before we find proof that man has a spirit that is intelligent when he is dead. Reader, is it not strange that any should think that a dead man knows more than a living one? This being true, what a pity that we were not born dead in order that we might have more knowledge than the living! We are thankful that the Bible requires us to believe no such absurdities.

Our Conference.

The General Conference at Boston commencing April 4th, has been one of great interest, and of most happy success. Those present could say without exageration, "It is good to be here." A large number of brethren and sisters from abroad attended and assisted in hearty praise of the God of Abraham and his Son Jesus, our Savior. Our meeting has truly been like an oasis in life's desert way. The Spirit of the Most High rested upon us to reprove the unfaithful, arouse the sleeping, cheer the disconsolate, and encourage the faithful to greater diligence in the vineyard of the Lord.

All who came into the meeting seemed impressed with the feeling, the Spirit of the Lord is here of a truth. As a result, we felt a union stronger and more blessed than any mere family relations. We felt we had no kindred so near and dear as our brethren and sisters in CHRIST.

Our first meeting, Wednesday, P. M., was made very interesting by an excellent and instructive sermon from Bro. J. S. White, on the Bible hope, as contrasted with the hopes outside of the Bible. We felt like saying at the close of the sermon, in the language of the apostle, praise the Lord "for that blessed hope." This is the hope that leads one to purify himself; and like an anchor holds him from entering into the follies, fashions, and sins of the world. It was clearly shown that the gospel hope of a future life is through Christ and the resurrection of the dead; and that the Bible gives us no ground to hope of going to heaven when we die, as many believe. It was made plain that the latter view is opposed by all the positive Bible texts on the subject. Paul was introduced as a witness on this point, and said, "If the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised; and . . . they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." Several stirring exhortations followed Bro. White's gospel sermon.

In the evening, Bro. Munger preached an opportune sermon on practical christianity, which produced very happy results. It was followed by several cheering testimonies, which caused us to feel that the work of the Lord was already begun in our midst.

Thursday. At ten o'clock, we met for a social meeting, which continued till noon, and was deeply interesting. Many thrilling testimonies were given which awakened the most lively emotions of gratitude to God for his wonderful works to the children of men. Among others, was a soul-stirring one from Bro. S. F. Fisk, of Savannah, Georgia, who was seized by a mob, which entered his room at night, gagged and blindfolded him, presenting daggers and pistols, with threats, leading him away from his home and friends to a by-place, where they tarred and feathered him in connection with other severe abuse. Said he, "One in such a situation knows the worth of the christian religion." He was happy in the love of Jesus. The Lord did not leave him in the trying hour but was a present help in time of need. He did not see how one could help loving Jesus and his appearing.

Thursday, P. M., Bro. H. L. Hastings entertained us with an interesting discourse on the nature and character of the "Word" of God. In the evening, Bro. Rufus Wendell of Albany, preached a profitable sermon on practical christianity. We commend Bro. W. to the churches of Christ. He has just left a profitable business, to preach the everlasting gospel, and we think he has not mistaken his calling.

At the close of the morning meeting, Bro. Hiram Munger, of Chickopee Falls, Mass.; Charles Stevens, Exeter, N. H.; and Joseph W. White, Portsmouth, N. H.; were set apart for the ministry. We rejoice in the fact that the Lord is calling faithful men to sound the alarm to a dying world that must soon stand in the judgment. Pray for them, and help them after a godly sort. Discussion at Plymouth.

Our discussion at Plymouth with Mr. Leo Miller, of New York, has been one of deep interest. It was continued five evenings before a large and very attentive audience. Mr. Miller has recently had a discussion at the Melodeon in Boston, with Prof. Grimes, on the same subject. He is considered a champion in the defence of Spiritualism.

The first three evenings were spent in discussing the following:

Resolved, "That the Bible, facts, and philosophy, teach that disembodied human spirits do hold intercourse with men on earth."

The last two evenings, we discussed the following question:

"Can the various phenomena known as spirit manifestations be satisfactorily and philosophically accounted for without admitting the agency of departed human beings?"

If ridicule, sarcasm and misrepresentation were sound arguments, then his side was well sustained. The great truths of the Bible were treated with contemptuous sport; and yet at the same time he claimed that modern Spiritualism is ancient christianity revived. We brought forward many facts from the writings of eminent and experienced Spiritualists, showing that Spiritualism is tending directly to sensualism and atheism. Among others we mentioned the case of John Spear, the noted medium, through whom a number of advanced spirits communicated the materials for an octavo volume of 680 pp.; who has become the father of an illegitimate child, in the midst of his spiritual career; which act is defended by an able writer in the Spiritual Telegraph; and of which Mr. Miller said, "he (Spear) had an illustrious antecedent," referring to the birth of Christ. "Among his sayings are the following:—"There never was a time when God began to create men." "Paul never taught the literal resurrection of the dead." "Spiritualists reaffirm the principles of Christ." "Christ is not in a real body." "It is impossible for a demon to transform himself into an angel of light." "Christ did not care a fig about the resurrection." "Spiritualists are performing as great cures now as Christ ever did." "A being higher than man is higher than God." "The soul is a spark of Deity." "God is in all things." "Man has all the attributes of God." "God cannot raise the dead," etc. etc.

The discussion has evidently resulted in much good in opening the eyes of the people to the evil tendency of Spiritualism. Nothing is clearer in morals, than that it is wholly anti-christian; or, as Dr. T. L. Nichols, a noted Spiritualist, says; "Spiritualism meets, neutralizes, and destroys christianity."

GOD NEVER PERPLEXED.—"God is not in perplexity when affairs are in complexity; and that which is a Gordian-knot to President and Congress, is not so to him." So said Dr. Cox at a late anniversary of the Tract Society. It is a glorious truth that God rules, and that he knows what is to come out of all conflicts. He sees the end from the beginning. His purposes will be accomplished, whoever else may be disappointed. His purposes are all right, and ought to prevail. The Lord ruleth, let the earth rejoice.—Ex.

☞ Everything that a man leans upon but God, will be a dart that will certainly pierce his heart through and through. He who leans only upon Christ, lives the highest, choicest, safest and sweetest life.

Our Tract Column.

For the Crisis.

Tract Fund for the West.

A preacher writes from "The Seat of War:"

"R——, March 9th, 1860.

My health is quite good, except worn out. I have been laboring hard and constantly. The Lord has been with me, for which I am thankful. The TRACTS are doing much good; they are opening doors on every hand for labor, and houses are crowded to overflowing. I never saw such an interest to hear as now. O my Lord, where are all of the laborers? Send them forth! If times ever change in the West, and the Lord spares me to labor here, I intend to wear those tract plates of yours so smooth that they will not print. Those old tracts are good, and will always be good till the kingdom comes. May the Lord speed the work!—W. F."

Go ahead, Walter. I will try and not publish anything that will get out of date, like an old almanac by New Year's. As for the plates, you are welcome to use them till they are smooth as the palm of your hand. Of course, tracts will open the way for labor, they always do, and they are about the only preachers that can travel and tell their story without anything to eat, drink, or wear, or any support for families at home. Unfortunately, some folks seem to have an idea that all other preachers can do the same, and act accordingly. Well, the Lord liveth and careth for all his flock. I have sent you a box of tracts to E——. Let them fly judiciously, but "very swiftly" I shall have more when I can get time to make them, and when present means are gone the Lord will send more.

"Indiana, March 22d, 1860.

DEAR BRO. HASTINGS:—I am happy to inform you that those tracts you were kind enough to send me a few days since, have been received, and that they are now at work doing good. Last Sabbath, some of them fell into the hands of a minister, who, being willing to investigate truth, rested not until he had devoured the contents of each, and when through exclaimed, 'Where did you get these?' On being told, he continued, 'Where does he live? I want to get more. Perhaps Bro. G—— can furnish me with some to give away. At all events, I must find out upon what terms they may be obtained. I am with anybody and everybody that teaches Christ's coming as the hope of the church.'

I shall send him a catalogue so soon as I can learn his address. Bro. H., I want more tracts, but I cannot pay now—perhaps I can after a while—the Lord knows. I am poor in this world's goods, but, thank God, 'I am rich in faith.' None beside me have, in this neighborhood, avowed their belief in the Savior's soon coming, but I am preparing to sound the alarm.

Will you please inform me what concordance to the Bible is the best?" etc.

Yes, Cruden's—"Cruden's Condensed," published by the American Tract Society, can be sent by mail for $1.50. The best New Testament Concordance is the "Englishman's Greek"—first rate. Every Bible student should have it. Price, $4. I have a few copies for sale. To preachers, for cash, $3.25. Have sent you twenty-four hundred pages of tracts.

Extracts from other letters from different parts of the country.

"Wisconsin, March 21st, '60.

. . . . I want to have you send me another bundle of tracts, if you can afford it. I would be glad to pay you for them, but I have been out preaching most all winter, have had no pay for it and have distributed the tracts you sent me and as many more from Bro. S——. God has blessed, good has been done; about forty have embraced the truth, some have been converted and some have been baptized, and the truth is on the gain and is bound to triumph, so I think I am pretty well paid, etc.—B."

"MICH. ——.

Last week there was a tract handed me. It was a sermon by Eld. W. Sheldon, upon man's future state. Now his views are mine. If ever there was an earnest seeker after truth, the person who holds this pen is one. Upon the back of this tract were titles of numerous Books and Tracts published by you. O that I were able to purchase them all to scatter far and near; but I am not. Now if you will send me a catalogue of the different works, I will see if I cannot be the means of doing some little good in the world.—F."

CONN., Feb., 1860.

"I received the bundle of Books and Tracts you sent me . . . . I can assure you I retired to rest that night feeling richer and happier than I had for a long time. I have had some precious seasons since; it seemed almost like having conference meetings with you. I felt much blessed while reading the Tract "One Thing," and had deeper impressions of my Father's love than ever before—more confidence to cast all my care upon him. O is there anything in all this wide world to be compared to the glorious gospel of the blessed God—any hope like my hope? No, no. I was almost destitute of Tracts, and those you sent me were very thankfully received.

'Reasons for my Hope' is indeed a precious work, and while you pour out the waters of salvation for thirsty sinners, may 'Our Father' in return give you such measures of his grace and blessing as shall be pressed down and running over.

Eight of the 'Reasons' are already telling their story, and I hope by and by to be able to give you some account of the good resulting from their distribution."

"VT., March 18th, 1860.

Your letter and "Reasons for my Hope" were received and read by us with pleasure. Many thanks to you for them—but will that pay you? If not, will the addition of a 'God bless you'? I presume it will, as I know you are in the habit of receiving such pay from some whose religion isn't pocket deep."

Yes, that will pay me. All right.

"I Would not Live Alway."—Job 7:16.

BY HENRY W. DANN.

There are pleasant life-scenes that gather around us even in this vale of tears; and the enchanting scenery of earth, the mysterious ties of friendship that bind together our common humanity, conspire to make us feel a desire to live alway.

The pleasant associations of the present life; the comfort and convenience that meet us at every succeeding step of our pilgrimage, and the star of hope that illumines the breast,—all tend to strengthen the desire to live alway. But when we turn from scenes like these, and direct our thoughts heavenward, stretching our vision so as to catch a glimpse of the "glory that shall be revealed," then it is that this early desire, which seems to be interwoven into our very nature, passes away, and the soul striving to rid itself of the infirmities of this mortality, exclaims in loudest tones, I would not live alway.

1. I would not live alway, because this is a world of ignorance, sin and death.

Mystery thicker than midnight gloom or the darkness of an Egyptian night, gathers about the present life. I look about me on every hand, and impenetrable mysteries meet my gaze. Occurring events incomprehensible to human mind rise up before me at every succeeding step of my pilgrimage.

Again I look, and the voice of sorrow and the wailings of grief, and distress haunt my soul on every side. I see the children of cruel poverty asking in vain for bread. I see the widow, lonely and desolate, kneeling in prayer imploring aid. I see the prison houses filled with pictures of hopeless despair. I see the terrors of war devastating the world, and the horrors of pestilential vapors, as they fill the air, being the sad harbingers of approaching death. I see gaunt famine gazing at the human race with the "blank stare of an idiot" pointing to impending ruin and death. I look upon all these sickening scenes of earth, and as they fall upon my heart with oppressive weight, I say to myself, I would not live alway.

2. I would not live alway, because there is a better country beyond the tomb.

The world we now inhabit is a dreary desert, and save here and there a fertile spot, it is a vast, thick and impenetrable wilderness, and through this maze of life may be heard the tramp of nine hundred million of busy feet, crowding every thoroughfare of life, and pressing onward, they know not where, until suddenly they are overwhelmed in the shadow of death. But oh! that heavenly country, where I shall see the eternal God, where Jesus my Savior, and angels pure and bright, and the spirits of just men made perfect evermore shall dwell;—who would live alway in view of such a land as this? There no tears of sorrow ever fall; no sighs of grief ever heave the breast; no voice of misery ever salutes the ear.

No, I would not live alway, for the delightful breezes of that country are pure and healthful, and its "flowers are fragrant with the breath of paradise;" its music is more melodious than any that ever fell on mortal ears; its trees bloom with eternal verdure; its fountains of living waters sparkle for the healing of the nations, and over its golden, glittering pave, move in shining splendor the marshalled hosts of God's elect; and the triumphant song, first raised at the incarnation of the Son of God, swells along the battlements of heaven, and bursts forth in still louder strains, when the saints of every age, with Jesus at their head, shout a song of eternal joy.

3. I would not live alway, because I prefer vision without obscurity.

Now I see as through a dimning veil. I strain my weary eyes to catch a glimpse of the Son of God; but I can only see him as revealed in the word of prophecy. I read of him as a man of sorrow. I read of the memorable day when they crucified the Son of God, when rocks parted, and the vail of the Jewish dispensation passed away. Still I see only through the eye of prophecy and thus direct my thoughts to God.

But there I shall see Jesus face to face. I shall ever gaze upon the lovely face of the Son of God; as he stands surrounded by the heavenly multitude in ineffable brightness, I shall behold in very deed the Son of the Highest, the Savior of lost men, of whom Moses and the prophets did write. There a robe of spotless purity shall be mine, and this mortal eye shall see without a veil between.

I shall be an heir with God, joint proprietor with the Lord of lords and King of kings. Heir to an estate as immense as creation, and as boundless as the universe of God. Heir of Him who owneth all things in heaven above and in the earth beneath, and in the waters under the earth; who holds at his command the most distant star that twinkles in ... space, and worlds innumerable that lie beyond the ken of finite mortals. To such an estate I shall be an heir; then who would desire to live alway?

4. I would not live alway, because I [illegible] for holiness without [illegible] and for nearly six thousand years it has shed its blighting influence upon the world, and blasted the hopes and prospects of millions of the race. It has filled the world with misery and death.

[illegible]

There is not a household in christian lands, nor an island bordering on heathen shores, but has felt the curse.

Here sin wages a warfare against every member of the body, and the mind has frequently to engage in the fearful struggle. In our families sin rears its huge and uncomely form. Into our business it stealthily creeps; into society it finds its sure and certain way; and in the hearts of the holiest of men it rises up to choke the desires for a future life.

In view of all this mass of corruption, sin and death, I repeat it, I would not live alway; for in heaven the last vestige of sin is removed, and the bitter dregs of the cup of death are left behind. The unhallowed appetites, affections and propensities of the present life will find no place in that better country to which I hasten.

(To be concluded.)

Philosophical Miscellany.

SELECTIONS BY X. Y. Z.

1. There can be no incorporeal God (as Plato maintained), not only because no man can frame a conception of an incorporeal substance, but also because whatever is incorporeal must needs want sense, and prudence, and pleasure, all which things are included in the notion of God; and therefore an incorporeal Deity is a contradiction. * * * * *

They who say that the soul is incorporeal, in any other sense than as that word may be used to signify a subtle body, talk vainly and foolishly; for then it could neither be able to do nor to suffer any thing. It could not act upon any other thing, because it could touch nothing; neither could it suffer from any thing, because it could not be touched by any thing; but it would be just like to vacuum and empty space, which can neither do nor suffer any thing, but only yield bodies a passage through it.

2. Whatsoever is, is extended or hath geometrical quantity and measurability in it; which if it be tangible, then it is body, and fills up a place in the world, being part of the whole mass; but if it be intangible, so that it cannot resist the passage of any thing through it, then it is nothing but empty space or vacuum.

3. It can only be by an excess of ridiculous vanity that men attribute to themselves a soul of a different kind from that which animates the brutes. It is clear that neither the philosophers nor myself know what this soul is; it is only proven that it is something common to the animal called man and that called brute. Let us see if this faculty common to all animals is matter or not.

It is impossible, they tell me, that matter should think. I do not see this impossibility. . . . I judge that the same cause acts in brutes and in men according to their organs; and I believe that this principle, common to men and brutes, is an attribute bestowed by God upon matter. For if that which they call soul were a separate being, of whatever nature, I must believe that thought is its essence, etc.

4. This soul being of a nature different from the body, must necessarily act in a different manner; yet we see that this pretended soul is sensible of the motion experienced by the body, and that these two substances, essentially different, always act in concert. You will say that this harmony is also a mystery. But I will tell you, that I see not my soul, that I know and am sensible of my body only, that it is my body which feels, thinks, judges, suffers, and enjoys; and that all these faculties are necessary results of its own mechanism, or organization.

5. Two causes have led the metaphysicians of all sects to this hypothesis of the supremacy of the intellect. The first is the radical separation which it was thought necessary to make between brutes and man, and which would have been effected at once by the admission of the preponderance of the affective over the intellectual faculties; and the second was the necessity that the metaphysicians found themselves under, of preserving the unity of what they called the I, that it might correspond with the unity of the soul, in obedience to the requisitions of the theological philosophy, of which metaphysics is, as we must ever bear in mind, the final transformation.

6. An immaterial [body is] a thoroughly fanciful, subjective body. Immaterial love is a chimera. "He who now lives will be again; nor shall the opening sepulchre defraud me of a tooth or a nail," said Aurelius. And this faith, which you consider rude and carnal, and which you therefore disavow, is the only consistent, honest, and true faith. To the identity of the person belongs the identity of the body.

The body is the basis, the subject of personality. Only by the body, is a real personality distinguished from the imaginary one of a spectre.

7. That man were created after the image and likeness of God, is known from Genesis 1: 26, 27; also that God was seen as man by Abraham and others. The ancients from the wise to the simple thought [illegible] that God had a form.

8. That which has no form, parts, or extension, is nothing. God is a substance. Is not the soul a substance, and an organism? If it is not, is it not a nothing? If the human soul is any thing, if it is a substance, it must have form.

9. The soul that knows not the truth dies and is dissolved with the body; but it rises again with the body, at the end of the world. But, furnished with the knowledge of God, it does not [finally] die, though it be dissolved for a time. * * * * * *

That which has no form, parts, or extension, is nothing. God is a substance. If the human soul is any thing, if it is a substance, it must have form.

10. The common opinion of the world is, that all men's souls are immortal, and cannot, or do not die, but slip out of their bodies as out of a prison, into some other world. The heathen philosophers were the first preachers of that doctrine. Thus we see no going to heaven till Christ come again to gather his elect; the saint and sinner remain in or on this earth till then; there is no purgatory or third place; but, when dead, saint and sinner lie quietly in the grave together.

Because their spirits are quenched, or gone out, death making all equal; there being no pre-eminence in the grave, although elect and reject are crowded together, yet all is but inconceivable dust, and makes one heap until the Lord come.

Correspondence.

From J. A. Sober.

BRO. GRANT:—Since I last wrote you I have visited Taconcia, Burlington, Leroy and Alagansee. The last named place is in Branch Co., and the three preceding places are located in Calhoun Co. As I had but little time to spend on this tour I could consequently stay but a short time at either place. I arrived at Taconcia, Saturday, March 3d, about noon. Notice was circulated through the village that there would be preaching at the school-house that evening at the usual hour; the hour came, and with it a goodly congregation came together to listen to the stranger, and to them, no doubt, strange ideas and "new doctrine"; but nothing more nor less than is plainly set forth in the living oracles; for I always seek and labor to keep inside the revelation God has given us. As the Baptists and Methodists were to have meeting during the daytime the following day—it being Lord's day—I left an appointment for Sunday evening only, not wishing to interfere with the appointments of those denominations, for I think it ill policy to in any way interfere or encroach upon the rights and privileges of others; and I think the course pursued in this case showed good results, for my congregation Sunday evening was double that of the evening previous, and it equaled in numbers both the Baptist and Methodist congregations together. Those two meetings were the only ones I held there, but I went away confident, to say the least, the cause was not injured by the visit I made them.

There are but few believers in Taconcia; no organized church. Monday morning I went on my way to Burlington—distant from Taconcia five miles—arrived there at noon, circulated notice for meeting in the evening. At the usual hour a comfortable congregation assembled in the school-room, which I addressed on the manner of God's dealings with the human race. Left an appointment for the following evening, and the Freewill Baptist meeting house was kindly opened for our meeting, but on account of rain the meeting was almost a failure.

This was my last appointment at Burlington for the present; and next day, Wednesday, March 7th, I went to Leroy,—distant from Burlington some fourteen miles, reached there about 1 o'clock P. M., and immediately circulated notice for meeting in the evening, when a good congregation came together, for so short a notice. At Leroy there is an organized church of twenty-one members, apparently in a healthy and thriving condition. May the Lord bless them abundantly and add to their numbers such as shall be saved in the day of Christ.

Thursday morning set my face homeward, taking Alagansee in my route, where I arrived Friday, March 9th, about sunset; but the brethren had given out an appointment, and a few came together at the school-house, and we had quite an interesting meeting.

Saturday, reached home somewhat fatigued from the journey. I praise the Lord for the strength he gave me to do his will and publish his gospel to my fellow men.

At Burlington there are about fifteen believers in the gospel, but no regularly organized church. I hope, however, they will come together in gospel order in due time, and be a blessing to the community around them, and a mutual blessing to themselves.

At Alagansee also there are some ten or twelve believers, but it is, perhaps, due them to say that some of them, (if not all) have, with those from Cambria and Reading, united, and recently organized a church at Reading Village. Bro. and Sr. Mansfield have been here with us about two weeks recently, and labored to good acceptance. May the Lord grant them grace and every needed blessing to encourage them on in the field of gospel labor.

In conclusion, I wish to say, that I am about settling with the brethren at Burlington, and those who wish to address me, will please notice the change and direct thus: Burlington, Calhoun Co., Mich.

From J. M. Stephenson.

I have long desired to write a short communication for the Crisis, expressive of my gratitude for your kindness in sending me your valuable paper so long, free of charge. Pecuniary embarrassment renders it impossible for me to pay for any paper, either political or religious; yet through the kindness and liberality of friends, I have the perusal of the leading papers upon both these themes. I think an unprejudiced mind can derive benefit from the use of all the means of light and truth placed within its reach.

I think all the Advent papers advocate many important truths, far in advance of any other class of religious literature. I do not believe that any one of them has all the truth; yet some have, unquestionably, more than others. But to obey the Divine injunction, "Prove all things; hold fast that which is good," we must investigate all the systems which inculcate important truths, compare their respective positions, together with the arguments with which they are sustained; and thus be prepared to select all that is valuable and truthful, by the intelligent use of all the available means; and having, upon the eclectic system, arrived at the truth, in the main, we shall be enabled to discharge faitfully our whole duty to God, the truth, and humanity; we shall be able, in every position, and in every situation in which we may be placed, to give a reason for the hope within us.

I hear many of my brethren giving as a reason why they will not patronize the Crisis, the Expositor, the Herald, the Banner, etc.,—"I do not believe the doctrines they advocate; it will be endorsing and sustaining error." Should I adopt this standard of judgment, I could not support a religious periodical extant in the world; for there is not one from which, upon some points, I do not conscientiously differ; yet from them all I do believe I can arrive at a truthful solution of nearly all the great questions involved in the signs of the times, and in the great doctrinal points now agitating the whole professed christian world.

Still further, upon the principle of absolute unity of sentiment, as a basis of fellowship, I exceedingly doubt whether I could fellowship any other christian upon the face of the earth. I must, therefore, adopt a more charitable and liberal basis of union, fellowship, and co-operation.

If ever there shall be a permament union among those who are looking for the speedy Advent of Christ, it must be upon the Bible as the only rule of faith, and christian character as the only basis of fellowship.

A system of abstract truth, beautiful as a model statute of marble, may be as cold and cheerless a home for God, his suffering poor, or the warm pulsations of sympathy, kindness and humanity,—and love to man. Even the grand and magnificent temple of Solomon was no better than St. Peter's and St Paul's—the pride and glory of London and Rome—until the great God condescended to dwell within its consecrated walls; until a mercy-seat was erected where a unit church might meet a unit God.

The most beautiful superstructure of truth upon which men or angels have ever gazed, may be as destitute of the life of christianity, as the ancient temple of Belus was of the presence of the living God. Correct theories will not save one sinner without correct practice. I am convinced that less theorizing and more practice would result in a greater amount of good. We do not want less truth, but more practice—more brotherly love—more of the spirit of Christ—more charity for an erring brother.

While I cannot endorse all the views advocated by the Crisis, I can with all my heart reciprocate the spirit it manifests in every department. I can fully and cordially endorse the just and equitable rules by which it is governed, viz., to grant perfect freedom in the investigation of every subject; but to exclude controversy in the usual form, and yet retain all its benefits, by allowing each party the privilege of presenting his best evidence and strongest arguments, and leaving the intelligent reader to decide according to the weight of testimony.

I do hope that the time is nearing when all who are anxiously looking for the return of our blessed and long absent Savior, shall be of one heart and of one mind, when the watchmen shall see eye to eye. But before the desirable end can be attained, we must use means adapted thereto. We must cultivate a spirit of mutual forbearance. Each must esteem another better than himself. Each must sympathize with every member of the body of Christ; and all must acknowledge Christ as the head of the body, and all the members thereof as a great family of brethren.

In conclusion, I would be glad to have the reading of the Crisis. Many others read my papers. Some send for the Crisis, others for the Expositor, according to their respective preferences. I hope the Crisis may be sustained, and that it may perform its part of the great work to be accomplished before the coming of Christ. And in the kingdom of God may I meet many with whose names I have become familiar through the columns of the Crisis. Amen.

Obituary Notices.

Died, in Wakefield, N. H., Oct. 16, 1859, PAUL FARNHAM, aged sixty eight years, three months and one day.

The subject of this notice embraced religion, and united with the F. W. Baptist church, when young, and was a worthy member of the same church about thirty years; when, on hearing the doctrine of the premillenial, personal and immediate coming of the Lord, and other kindred truths, he embraced and advocated the same, and was identified with the people who advocated these truths during the last eight years of his life.

A widow and family of children are left to mourn the loss, together with a large circle of relatives and friends. The funeral sermon was preached by Eld. Joseph Spinney, from the latter clause of the following text, Eccl. 12: 5;—"Because man goeth to his long home, and the mourners go about the streets."

A husband, father and brother now sleeps, waiting for the dawn of the resurrection morn, when God's clarion will be heard and the sleepers come forth. May the family be prepared to share those glories in reserve for the righteous, with all the saints of God from every age and clime.

"There is a world to come,
Blessed and pure;
It is the christian's home,
Long to endure.
O 'tis a world most bright,
No more death, nor woe, nor night,
Faith views it with delight,
Knowing 'tis sure."

A. W. SIBLEY.

Died, in Wallingford, Conn., March 23d, Sister LAURA ANN, wife of Bro. Edward Hill, aged forty-four years.

Sister Hill's disease was a lingering consumption. Her death had been long expected. Her family consisted of her husband and an only son who is about twenty-one years of age. They feel very keenly the pangs of parting, notwithstanding it had been so long expected. Her sufferings were great, but her patience was equal to her necessity. She was the brightest example of piety, christian meekness and patience that I ever knew. The Baptist minister of that place said to me that he loved her spirit. She embraced the doctrine of the speedy coming of Christ in the early part of the Advent movement, and has remained firm in the faith from that time to the hour of her death. She was a "living epistle" to all who knew her. She believed that she should "sleep" until the second coming of Christ, and then enter upon the inheritance promised to Abraham and his seed.

The Baptist friends very kindly opened their house of worship for the funeral service, where a sermon was delivered by the writer, from Job 38 17,—"Have the gates of death been opened to thee? or hast thou seen the doors of the shadow of death?" Bro. Ira Morgan was present and assisted in the services. I pray that the impression then made on the minds of those present may be lasting and profitable.

Ye bereaved ones, who anxiously inquire

"When will the tedious night be gone,
When will our LORD appear?"

hear the ready answer of the Savior,—"Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me." L. S. LUDINGTON.

Advent Herald, please copy.

Fell asleep in Jesus, on the 22d inst, at Fishcreek Landing, Vienna, N. Y., a worthy little brother, GEORGE WELCH, the son of Wm and Lucy Welch, aged nine years.

He was beloved by all that knew him. His sickness was the typhus fever, during which he suffered much, but bore it with christian fortitude. His loss is deeply felt by a large circle of friends; but they mourn not as those that have no hope; they hope to meet this little one in the kingdom of God.

Friends, this span of life is fleeting;
Hark! the harp of angels swell;
Think of the eternal meeting,
Where no voice shall say, farewell!

H. M. GIFFORD.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[From Liverpool the 21st ult.]

The annexation of Savoy to France has been definitely settled by France and Sardinia, and the treaty signed.

Florence Nightingale is seriously ill, and prayers are offered in the garrison chapel for her.

The municipal Council of Nice have voted against the annexation of Savoy to France, and sent a deputation to Turin on the subject.

The commercial treaty between England and France is in full operation.

Senor Farini has formally presented to the King of Sardinia the votes of Æmilian provinces in favor of annexation. The King, in reply, said he accepted the vote, as also that of the Romagna, but at the same time he would not fail in deep devotedness to the Pope.

The Pope had addressed an admonitory to Victor Emanuel, breaking off all relations, and excommunicating him.

Austria declines to renew diplomatic intercourse with Sardinia, owing to flagrant violations of the treaty of Zurich by the latter power.

[From Liverpool the 24th ult.]

THE SAVOY QUESTION.

The annexation of Savoy to France was generally regarded as an accomplished fact. The London Times admits that the Emperor Napoleon had gone so far that he could not in honor recede without a fight, and says that he must be permitted to carry off his prey.

The Paris Patrie states that 50,000 men were about to be levied in Tuesday and 25,000 in the Æmilian provinces, thereby increasing the Sardinian army to nearly 300,000 men.

Letters from Naples speak of continued agitation and popular manifestations on the frontiers.

The Paris Patrie says the Sardinian troops had commenced the evacuation of Savoy, and the first detachment of the French troops, returning from Lombardy, would arrive in Savoy on the 25th [illegible] March [illegible]

The London Times [illegible] that the annexation must be quietly allowed, but at the same time denounces the act as an act of spoliation and wrong, and in principle as bad as a march upon the Rhine, or a sudden attempt upon Antwerp, and must leave upon all minds the conviction that there is no safety except in continued watchfulness and armed preparation against the aggressions of a sovereign who thus seizes upon the possessions of a friendly power.

The Paris correspondent of the London Times says all the powers had replied to France relative to Savoy, and gives the following as the substance of their notes. Russia says, so long as the right of the people to select their rulers is not put forward by France, and that as the present change does not affect the balance of Europe, what Sardinia may do with Savoy is no affair of hers. Prussia says, as the Emperor formerly disavows the doctrine of natural frontiers, the transfer of Savoy is no business of hers. Austria declares she certainly does not approve of any annexation of the kind, but as Europe stood by when other annexations were effected, she does not see what she has to do with the Savoy annexation.

Six French regiments are said to have taken possession of Cnablais and Francigny.

A French frigate had arrived off Nice, and several regiments were expected there.

Le Nord says the reply of the British government had reached Paris, and it was understood that it had not renounced all hope of preventing annexation, or at least of reducing it to proportions which would make it a constant embarrassment to France.

Agitation continued in Hungary. Numerous arrests had been made at Pesth.

Revolutionary proclamations are said to have been discovered by the police.

Many rifled cannon had been recently made in Austria, and were supposed to have been sent to Venetia.

Russia is said to have sent a dispatch to Paris in opposition to annexation, and protesting against the application of the theory of natural frontiers.

Editorial Notice.

☞ We cannot make use of articles coming to us without any signatures. Continued articles will receive earlier attention if all are sent at the same time.

Notice.

The brethren at Loudon Mills, N. H., have hired a convenient hall, and desire to be favored with the labors of preaching brethren.

ELD. W. B. DAVIS.

Notice.

Those sending appointments to the church in East Boston, Mass., are requested to address Eld J. S. White, the pastor.

A Proposition.

To any one who will send us a new subscriber for one year, we will forward, post paid, a copy of our late discussion with Eld. W. W. Clayton, on the conscious state of the spirit after death, and the destruction of the wicked. And for a new subscriber for six months, we will send a copy of the pamphlets on "Soul" and "Spirit." With a little effort, a thousand names may be added to our list. Let every reader try to aid in scattering the light and truth. Now is the time to work.

All we like Sheep have gone Astray.

Astray from God on barren mountains pining
For the cool fount of living waters free;
With eyes long dimmed by earth's deceitful shining,
How shall I to a place of refuge flee,
Savior, without thy aid?

I've found the world's vain joys unsatisfying,
I've found its sweetest pleasures end in pain;
Treasures I clasped have left me faint and dying
For the pure cup of heavenly joys again—
Joys that will never fade.

Astray from God, through deserts parched and dreary,
With no cool stream to fertilize the waste,
Hungry and faint, and desolate and weary,
Grasping at shadows I have sadly passed—
More and yet more astray.

Now to the living pastures undecaying,
Now to the stream where life's pure waters flow;
Weary, unsatisfied, and sick of straying
Through scenes of sin, and suffering, and woe,
Oh, let me haste away!

For the Crisis.

A Sermon on Hell: its Commencement and Location.

BY ELD. WM. SHELDON.

"These shall go away into everlasting punishment."—Matt. 25: 46.

There is no end to theological speculations concerning HELL,—the place where the finally impenitent are to receive their punishment; but concerning its commencement and its location, there is but little said. Yet nothing is more rational than to suppose that there must be both a commencement and a location to hell. A hell without a commencement would precede the existence of sinners to occupy it, and would therefore be premature; while a hell without a location would be a mere nonentity, for that which really exists must be somewhere.

Now since the Bible repeatedly mentions hell as the place where the wicked are to be punished, let us prayerfully search its inspired pages to learn what it teaches concerning the location and commencement of this place of punishment. Christ testifies in the language of our text, that the wicked "shall go away into everlasting punishment," while elsewhere, in speaking of the same class, he informs us that they shall be "cast into hell;" hence they will be punished in hell. We inquire,—

First,—When does this punishment commence? We answer, not at death, but at the judgment, for the following reasons:—

1. Jesus makes the following statement: "Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment."—Matt. 12 : 36.

God will never execute a criminal till he has given an account, and as the sinner is not to give an account at death, but at the judgment day, it follows that the unholy will not be rewarded before the great day of accounts.

2. "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of juggment to be punished."—2 Peter 2 : 9.

Thus the sinner is not now receiving his punishment, but is being reserved "unto the day of judgment to be punished" in hell; hence, if there is a burning hell now in existence, sinners would not enter it prior to the judgment. But while the Scriptures describe a hell for the ungodly, a "lake of fire,"—they do not teach its present existence.

3. "And they that have done evil, [shall come forth] unto the resurrection of damnation."—John 5 : 29. The "damnation of hell," of which the Savior speaks, is here located on the other side of the resurrection; hence, the resurrection must precede the existence of hell.

4. If there were a burning hell now in existence, we might reasonably inquire why the demons are not confined there. If human sinners are now writhing in a hell of fire, why is not that Captain of sinners and his crew of demons kept there also? But he "goeth about as a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour," and is "walking to and fro in the earth,"—not in hell. Devils were frequently cast out of human beings by the Savior; thus they are not in hell, as they doubtless would be, if it were now in existence.

5. If the doctrine of the present existence of hell were true, some sinners would suffer centuries longer than others who commit a greater amount of crime: for instance, the man of few sins, who died a thousand years ago, must suffer a thousand years longer than the man of many sins who dies to-day.

6. If the wicked were now being punished in hell, a vast amount of speculation might exist among them concerning their destiny at the judgment. Hopes might be entertained that they might be released then, seeing that they had been sent thither at hap-hazard before being tried.

7. The language which the Savior uttered in connection with our text, clearly defines the time when this punishment is to be inflicted, namely, "when the Son of man shall come in his glory." Verse 31. We will now examine every text of scripture in which the term hell is found. By so doing, we shall learn that the present existence of a burning hell is not taught in the Bible, but that it is to exist at the judgment. [illegible]

The first three terms here mentioned never mean a burning hell, while gehenna does.

Sheol—Hell.

1. "Shall burn unto the lowest hell."—Deut. 32 : 22. If sheol, here translated hell, signifies a world of punishment, the above text would prove a plurality of such hells.

2. "The sorrows of hell compassed me about."—2 Sam. 22 : 6.

3. "Deeper than hell."—Job 11 : 8. Sheol is thirty-one times translated grave; it always signifies the realm or state of the dead.

4. "Wicked shall be turned into hell."—Ps. 9 : 17. The state of the dead who experience the second death is here spoken of—the future state of the wicked.

5. "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell."—Ps. 16 : 10. Spoken of Christ. Christ's soul went to sheol, here translated hell; hence, sheol is not the hell of punishment.

6. "Sorrows of hell compassed me about."—Ps. 18 : 5.

7. "Let them go down quick into hell."—Ps. 55 : 15.

8. "Deliver my soul from the lowest hell."—Ps. 86 : 13.

9. "Pains of hell gat hold upon me."—Ps. 116 : 3.

10. "If I make my bed in hell."—Ps. 139 : 8.

11. "Her steps take hold on hell."—Prov. 5 : 5.

12. "In the way to hell."—Prov. 7 : 27.

13. "Are in the depths of hell."—Prov. 9 : 18.

14. "Hell and destruction are before the Lord."—Prov. 15 : 11.

15. "That he may depart from hell beneath."—Prov. 15 : 24.

16. "Deliver his soul from hell."—Prov. 23 : 14.

17. "Hell and destruction are never full."—Prov. 27 : 20.

18. "Hell hath enlarged herself."—Isa. 5 : 14.

19. "Hell from beneath is moved for thee."—Isa. 14 : 9.

20. "Thou shalt be brought down to hell."—Isa. 14 : 15.

21. "With hell are we at agreement."—Isa. 28 : 15.

22. "Your agreement with hell shall not stand."—Isa. 28 : 18.

23. "Didst debase thyself, even unto hell."—Isa. 57 : 9.

24. "Hell is naked before him."—Job 26 : 6.

25. "When I cast him down to hell."—Ezek. 31 : 16.

26. "They also went down into hell with him unto them that be slain."—Ezek. 31 : 13.

27. "Shall speak to him out of the midst of hell."—Ezek. 32 : 21.

Nothing to be found in the above texts to prove that sheol is a lake of fire.

28. "Are gone down to hell with their weapons of war."—Ezek. 32 : 27. Do "weapons of war" ever go to the hell of punishment?

29. "Though they dig into hell."—Amos 9 : 2.

30. "Out of the belly of hell cried I."—Jonah 2 : 2.

31. "Enlargeth his desire as hell."—Hab. 2 : 5.

We can find no proof in the foregoing texts, that sheol when translated hell signifies a burning realm. Every text in the Old Testament, containing the term hell, has been quoted, but none of them speak of a burning world. Sheol never signifies hell, and should never have been thus translated.

Hades—Hell.

1. "Shalt be brought down to hell."—Matt. 11 : 23.

2. "The gates of hell shall not prevail against thee."—Matt. 16 : 28.

3. "Shalt be thrust down to hell."—Luke 10 : 15.

4. "In hell he lifted up his eyes."—Luke 16 : 23.

5. "Wilt not leave my soul in hell."—Acts 2 : 27.

6. "His soul was not left in hell."—Acts 2 : 31.

7. "The keys of hell and of death."—Rev. 1 : 18.

8. "And hell followed."—Rev. 6 : 8.

9. "Death and hell delivered up the dead."—Rev. 20. 13.

10. "Death and hell were cast into the lake of fire."—Rev. 20 : 14.

The reader will perceive that Christ is twice spoken of as not being left in HADES, here translated hell, and that hades is finally to be cast into the "lake of fire;" hence hades is not the lake of fire, or hell, in which the wicked will be punished. Aside from the case of the rich man, there is no intimation that hades is a burning realm, and that exception occurs in a parable, consequently in that instance hades is used figuratively. Should any one insist that this is a literal historical narration, let them not shrink from the revolting conclusion that hell is within sight and within speaking distance of heaven, and that the shrieks and groans of the damned would drown the hallelujahs of the saved; and that the parents in heaven must be continually in sight and in hearing of the unfortunate offspring who are writhing in keen anguish, and shrieking in hopeless agony. Take the consequences, or admit it to be [illegible] and delivered them into chains of darkness, to be reserved unto judgment."—2 Peter 2 : 4. Tartarus, which is here translated hell, is not spoken of as the place where sinners are to be punished, but merely as the state of the fallen angels; nor is it the place of their punishment; for they are there to be "reserved unto judgment" to receive their doom: furthermore they are among the children of men, and were frequently cast out of human beings. Tartarus occurs nowhere else in the Scriptures.

[illegible] For if God spared not the [illegible]

Gehenna—Hell.

1. "Shall be in danger of hell fire."—Matt. 5 : 22. Gehenna brings to view a burning hell, but we shall soon learn that it is not to exist before the judgment.

2. "Thy whole body should be cast into hell."—Matt. 5 : 29. As the body does not go to a burning hell at death, it follows that hell (gehenna) is not in existence.

3. "Whole body should be cast into hell."—Matt. 5 : 30. Seeing the body does not go into hell fire at death, it cannot go there before the judgment day when "they that have done evil [shall come forth] unto the resurrection of damnation:" hence the hell of punishment will commence at the judgment.

4. "Destroy both soul and body in hell." None will claim that "both soul and body" go to hell at death.

5. "Rather than having two eyes to be cast into hell fire."—Matt. 18 : 9.

6. "More the child of hell than yourselves."—Matt. 23 : 15.

7. "How can can ye escape the damnation of hell?"—Matt. 23 : 33.

8. "Having two hands to go into hell."—Mark 9 : 43.

9. "Having two feet to be cast into hell."—Mark 9 : 45.

10. "Having two eyes to be cast into hell fire."—Mark 9 : 47.

11. "Hath power to cast into hell."—Luke 12 : 5.

12. "Set on fire of hell."—James 3 : 6.

When the impenitent are cast into hell fire they are to go there with hands, feet and eyes, and body; and as none go into the fires of gehenna at death corporeally, it must be admitted by all that the existence of hell commences at the judgment day: therefore the present existence of a burning hell is not taught in the Bible. We have quoted every text in the Bible which speaks of "hell." We inquire,—

Secondly,—Where is this punishment to be inflicted? Or, in other words, where is the location of hell?

By reading Prov. 11 : 31, we are taught that the recompense of the sinner is to be inflicted "in the earth." Again, the sublime prophet testifies, (Isa. 24 : 21) "It shall come to pass in that day that the Lord shall punish the host of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth (where?) upon the earth." Allusion is here made to the doom of the wicked at the judgment,—and not to temporal punishment, as we learn from the three preceding verses: "The windows from on high are open, and the foundations of the earth do shake. The earth is utterly broken down. the earth is clean dissolved, the earth is moved exceedingly. The earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard, and shall be removed like a cottage: and the transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it; and it shall fall, and not rise again. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall punish the host of the high ones that are on high, and the kings of the earth upon the earth." Thus "the earth" is to be the place where Jehovah will punish the wicked; or, in other words, hell will be located in the earth, at the final conflagration. Peter testifies that "the heavens and earth . . . . are reserved unto fire, against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men."—2 Peter 3 : 7. The "perdition (apoleia, destruction) of ungodly men" is here connected with the future deluge of fire. The lake of fire, or hell of fire, in which the ungodly will meet their awful doom, is to exist upon the earth, amid the fires of the last day. We inquire,—

Thirdly,—What is the nature of this punishment? The inspired Apostle assures us that the impenitent "shall be punished with everlasting destruction."—2 Thess. 1: 9. Destruction never signifies preservation, but just the reverse. This destruction with which the wicked are to be punished is everlasting; or, this punishment, which is destruction, is everlasting. Not everlasting in process of infliction, for then it would not be destruction; but everlasting in its consequences.

Death, and not life, is threatened to the sinner as his punishment; hence, we read, "The wages of sin is death," and "sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." Not the first death, for both the saint and the sinless infant are victims of that death, but "on such the second death hath no power," while the ungodly are its victims. The punishment is death, and the death is everlasting. The wicked will as really be consumed by everlasting fire as the Sodomites were by eternal fire—Jude 7. Its results will be everlasting.

From the foregoing investigation, we have learned, first, that the commencement of hell is at the judgment day; secondly, that its location is to be the earth, at the time of the flood of fire; and, thirdly, that destruction is the nature of the punishment to be inflicted. [illegible]

For the Crisis.

Asbestos Again.

In a late number of the Crisis I pointed out an erroneous use of this word, as if it meant "inconsumable;" the phrase "inconsumable fire" seeming to me as unmeaning as if we should speak of "unquenchable water." I have just met another notion respecting the mineral asbestos.

Cornelius a Lapide, a Catholic commentator of about three hundred years since, remarks on Matt. 8 : 12: "Hence the stone asbestos is named, which ever burns and is not extinguished." This superstition is probably the true original of the name; and not the error or caprice of some mineralogist, as I conjectured.

If this be the true explanation, it is of great interest in connexion with another superstition, as showing how errors in natural science help errors in theology. Every one has heard of salamander safes. The name is from a reptile which was supposed to be unaffected by the action of fire. Worcester cites Bacon as saying: "There is an ancient received tradition of the salamander that it liveth in the fire, and hath force also to extinguish the fire." And Shakspeare: "I have maintained that salamander of yours with fire any time this two and thirty years." And asbestos was also called salamander's wool, or hair. (It is fibrous, not porous, as my printer said.) Worcester cites the old opinion that the bite of the reptile was poisonous. "But the grand absurdity of all was the belief that the salamader was incombustible."

But what has this to do with theology? Simply this. Augustine, defending christianity against the objections of the heathen, encounters this doctrine of eternal suffering, in which the soul dies without dying. Was it supported by any example or analogy? He appeals at once to that which "they have written who have investigated the value of animals, that the salamander lives in the fi e;"* adding an example from the fires of volcanoes which seemed never to burn out, and which is cited by other early writers.

Such were the illustrations by which the doctrine was defended, after the soul began to be immortal. So long as the terms of Scripture were adhered to, the Scriptural illustrations (e. g. Jude, ver. 7; Deut. 29 : 33; Isa. 1 : 9; 13 : 19–22; Jer. 23 : 14; 49 : 17; l. 39, 30; Lam. 10 : 6; Ezek. 16 : 41–55; Hos. 11 : 8; Amos 4 : 11; Zeph. 2 : 9; Matt. 10 : 15; Mark 6 : 11; Luke 10 : 12; 17 : 29, 30; Rom. 9 : 29; 2 Pet. 2 : 6) were deemed sufficient.

Selections.

The Essential Oneness of all True Christians.

We are told that two christian converts from different heathen nations, and unacquainted with each other's language, once met upon the deck of a foreign ship, when a mutual sympathy instantly arose between them, drawing them together as by some invisible bonds. As each had read the Bible in his own language, they had two words in common, and in their effort to hold converse one uttered Hallelujah, the other responded Amen, when they rushed into each other's arms, and were henceforth brothers beloved.

Whatever the cause of the mutual recognition of these converts, the sympathy of heart evinced, the common attraction felt by each, illustrates a great truth, which the enemies of christianity are slow to admit, and upon which her friends lay too little stress, the oneness of true christians, wherever found, and how widely soever separated in language, color, or station.

We cannot deny that this unity is less visible than it should be, and that the variety of sects and parties in evangelical Christendom seems to disprove its existence, still it is true that all christians are one in the essentials of character and belief. The oneness is most distinctly affirmed in the sacred Scriptures, and in a number of particulars, which, if they could be affirmed of any other class of individuals would demonstrate their essential unity.

Out of many passages we select one which is most explicit and full of import. The church of Christ, embracing all true christians, is one, says Paul, Eph. 4 : 4–6, because it "is one body," has one Spirit, one hope, one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father," who is over all, through all, and in all its members.

There is "one body." Though the churches of Christ are known by different names on earth, and exist under many different forms of organization, all true believers are "in Christ," are members of that body of which he is the head, and therefore constitute, not conflicting bodies, but one symmetrical and complete whole. "We being many are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another." As the various members of the human body, though of different forms and use, do not mar, but make up and complete its unity, so the many members of the true church make up the "body of Christ."

Such is the teaching of God's word upon this point. The sum is this: there is one Spirit, one Lord, one God and Father, to each believer. The church has one faith, one consecrating vow, and one glorious hope; and thus exists in one. "Behold then this wonder of the world. The thousand times ten thousand which no man can number, of every kindred and tongue and people and nation, with their infinite diversities of knowledge, culture, and station, of national prejudices, manners, and customs, of temporal occupations and personal interests, bound together by indissoluble bonds, and constituting one mighty, glorious, and eternal brotherhood!"

should. The evangelical churches, though built upon the same corner-stone and parts of the one temple of God, have thrown up party-walls between the different sections of the glorious building, which to some extent mar its beauty and symmetry. May we not hope that as christians learn to know each other better, and to love Christ and his cause more, these division walls will be gradually removed until there shall be one fold, as there is but one Shepherd. To this end all believers should "endeavor to preserve the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace."

If the position taken in these articles be true, then all conduct which militates against the peace of God's true Israel, all censorious and uncharitable speeches against Christ's children, all measures which tend to alienate and divide true believers, are sins against the Holy Spirit, by whose indwelling they are made one. No words can express the heinousness of that sin which wounds the body of Christ, and was against the holy and ever-blessed Spirit.

Equally true it is, that those who labor, in accordance with the Bible, to promote the unity of the church, who strive to embody and promulgate her common faith, who follow after the things that make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another, who bear injuries from brethren, and forbear with much long-suffering and gentleness, rather than injure the body of Christ, will meet the rich and gracious benediction of that Jesus who prayed that his people might all be one.—American Messenger.

Influence.

Drop follows drop, and swells
With rain the sweeping river;
Word follows word and tells
A truth that lives forever.

Flake follows flake, like sprites
Whose wings the winds dissever;
Thought follows thought, and lights
The realm of mind forever.

Beam follows beam, to cheer
The cloud the bolt would shiver;
Throb follows throb, and fear
Gives place to joy forever.

The drop, the flake, the beam,
Teach us a lesson ever;
The word, the thought, the dream,
Impress the soul forever.

Our Thoughts.

We are ever thinking. Swift as the flitting seconds come and go, from the mind, the light winged thoughts. We call them little things, and are scarce conscious of their presence, and yet our characters are according to the nature of our thoughts.

We speak of our time running to waste. With even more truth, it may be said of our thoughts. We indulge ourselves in a multitude of thoughts, frivolous and unworthy. If we desire to honor our Savior, let us remember that not words and deeds alone, but the offering up of our thoughts may also be an acceptable service. As our minds dwell upon the ineffable beauty and sweetness of Jesus, let our thoughts, burdened with grateful love, rise as sweet incense to heaven. The love of Jesus, let it be the dear theme, on which our thoughts linger long, and to which they return with ever new delight.

We express our love for a friend by saying, "I think a great deal of you." Let us thus express our affection for Jesus. We shall know that Christ is enthroned in our hearts, when we find him enthroned in our thoughts. We need not doubt our love to Jesus, if through the busy day and in the still night, we are ever keeping in mind the memory of his goodness.

If then we have nothing else to bring to the Savior, for "mercies countless as the sands," let us bring our thoughts filled with the vision of the Redeemer's beauty and glory, until "lost in wonder, love and praise," and offer these as our sacrifice.

We want to be like Jesus. The more we think of Him, the more shall we increase in love and likeness to Him. It is thus, that "beholding as in a glass, the glory of the Lord, we are changed into the same image, from glory to glory."—Amer. Presbyterian.

"It is Only His Way."

"Papa, here are some pretty flowers for you," said little Mollie Loring, as she ran to meet her father on his return home. "Ain't they beautiful" continued she, extending her fingers, and laying their tapering tips upon a half-blown Luxemburg, a Cape jessamine, and a white bud that seemed trying to hide itself amongst the crisped petals of a crape myrtle. "This tea-rose is playing bo-peep at you; ain't they pretty, papa?"

"Yes. Who sent them to me?"

"Nobody. I gathered them for you."

"Pshaw! I thought some friend sent them. Go to play, and don't pester me."

"There were more dimples than one in that quivering chin, and something more than the heat of a midsummer's day had crimsoned the sweet face of the child, as she turned into her doll's house, saying to herself, "I fixed them so nicely, and tied them with my doll's new blue sash that Aunt Nina gave me yesterday. Ma says it is only his way, but I think it is a mighty bad way; that's all I know about it, and I wish our papa was like Carrie Morton's."

What a pity that papa does not consider it "a bad way!" what a pity that he does not know how such conduct estranges his little ones from him, and throws back upon their warm hearts the sweet affections which they are so happy in receiving, if he only knew how to appreciate the love of children—if he only knew how to speak kind words to them! But he is kindly disposed—it is only his way—for even now, while Mollie is regretting her inability to draw from him a word of approval, he is turning the flowers in his hand, and saying, as he admires them: "Well, she certainly has displayed very good taste in putting them together. Nothing could be more tastefully arranged than these verbenas on this lemon geranium leaf; and how beautifully she has dotted this crape myrtle with heart's ease and white rose buds!"

Why did you not say those words to your daughter? She would have enshrined [illegible]

the present makes her fear the future, and turn for relief to the remembrance of childhood's joys and youth's sunny hours! Fathers, speak kindly, lovingly to the little ones around you. Thank them for their love offerings; tell them the flowers are beautiful and sweet; point out their beauties and sweetness; tell them in what respect they resemble little children; and thus teach them to "look through nature up to nature's God." If you have adopted a repulsive manner, abandon it, and make home happy by your smiles, that your children may believe you when you say you love them, and know how to understand those who talk to them of fond parents, and happy families.—Methodist Protestant.

We Pass for what we Are.

A man passes for what he is worth. Very idle is all curiosity concerning other people's estimate of us, and all fear of remaining unknown is not less so. If a man knows that he can do any thing—that he can do it better than any one else—he has a pledge of acknowledgment of that fact by all persons. The world is full of judgment days, and into every assemblage that a man enters, in every action that he attempts, he is gauged and stamped. In every troop of boys that whoop and run in each yard and square, a new comer is well and accurately weighed in the course of a few days, and stamped with his right number, as if he had undergone a formal trial oi his strength, speed, and temper. A stranger comes from a distant school with a better dress, trinkets in his pockets, with airs and pretensions. An older boy says to himself, "It's no use; we shall find him out to-morrow."—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

☞ The sacred book of the ancient Persians, says, "If you wish to be a saint, instruct your children; because all the good they do will be imputed to you."

Hygiene.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

The Beard.

We clip the following from the Advent Herald, and commend it to the careful reading of all.

"God made man with a beard and laid on him the injunction, "Neither shalt thou mar the corners of thy beard."—Lev. 19 : 27. "They shall not make baldness upon their head, neither shall they shave off the corners of their beard."—21 : 5. "Neither shall they shave their heads, nor suffer their locks to grow long; they shall only poll their heads."—Ezek. 44 : 20.

Some young men who were so unfortunate as to lose one-half of their beards, were commanded by King David to tarry at Jericho until their beards were grown.—2 Sam. 10 : 5.

To be shaved was a mark of degradation. Thus it was predicted, "On all their heads shall be baldness, and every beard cut off."—Isa. 50 : 2.

The Hebrew term, expressive of one who is denuded of his hair by shaving, is in our version rendered "peeled." The Egyptians were the only nation of antiquity that shaved, and they are described by the prophet as "a nation scattered and peeled."—Isa. 50 : 2.

Men first shaved as an act of idolatrous worship; its continuance is a barbarous practice. It is a waste of time and blood, and makes a man look puny and effeminate."

The Best Hair-Wash.

Make half a pint soap-suds with pure white soap and warm water, on rising any morning; but before applying it, brush the whole scalp well, while the hair is perfectly dry, with the very best Russia bristle brush, scrub back and forth with a will, let not any portion of he surface escape. When brushing the top and front, lean forward, that the particles may fall. After this operation is finished, strike the ends of the bristles on the hearth or on a board, next pass the coarse part of the comb through the bristles; next brush or flap the hair back and forth with the hand until no dust is seen to fall; then with the balls of the fingers dipped in the soap-suds, rub the fluid into the scalp and about the roots of the hair; do this patiently and thoroughly. Finally, rinse with clear water, and absorb as much of the water from the hair as possible with a dry cloth; then (after allowing the hair to dry a little more by evaporation, but not to dry entirely) dress it as usual, always, under all circumstances, passing the comb through the hair slowly and gently, so as not to break any one off, or tear out any one by the roots.

By this operation the alkali of the soap unites with the natural oil of the hair, and leaves it perfectly clean and beautifully silken, and with cold water washings of the whole head and neck and ears every morning, it will soon be found that the hair will "dress" as handsomely as if "oiled to perfection;" with the great advantage of conscious cleanliness, giving, too, the general appearance of a greater profusion of hair than when it is plastered flat on the scalp, with variously scented hog's fat, as is the custom.—Health Tract.

Cleanliness.

Compare the dirtiness of the water in which you have washed when it is cold without soap, cold with soap, hot with soap. You will find the first has hardly [illegible] water for a minute or two, and then, by merely rubbing with the finger, you will bring off flakes of dirt or dirty skin. After a vapor-bath you may peel your whole self clean in this way. What I mean is, that by simply washing or sponging with water you do not really clean your skin. Take a rough towel, dip one corner in very hot water—if a little spirit be added to it, it will be more effectual—and then rub as if you were rubbing the towel into your skin with your fingers. The black flakes which will come off will convince you that you were not clean before, however much soap and water you may have used. These flakes are what require removing. And you can really keep yourself cleaner with a tumbler full of hot water and a rough towel and rubbing, than with a whole apparatus of bath and soap and sponge, without rubbing. It is quite nonsense to say that anybody need be dirty. Patients have been kept as clean by these means on a long voyage, when a basinful of water could not be afforded, and when they could not be moved out of their berths, as if all the appurtenances of home had been at hand. Washing, however, with a large quantity of water, has quite other effects than those of mere cleanliness. The skin absorbs the water, and becomes softer and more perspirable. To wash with soap and soft water, is, therefore, desirable from other points of view than that of cleanliness.—Florence Nightingale.

Attention to the Feet.

It is utterly impossible to get well or keep well, unless the feet are kept dry and warm all the time. If they are for the most part cold, there is cough or sore throat, or hoarseness, or sick headache, or some other annoyance.

If cold and dry, the feet should be soaked in hot water for ten minutes every night, and when wiped and dried, rub into them well, ten or fifteen drops of sweet oil; do this patiently with the hands, rubbing the oil into the soles of the feet particularly.

On getting up in the morning, dip both feet at once into water, as cold as the air of the room, half ankle deep, for a minute in Summer; half a minute or less in Winter, rubbing one foot with the other, then wipe dry, and if convenient, hold them to the fire, rubbing them with the hand until perfectly dry and warm in every part.

If the feet are damp and cold, attend only to the morning washings, but always at night remove the stockings, and hold the feet to the fire, rubbing them with the hands for fifteen minutes, and get immediately into bed.

Under any circumstances, as often as the feet are cold enough to attract attention, draw off the stockings, and hold them to the fire; if the feet are much inclined to dampness, put on a pair of dry stockings, leaving the damp ones before the fire to be ready for another change.

Some persons' feet are more comfortable, even in winter, in cotton, others in woolen stockings. Each must be guided by his own feelings. Sometimes two pair of thin stockings keep the feet warmer than one pair which is thicker than both. The thin pair may be of the same or of different materials, and that which is best next the foot, should be determined by the feelings of the person.

Sometimes the feet are rendered more comfortable by basting half an inch thickness of curled hair on a piece of thick cloth, slipping this into the stocking, with the hair next the skin, to be removed at night, and placed before the fire to be perfectly dried by morning.

Persons who walk a great deal during the day, should, on coming home for the night, remove their shoes and stockings, hold the feet to the fire until perfectly dry; put on a dry pair, and wear slippers for the remainder of the evening.

Boots and gaiters keep the feet damp, cold and unclean, by preventing the escape of that insensible perspiration which is always escaping from a healthy foot, and condensing it; hence the old-fashioned low shoe is best for health.—Dr. Hall.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. MILES GRANT, Boston, Mass.

For the Crisis.

Give me Jesus.

When the world has passed away;
When comes on the judgment day,
When the Judge of earth appears,
Finishing the year of years;
When the doom of every soul,
And the world from pole to pole
Hangs upon the Savior's tongue—
On a tongue that ever sung
Songs of pity, then I pray,
Give me Jesus.

Let me have my happy stand
At the Savior's own right hand,
When the holy men of old
Raise a song on harps of gold,
Let me stand acquitted there,
Shielded by a Father's care;
O let me be found at rest,
Owned and by King Jesus blest,
In that great, momentous day,—
Give me Jesus.

Give me sickness, pain or woe,
Tribulation here below;
Give me eyes bedewed with tears,
Give me all th' effects of years;
Lay me down in dust to sleep,
But to wake no more to weep;
Only let me stand at length
In my great Redeemers strength—
Yes, in that financial day,
Give me Jesus.

The Rich Man and Lazarus.

BY J. HOWELL.

No. 5.

TEXT.—"The rich man also died, and was buried; and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom."—Lk. 16: 22, 23.

10. The record of Lk. 16 : 19–31 is not a literal narrative of literal facts, but only a parable, because it appropriates penalty for sin at such a time when, place where, and circumstances under which, as to constitute it a positive denial of the words of God.

This proposition would be equally true of the rewards of the righteous, but for the present let us closely investigate this.

1. The Scriptures nowhere affirm, since the Edenic state, punishment immediately consequent upon the termination of individual natural life. The penalty of Edenic law did; but that penalty was death; Gen. 2 : 17; defined and proved, Gen. 3 ; 19, 22, 23; and not conscious life spirit suffering. The penalty inflicted upon Adam has been inherited by his posterity, and they one after the other die, as God affirmed, if Lk. 16 ; 19–31 is a parable; but if a literal relation of literal facts, then his satanic majesty told the truth in saying—"Ye shall NOT surely die." The penalty of Edenic law was not inflicted until after the trial of the transgressors, Gen. 3 : 8–14; and also after the terminus of the Edenic dispensation; "Adam lived nine hundred and thirty years and he died." Gen. 5 : 5. Before he left Eden, God instituted by promise the economy of mercy, Gen. 3 : 15; believed in by Abel and all the patriarchs, and then in the Mosaic times, the Jewish dispensation. God gave the people "the law of commandments contained in ordinances," prefiguring the seed; also associated in promise with Abraham, which law was by Christ nailed to the cross. Those who lived before he came were to believe on him that should come after Moses, or the second Adam; we believe he has come, and will come again.

Now at what point of time does God's word affix the penalty for crime in the constitution of mercy? Is it during its history while men live? Is it during its history, and immediately consequent upon the death of each individual? or is it at the close, and therefore in "the world to come?" not in the sense, however, of there being another world running parallel with this, but in consecutive order—"the world to come." If here, while living, universalism is true; for God will not punish a man twice and in two different places for the same crime, and if he has his punishment here during life, then it is properly and only corrective; and in the future he will have nothing to fear.

This position the Scriptures do not sustain, but point to the future for rewards and punishments. [illegible] the declarations of the word of God, receive his punishment for sins committed against God, in the event of death, the Adamic penalty, or immediately consequent upon death, by some other means? We certainly do not die on account of our personal transgressions now, for it matters not how righteous any one may be, he is still under the appointment to die. Heb. 9 : 27. He dies having had propagated (Rom. 5 : 12) to him from his first parents a dying nature. Where then can we find the proof that immediately consequent upon death, any man goes to hell torments? Are those who are dead, and sinners, conscious in death, and not suffering? If this parable teaches consciousness immediately after death to men in their sins, then it can be no evidence of such a consciousness, any more than it is of immediate punishment after death, they being conscious; for it declares, if it is a narration of literal facts, their condition in consciousness, that is, a sensible, suffering condition.

Again, to say that a man may be punished partially immediately after death, and fully after the judgment, is perfectly inconsistent; for that gives a man two places of punishment; the first in hades, and the second in the place into which hades will be cast. This position also involves two kinds of penalty for crime; one of which is hell torments, and the other the extinction of his being, or second death.

They in being punished in hades experience one kind of punishment, which the Scriptures never revealed as a future penalty for present personal sin, and misspent life; that is, hell torments; for the Bible reveals the end of sin to be "death, destruction, to be burned." "The end of those things is death."—Rom. 6 : 21. "Whose end is destruction."—Phil. 3 : 19. "Whose end is to be burned."—Heb. 6 : 9. "Death," "destruction," and "burned," are terms which express the work finished, and the end of the sinner, by their employment.

Now such an end is not possible in hades; for hades retains the dead until the time arrives when they are to be "delivered up," and then hades and the wicked are "cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death." Will God inflict punishment upon a man, in a place never defined by divine revelation for the infliction of punishment for sin, and then when that place is to be destroyed, take the man out of the same, to inflict the penalty of the law upon him, which divine revelation does announce and define? Josephus says that "angels are appointed over them to reproach them, and threaten them with their terrible looks," and "drag them into the neighborhood of hell itself." Then, after all, if he is a good exponent of the matter, "hades" is not "hell." Well, what is it then?

The apostle Peter in his second epistle chap. 3 : 7 teaches us, that "the heavens and earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." 2 Pet. 2 : 9 teaches that "the Lord knoweth how . . . to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished." Are they reserved in the punishment of hell torments, "to be punished" at the judgment? Or perhaps hades flame torments is no punishment. O how much such a view detracts from the character of God, and reflects upon his benevolence and compassion.

No, reader, the very fact that the record, if literally interpreted, declares that at the end of the literal lifetime of an individual he immediately enters upon conscious suffering in hell, as the penalty of a misspent life, and thereby arrays the record against the true Scriptural account of the time and place at and in which the sinner will be punished, and also the penalty to be inflicted, demonstrates that Lk. 16 : 19–31 must be a parable, and only a parable.

It will not be presumed, in order to avoid this conclusion, that the punishment in hades is corrective. Beware! do not perfect the already begun protestant purgatory. I have said the circumstances connected with this record, or rather specified in it, are opposed to the literal interpretation of the record. The conversation, between the parties, the obstacles specified as rendering friendly aid impossible, if literal, the literal gulf, natural affection for kindred, and employment of argument to prove the propriety of some one's being sent to them, the acknowledgement that the one of whom he was speaking was dead, by saying, "Nay, father Abraham; but if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent;" and the declaration of the sufficiency of divine revelation in Moses and the prophets, and final declaration that if they would not believe and hear them, "neither would they be persuaded though one (Lazarus) arose from the dead," proves this record to be only a parable. Especially is this evident when we take into consideration that the dead men of God must awake from their sleep in the dust in order to sing, and therefore as the wicked can have no preference in the event of death over the righteous, they must arise from the dead to literally converse.

Of the necessity of the resurrection of the righteous, and their awaking from sleep as above suggested, none can doubt. See Isa. 26 : 19. Again, if this Scripture record which we are contemplating is of literal import, a few interesting thoughts yet remain to be suggested.

1. From the rich man's proposal to Father Abraham to send Lazarus, we presume that Abraham is the presiding elder over a certain district of hades. Josephus intimates that angels are appointed. Abraham's appointments are limited to a certain class. See this limitation defined in verse 26.

2. The reply of the rich man to the suggestion of Abraham: "They have Moses and the prophets; let them hear them;" expressive of the sufficiency of Revelation; in which reply the rich man meets his suggestion with the logical statement, "Nay, Father Abraham, but if one went unto them from the dead, they will repent"—very explicitly defines the state of Lazarus in hades and in the bosom of Abraham; that is, "Lazarus is dead."

3. This is endorsed by Abraham, who declares with equal clearness, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one (Lazarus) arose from the dead." Could one arise from the dead who was not in that state? The Greek term here employed in both instances is Nekrou, signifying "dead, without life," and is expressive of a state or condition. If Lazarus, as is supposed, is a conscious life spirit entity in hades, and his body somewhere else, this term "dead" cannot define the state or condition of that body; for the rich man is speaking of Lazarus as a resident of hades. Therefore to interpret this as a record of literal facts, it must be conceded that the hades resident Lazarus is dead.

Again, appropriating the pronoun, as the conscious life theory does, proves Lazarus still dead. The pronoun "him," in verse 27, is used instead of the noun "Lazarus" in verses 23, 24, 25. This "him" is the one to whom the rich man refers when saying; "Nay, Father Abraham, but if one went unto them from the dead, 'apo nekrou,' they will repent." Therefore Lazarus is dead. Then in verse 30th, this fact, on the same principle of interpretation, is perfectly endorsed and taught by Abraham; "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they hear though one rose (anastee, should rise,) ek nekrou from the dead. The preposition "ek" may be translated "out of," and then read; "though one rose out of the dead," proving him to be in that state.

Now then, take either horn of this dilemma which is the most desirable.

1. If this record in Lk. 16 : 19–31 is a parable, it certainly does not teach that in literal hell torments literal conscious life spirit entities are residing, and literally suffering; and therefore no proof that "man in death is (not) unconscious."

2. If it is interpreted literally, as the conscious life spirit theory demands, then it proves that the residents of hades are certainly dead: and

3. That not only the two ends of the record positively contradict verses 23–26, but other plain, positive Scripture testimony, as Rev. 20 : 23, 14.

Thus we believe that we have fairly investigated every point in this parable, having avoided nothing that it contains, through fear that a choice theory might be jeopardized, but instead of this, we "have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully; but by manifestation of the truth commending ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God." 2 Cor. 4 : 2.

MORAL MEASUREMENT.—If a man should be pure, so that he would have an instinctive perception of purity in others; if he should be just, so that he would discern justice in others; if he should be true, so that untruth would be a pain to him,—if, in short, he should be lofty in imagination, and high in spiritual aspirations, how, as he went about in society, would he raise up those whom every body used as foot-rugs, and treated as objects of contempt, and how would he bring down the pride of men, viewing every thing above and below in the light of this new rule of judging.

EXAMPLE.—One watch set right will do to try many by; but, on the other hand, one that goes wrong may be the means of misleading a whole neighborhood; and the same may be said of the example we individually set to those around us.

☞ A man will never lose any thing by humility, nor gain any thing worth keeping by pride.

For the Crisis.

Who Said All That?

The Siamese, we are told, file away the enamel of their teeth and stain them black, for the all-sufficient reason that dogs' teeth are white. The rest of mankind think that is no reason at all, because all teeth are naturally white. And the law of nature is so unvarying and manifest that the attempt to ignore it finds painful success and odious repute.

In opinions it is somewhat different. Here there is so great variety in the multitude of minds, and such a medley of truth and error in almost every individual mind, that nothing can be inferred for or against any opinion because it is held by this or that man. There is nothing so absurd but some philosopher has believed it. And there is nothing so true or good but some fool or knave has yielded his assent. Single instances of such or such faith, prove nothing whatever, because to err is human. And there is also, as has been often observed, a happy inconsistency in human reasonings, and between men's thoughts and feelings; whereby men often put bad premises and good inferences side by side, or vice versa; and a clear head often conceals a corrupt heart, or sterling honesty and integrity is clouded by dulness or eccentricity.

But when we pass from individuals to classes of men, the case is somewhat altered. For head and heart are not wholly divorced; and what is very uncertain as respects the opinions of one man may be very probable as respects the opinions of five thousand of his countrymen, party, sect, school, profession, or trade. Hence an opinion held and professed by one man leads us to think he may belong to such a class of men, or may hold a certain set of opinions. He is a rash judge who says positively that it is so. He is a poor judge who does not surmise that it may be so.

The readers of last week's Crisis, will recollect a few "Philosophical Miscellanies, selected by X. Y. Z.," in last week's paper; the collection consisting mainly of opinions against the proper immortality of the soul, or else against its existence separate from the body; also the opinion that all being, human and divine, has definite shape and form. These opinions are regarded by many as favorable—by some as essential—to the doctrine we hold, that immortality is the heritage of the righteous alone. And I presume that many who read the articles, unless they suspected that "X. Y. Z." was quizzing, were ready to say that the authors quoted are favorable to our views, if they do not actually hold life in Christ only.

The arguments contained in the extracts I shall reserve, with the simple opinion that they are partly sound and partly unsound. But happening to know who the men were, and believing that they and their opinions are more representative than exceptional, I will tell who they were. And we will afterwards examine the probabilities above named, and the opinions themselves. For economy of time and space the reader will refer to the extracts as they were numbered.

1. Epicurus. He was the father of the Epicurean philosophy, which makes prudence the highest virtue and pleasure the highest good, and which soon passed into the sensualism of the epicure. He knew no substance but matter, held that the phenomena of the world result from the concourse and combination of atomic particles, that the soul is a subtle form of matter and dies with the body. Though he professed the popular faith in the gods, he was more properly an atheist. His system was the opposite to that of Plato; and between the two we could not hesitate to choose. Whether the materialism of Epicurus was consistent with the rest of his theory, is the question we wish to examine.

2. Lucretius. He was the Latin poet who put the philosophy of Epicurus into verse, thus endeavoring to adorn the doctrine that we should eat and drink, for tomorrow we die. We need not wonder that the early christians, as fast as they learned any thing respecting the metaphysical systems, were especially prejudiced against this.

3. Voltaire. His splendid talents, keen sense of the ridiculous, and prejudice against a corrupt christianity as sheer "superstition," combined to make him a magnificent scoffer. Either his intense hatred of a tyrannical church, or some real love for man made him a champion of the persecuted; and he has ably defended some of the truest and most important principles of criminal law, opposing the undue severity of penalty as really defeating its own end. He was not an atheist, but was doubtful respecting a future life for man.

4. Baron d'Holbach. He was the author of the "System of Nature," a famous infidel work which appeared about the time of the French Revolution. The extract is from his "Good Sense," a book which shows no high moral sense whatever, but is as captious as it is atheistic.

5. Comte. The author of the "Positive Philosophy," was a man who believed only what could be seen and demonstrated. But no man hath seen God at any time; spirit is invisible, and both are outside the sphere of logical demonstration. Within this sphere, Comte was one of the ablest thinkers. But he finds in man only the highest order of animal creation, or rather, growth. Society is man's highest end, which ends in death.

6. Feuerbach. The German whose "Essence of Christianity" offers to prove that man is God, and God is man; or, that God exists only in the conceptions of men. It is advertised as "the most powerful materialistic work ever written." He is learned, at least in fragmentary materials to set off a style very fragmentary, and otherwise so detestable that Comte seems to me a christian compared with him.

7. Emanuel Swedenborg. Who would think that the so called "New Church" uniformly asserts that all human souls and God himself exist in a certain definite form and shape, and that too, out of the human body, with all its organs? This is not materialism. How much it has to do with Spiritualism, or rather Spiritism, I may try to say hereafter. It is worthy of notice that while the philosophy of the Swedenborgians and the Spiritualists is the same, their habits of thought and feeling widely differ.

8. W. M. Fernald, author of "God in His Providence." He is of the "New Church." I gave similar passages from his book in the Crisis a few weeks since. Most Swedenborgians hold the eternity of "the hells," as well as of the "heavens." This writer dissents, showing some tendency toward the view of the death of the soul as the penalty of sin, but hoping that all will escape it.

9. Tatian. This disciple of Justin Martyr speaks of the soul as mortal and actually dying; and we should suppose the kind man would sorrowfully let the soul die that will not live. But instead of that he gives it "immortality in punishment," and says that "we who die so easily now shall afterward receive either immortality with delight, or pain with immortality."

10. Thomas Tomkinson. He was a Muggletonian. Of this uncouth name Mr. Buck gives explanation in his Theological Dictionary. Lodowick Muggleton, a journeyman tailor, with his companion Reeves, of equal obscurity, "set up for great prophets in the time of Cromwell. They pretended to absolve or condemn whom they pleased; and gave out that they were the two last witnesses spoken of in the Revelation, who were to appear previous to the final destruction of the world. They affirmed that there was no devil at all without the body of man or woman; that the devil is man's spirit of unclean reason and cursed imagination; that the ministry in this world, whether prophetical or ministerial, is all a lie and abomination to the Lord; with a variety of other vain and inconsistent tenets."

For the rest, Tomkinson was a good deal like Tatian—a vehement asserter of eternal torments. Telling over and over again that the soul is mortal, he says: "That other plague of death is the second death, which they shall ever lie under; and this must needs cause mourning, because it is a living death, and dying life, ever dying, but never dead."

Thus it appears that of the ten writers whose opinions in philosophy were so similar to those which some regard as specially suitable to our faith, not one really held this faith. Five held death to be an eternal sleep for all; three held eternal misery; one is a restorationist; and the other did not know what to believe. So poor a guide is philosophy to truth in religion. The review will show, however, how early and lasting has been the philosophic companionship between materialism and scepticism. There have been noble exceptions, of which I shall speak as I proceed, hoping to examine the value of these exceptions both in reason and by the Scriptures.

C. F. H.

THE SWORD OF THE SPIRIT.—The Scriptures are called "the Sword of the Spirit," because they derive all their power from the Spirit. In themselves, they are like a sword sheathed and lying upon the ground; they are a dead letter; they convey no spiritual light; they impart no spiritual energy; they carry with them neither conviction nor consolation; whether read or preached, they are equally without effect. Paul was convinced with the Scriptures before his conversion; but could not see in them that Jesus was the Christ; nor could he learn from them the temper and the disposition of a child of God.—Simeon.

☞ Horace Walpole once remarked,—This world is a comedy to those who think, and a tragedy to those who feel.

The Escape.

BRO. GRANT:—Your series of articles on "Doubting Castle" remind me of olden times. From 1839 to 1856 I was a prisoner in the "old pile;" for seventeen years I wandered among the ruins; alas, alas! what a time I had of it. The giants belabored me severely. I had no shield, no buckler, no helmet, no sword, no sandals for my feet, nor staff to lean upon; so they laid upon me without mercy till they drove me into the "slough of despond," where I well nigh perished in the mire and filth. The memory of that old place, even now, will cast the shadow of its sombre gloom upon me and darken my spirits,—and the noisome stench of that old pool! bah!

Well, bless God, I am out of it. No wonder the Psalmist said his feet were taken from the mire, if that was the same place he got into. The way I got in there was on this wise. Being on a circuit under the preacher in charge, they set me to studying "Theology." Well, in Gen. 2 : 17—"Thou shalt surely die," was "spiritual death." All right! But after a little I opened on 1 Cor. 15 : 22—"For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." Good! all die a spiritual death in Adam? Yes! So then all are made spiritually alive in Christ Jesus! Oh no! all are made eternally alive in Christ. Then all died eternally in Adam? Oh no! All wrong! Ah! my good brother, that makes a contradiction, for if they died spiritually in Adam, they must be made spiritually alive ("even so") in Christ; and to be made spiritually alive in Christ, is to be renewed in righteousness and true holiness after the image of Him that created him, and that makes all men children of God, and all his children will be saved.

So Universalism must be true, and this doctrine that you and I are preaching here among the hills, of eternal torment, must be false.

"Oh no! brother, you are wrong, not the doctrine."

"Eternally made alive, but still wicked! Well, brother, may be so, as you say, I am young, and a learner; but I declare I cannot see if they were made eternally alive in Christ, how they could have been anything else than eternally dead in Adam, and if they were eternally dead in Adam, I cannot see how they could be made alive at all in Christ! There is a kink in this 'theology' somewhere; I cannot find where, but one thing I do see, it contradicts itself—and 'a house divided,' etc., you know."

"Bro. A., I cannot preach to others what I doubt as being true myself."

"Why, Bro. S.! you do not seriously thing of stopping, do you? What, quit preaching the gospel!"

"Yes, I do, and, Bro. A., I shall stop till I find where this kink is, anyhow."

And, thank the Lord, I did stop. I searched every thing, heard every thing, and tried every thing that came in my way. I looked abroad, saw all through the visible world harmony, order and system; no strifes, no jarring discords, no confusion, no contradictions. Ah, here is God! Now if God in his works is so harmonious,—if there is such beauty and order here,—surely if he has revealed himself to us in his will concerning us, should not that revelation, that will, be like him—harmonious? Oh! if there could but be found some way to harmonize that word, then, then—oh, my soul, I could stand on it as the "Rock of ages!" Poor soul, ignorant, blind, naked, weak, erring, prejudiced, bigoted! what a foolish thing thou art! The word is God's word, and does harmonize. The whole difficulty is with yourself; you think you are a god!

In the winter of '45, Bro. J. M. Judson came into my neighborhood and preached a series of discourses on the doctrine of "life and immortality in Christ," and for the first time in my life the question of the soul's inherent immortality was brought practically home to me. Very charily did I permit at first the keys of truth to be applied to the wards in the locks of error; but, one by one, bolt after bolt was smoothly rolled back, door after door was opened, till by and by the outer wall was reached—a massive structure of granite rock, with "bars of steel" and bolts of iron, that looked as if they might defy the accumulated years of eternity, bound into one and hurled like a comet in its course against them. But a voice was heard, saying, "I am the resurrection and the life." An answer came, "Lift up, ye everlasting doors, lift up and let the King of glory in!" The mine was sprung—the walls were riven—the fortress of the enemy, the Gibraltar of the Devil was lost and won—the captives loosed—the prisoners freed; and in that flood of light that broke in upon me all the old walls went down—God of all grace! how my soul mounted up! Like an eagle freed from its cage—a balloon from its anchors—a rocket from its rest—further than a sunbeam could travel in an age, did my unchained mind soar heavenward on wings of faith and love. And that word—every part—is like the stones in Solomon's temple, that were cut and fitted in the mountains, each to its place, so that in the building each stone (part) comes into its place without the sound of a hammer upon it; and so the building gloriously goes on, and will, I trust, till, by and by, the Capstone will be brought home, with shoutings of Grace! Grace! unto it.

Retraction.

To the Editor and readers of the Crisis:—Allow me to retract what I wrote respecting the translation of Micah 5 : 2, in the Crisis of March 7th, as I am satisfied that I erred in respect to the meaning of the passage in the Septuagint. I have been informed by "C. F. H." that the Septuagint passage, ap arches ex hemeron aionos, cannot be translated, from the beginning of days everlasting; and therefore I retract what I through ignorance thought was a correct rendering; and offer the following exposition instead; taking the translation of Dr. Hales, as quoted by "H. L. H." in the Crisis, March 14, p. 6, 7th column.

"And art thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, little to be [esteemed]
Among the thousands of Judah?
From thee shall issue [THE LEADER,]
Who shall rule my people, the Israel [of God]
But his issuings are from OLD,
From days of eternity."

How shall we understand this prophecy? Shall we understand it in harmony with Paul's declaration, "It is evident that our Lord sprang out of Judah? or shall we understand it in accordance with that theory which makes of no account the divinely generated Son of Mary—the holy child Jesus? It is clear from the prophecy that the child Jesus, who was to originate out of Bethlehem, is a being distinct from that which is called "his issuings." This phrase conveys the idea of futurity, by being connected with the context, which speaks of him who was to be a ruler in Israel, who was to originate out of Bethlehem. This being so, we have only to find what issues from him which was "from of old," in order to find what is meant by "his issuings." Said the Revelator, "Out of his mouth GOETH a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations." What is it that he is to smite the nations with? "He shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked."—Isa. 11 : 4. Now Christ himself declares that the word which he has spoken shall judge those who reject him; and this word is the word of God, which "liveth and abideth forever." And this word, which goeth out of his mouth, is from of old, from days of eternity. As it issues out of his mouth, it is "his issuings," so we may truly say of the man Christ Jesus, who was born in Bethlehem, that "his issuings are from old, from days of eternity." Let us sing therefore, "Hosanna to the Son of David! Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the LORD; Hosanna in the highest!"

Said the apostle John, "He that believeth on the Son of God hath the witness in himself: he that believeth not God hath made him a liar; because he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son. And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is IN his Son."—1 John 5 : 10, 11. Observe, that this eternal life is IN his Son; not is his Son. Make a note of that! so as not to misunderstand what he says in the same epistle, chap. 1 : 1, 2, which reads as follows:—"That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled of the word of life; for the life was manifested and we have seen it, and bear witness, and show unto you that eternal life which was with the Father and was manifested unto us."

As John declares that this life is IN his Son, we have his authority for not confounding the word of life, and the Son of God, as the same identity. And hence we may truly believe that God spake truly when he said to Christ, "Thou art my Son this day have I begotten thee." Amen and Amen.

For the Crisis.

Letter.

To the Readers of the Crisis.—Many thoughts have been suggested to my mind, as I have arisen from the perusal of our family paper; and I have anxiously inquired, are we living up to the light given in its weekly visits? Something more than a hurried manner of reading is necessary to treasure up the precious truths, and keep in memory the valuable rules and wise maxims registered on its columns. Our condemnation is according to the light we reject. We cannot be enlightened on any point of law which regulates our intellectual, moral or physical being, and then violate that law without great guilt, in addition to the penalty of a broken law. Our God is a God of law and order. A sparrow falleth not to the ground without our heavenly Father. A sparrow sustains itself in the air by means of his wings, which his Creator gave him; if they are broken he falls to the ground by the law of gravitation. Our Creator has given man an intellect to understand cause and effect. The Pemberton Mills fell on the same principle that a sparrow falls to the ground when his wings are broken. A miracle must have been wrought to have kept either from falling.

These thoughts have produced some very salutary reflections. God is love: all his attributes flow from that fountain. All that he has devised, all that he has executed or purposed to execute, all he requires, is traceable to love. That holy principle, love, moves the mind, the hand. If we violate the laws he has in love established, and suffer, who is to blame? Surely not our God.

The Lord has said by the mouth of the prophet, "O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself; but in me is thine help." Israel destroyed himself by departing from the law of his God. His remedy was in returning. Truthfully it may be said of this generation, they have destroyed themselves, and they reject the remedy and are filling their cup of iniquity: even as did Saul the first king of Israel. 1 Chron. 10: 13, 14.—"So Saul died for his transgression which he committed against the Lord, even against the word of the Lord, which he kept not, and also for asking counsel of one that had a familiar spirit, to inquire of it; and inquired not of the Lord: therefore he slew him, and turned the kingdom unto David the son of Jesse."

It has become very evident that the Jesus Christ of the Bible is being rejected by this generation. Not only by the multitude who are already taken with the "satanic delusion," but all who labor to establish their own righteousness and have not submitted to the righteousness of God. Jesus says to his Father, "This is eternal life, to know thee the only living and true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." An imaginary Jesus whom we may fancy will help us mend our garments of self-righteousness, has no power to give eternal life.

Every exercise and every circumstance that makes us feel that we are "poor sinners, just nothing at all," should be regarded with devout gratitude and thanksgiving to God; for just in proportion to a knowledge of our lost condition, is our appreciation of the glorious Son of God our Savior. In this will I glory, that I know the Lord who exerciseth loving-kindness, judgment and righteousness in the earth, that I know myself a poor sinner, and Jesus the anointed, mighty to save.

If our Redeemer should prolong his absence a few years, is it not necessary to be very diligent in the work of cleansing ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, and perfect holiness in the fear of God? Shall any of us sleep as do those who are too proud to have the Crisis come to their office with their names on it; and are unwilling to have it seen lying on their tables; who turn away and will not come to the light, and avoid alluding to the subject of Christ's second coming?

We cannot lay off a slothful character and assume the christian, at a moment's warning. We cannot present our bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God, while defiling it with indulgences; the laws of life and health forbid.

What dismay will seize that individual, who has been hoping to be ready when Christ comes, and is taken unawares—thought he would not come so soon! What confusion and darkness will enshroud the despairing soul! Awake! brother, sister, friend, reader; awake! thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead; and Christ shall give thee light. E. J. Marden.

☞ I think that sometimes the Spirit of God is to men what the rising waters are to boats in a stream, when they run upon sand-bars. The attempts of the men to get them off with screws and jacks are of no avail; but by-and-by the rain upon the mountains causes a great freshet, when suddenly they are lifted up, and carried over, and have good navigation all the way to their destination. How many men, going down the stream of time, are caught on the sand bars of life, and are held there till, from God some uplifting influence comes and carries them over, and gives them a clear current the rest of their days. How precious does Christ become under such circumstances, to a christian!

For the Crisis.

Proved the Strong Arm.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—Our Conference has just closed, with a blessing from the Lord, such as shall be to all who prove him; we tried him, and the place was filled. Glory to God. All, with hardly an exception, said it was blessed to be there. The impression will not be forgotten soon; its effects will be shown in after time; the sound will reach far from here; an impetus to the cause of God is given that will encourage the laborer who goes out weeping for dying men. The heart of the far off, almost discouraged pilgrim will be warmed by the good news from a far country. "Such a meeting," says one, "I have not been in since '43." There was the shout in the camp, and prayers that took hold of the throne of the Blessed. God was in the preaching. The pillar of blessing rested on the meeting. God was honored and believed to be a prayer hearing God. Glory to God!

To be a door keeper where the Lord comes down our souls to greet, and where glory crowns the mercy seat, where songs of praise fill every heart,—oh how blessed! Truly we may say that God is good, and his mercy endures forever. He has shown that those who live near him are highly beloved,—that the Lord is with those who will be with him, and if they seek him, he will be found of them; but if they forsake him, he will forsake them. May we cleave unto him and serve him with full purpose of heart.

Let it suffice that we have in times past served the enemy. Let us be continually at the fountain for washing and cleansing such sinners as we, and the Lord fill our hearts with heavenly love, and keep us from the roaring lion who is seeking whom he may devour. He watches every unguarded heart, and entices into his service many careless ones. O hide from him in the shelter of the Rock that is higher than we; soon he must be destroyed with all the disobedient. O! escape on your knees to the Lord, who will protect you from the storm that will meet all the enemies of God. Some of that class we desire to reach in some way, either by tracts or personal effort, with the blessing of the Lord. Bro. Cotton has almost finished his tract, the "Light Ship," and is in hopes to get it out about the first of May. He lacks funds from the Lord's treasury. Who is holding back $35 or $40? You that have more than you need, send it along. Your abundance will be of service but a little longer. The Master is coming soon. Let us wait, and watch, and pray, that we may enter in to the Coronation of the King.

In hope, W. C. Stone.

For the Crisis.

A New Tract.

THE DOCTRINE OF ENDLESS MISERY AN OCCASION OF SCEPTICISM.

Among the eminent men who died during the past year was Sir James Stephen, Professor of Modern History in Cambridge University, England. He is best known in this country as one of the "British Essayists." The Essays which form one of the volumes of this series were originally published in the Edinburgh Review, and are republished in London, in two volumes, as "Essays in Ecclesiastical Biography."

To this edition the author has added an "Epilogue," for the purpose of showing that while he honors the memory of the great men of either Church, the Catholic and the Protestant, he is not personally indifferent in matters of christian doctrine. He has his opinions; and he is anxious to state them in these volumes, as he could not suitably do so in the "Review." Here, then, is his Confession of Faith.

The "Epilogue" consists of about forty pages, setting out with general remarks on the manifold revelations of God as Light and as Love. He encounters the difficulty which so many have confessed,—the supposed revelation, in the Divine Word, of eternal future suffering. This point he examines. He gives his reasons, briefly but forcibly, for dissenting from the customary interpretation of the Scriptures that bear on this point, and especially the two passages most commonly adduced in support of the received view, Matt. 25: 46, and Mark 9: 43—48. And he urges that this view is not sustained, is not practically believed even by those who profess it, and is an occasion for rejecting the Bible, and a stumbling block that ought to be taken out of the way. He gives the view which we hold—that the persistently wicked will finally perish.

When this "Epilogue" first appeared, some steps were taken by the more rigid ones to see if the Professor could retain his chair. The wiser and more liberal party showed that he could not and ought not to be removed.

The Epilogue is not republished in this country. I have prepared the essential portions of it for a tract, adding a few notes. I think it will be a real help in introducing our views to the favorable attention of the Christian community.

The tract will consist of 24 pages, 12mo; Price 5cts. Five copies for 20 cts. Mailed post paid. $2.00 per hundred, which is very cheap. Published by J. P. Jewett & Co., and sold at the Crisis office. Ready next Saturday. C. F. H.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, APRIL 18, 1860.

Relief for the Distressed;

OR,

How we got out of "Doubting Castle."

No. 17.

We now come to the twenty-third Division of "Doubting Castle," section fifty-four. Here Bro. Burnham found the following:

"Sport has been made in a certain direction of the idea of 'one man inside of another.' But this is a Bible idea. Paul tells us of the 'outward man' and the 'inward man.' He tells us too, that as the 'outward man perishes, the inward man is renewed day by day.' (54) Does it seem true that that something which grows continually stronger as the flesh part grows weaker, will all at once, have no strength at all in the final decay of the 'outward man?'" (55)

54. The Bible also speaks of the "hidden man," "the old man," and "the new man." Are these three more men besides the outer and inner man?" When we were confined in "Doubting Castle," its managers endeavored to blind our eyes with the passage under consideration; but we soon saw that there was no force in it; for if it proved that there is one man inside of another; then it may be shown equally clear that there is an "old man," a "new man," and the "hidden man;" thus making five men besides "the spirit man" and "soul man" of which theologians speak; and yet all these are only one accountable being. Who is the man that puts "off the old man" and puts "on the new man?" Is he independent of both? or is it simply one man in different conditions?

When we read of "outward man," "inward man," and "hidden man," shall we understand these to be separate organisms, inside or outside of another man? or merely different parts of the same man? Which is the most consistent and rational? If there is truly a man inside of another, then every man is two men; and the inside one must have as complete a set of organs as the one outside; otherwise, he is incapable of independent action, and must cease to act when the outside man dies. If the inside man is an independent being with a complete set of bodily organs, so that he can speak, hear, see, taste and smell; where is he located? We have no account of the creation of only one man, and the whole Bible is addressed to the man. Thence it follows, if the "inward man" is the man, the accountable being, all the law and commandments are addressed to him, and never to the "outward man," which the "Doubting Castle" faculty tell us is but the "house" for the "inward man" to occupy in this world.

Let us listen to some truths addressed by the Lord to "the real man"—the one that does the thinking—the accountable man. "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."—Gen. 3: 19. Here we learn that the man proper, who does the sinning, and must be the "inward man," as he is the one addressed, was made of dust, and will return to dust. When he has *re*turned to dust, is he still alive, intelligent, and as active as ever? Let the Scriptures answer. "The dead know not any thing." "The dead praise not the Lord." The day man dies, "in that very day his thoughts perish."

55. It is "true" that while we are wasting with disease physically, we are often renewed in our love and affection for Christ. It is also true, that when the disease is in the brain, that the reverse often takes place. In other cases, the mental powers fail before the physical, and we say, "his body has outlived his mind." But we see nothing in this division to prove that man is alive when he has returned to dust; or that there is a "spirit man" inside of the "body man" that never dies, who knows more when dead than alive.

The Boston Conference.

In our last, we gave a brief report of the proceedings of the first two days of the very interesting conference just closed, at Chapman Hall, Boston.

Friday morning. At 10 o'clock we met and enjoyed another delightful social meeting. A large number confessed the Savior and gave clear evidence that they were rejoicing in his love. Some came forward for prayers and were blessed. Every one who loved Jesus felt conscious that his Spirit was present to comfort the saints.

Bro. Benjamin Spaulding gave us a very interesting account of his travels and labors in the destitute places in Maine; presenting a model mode of missionary labor. Many eyes were filled with tears while he related the happy results of his faithful labors; and we all felt that we could do much more for Christ than we have been doing; and firm resolutions were formed and expressed in favor of greater missionary effort. Bro. S. goes from house to house, conversing and praying with the people, distributing tracts and trying to win lovers for Jesus. His labors have been most signally blessed by the Lord. He has now gone on another tour, with a bundle of tracts and papers to scatter among those who are famishing for the word of life. Pray the Lord to give him great success in leading sinners to Christ. We hope those who were favored with the privilege of listening to his interesting account of his mode of operation, will profit thereby, and commence at once a thorough course of missionary labor in their respective neighborhoods. None but those who have tried it know how sweet the peace arising from personal efforts made for the purpose of leading men into the way of life. If any have lost their first love, we know of no shorter and surer way of regaining it, than by trying to do good to others in the name of the Lord. Bro. Spaulding remarked that he was happy. We were not surprised at this statement. He who does what he can for the Lord, has the promise of "great peace."

Friday afternoon. Bro. Geo. Champlin preached a stirring discourse on God's love for man. In the evening Bro. J. Couch entertained us with a very interesting, able and instructive sermon on the atonement through Christ. It was one of those discourses that lasts for a lifetime. We hope he will consent to write it out for the readers of the Crisis.

Saturday. In the forenoon we had another excellent social meeting. All appeared to feel at home; or as often expressed, "In my Father's family." We felt the real christian union, such as is enjoyed only by the disciples of Jesus. We could say with a full heart, "This is a heavenly place."

In the afternoon Bro. Walter Pratt preached on the importance of earnestness in the cause of Christ, and of using every every possible effort to save men from destruction; while, at the same time, we should remember that all our efficiency must come from God. His self-denying labors in the West have been crowned with happy results. The truth is rapidly spreading in the western states, and many are loving the appearing of Jesus, who, a short time since, had no hope.

Saturday evening. Bro. Himes preached on the coming of Christ; showing that there is strong evidence that the six thousand years from the creation of man run out in 1866–68, when we may expect to see our Savior. The discourse was listened to with much interest. Evidently there will be another time movement of considerable magnitude, as there are many able men in the different churches who are turning their attention to the subject, and giving their sanction to the 1866–68 time, as advocated by Mr. Elliot, Cumming, Shimeall and others.

Events show very clearly that the coming of the Lord is at hand. Bro. Himes expresses strong confidence in the position that Christ will come within eight years. We have not yet had time to look over the argument sufficiently to express an opinion on the termination of the prophetical periods; but we think the signs of the times indicate that the Bridegroom will not tarry beyond the time mentioned. What a solemn thought, that the end of the present dispensation may be, and is probably, so near. Let us do all we can to arouse a sleeping church and world from their awful, lethargic state. How like the days of Noah and Lot are these times. All things proclaim that we are near the end of the present dispensation.

It revived many pleasing associations in the minds of those present, to behold Brn. Himes, F. G. Brown, and others, again in our midst, earnestly looking for and proclaiming the speedy coming of Jesus. A new era seems opening in the history of those looking for the return of the Messiah, that augurs good to the cause of Christ.

Lord's day. This will be long and happily remembered by those who spent it at Chapman Hall. We met at 9 1–2 o'clock for a love feast. It was truly a feast of christian love. In one hour and ten minutes we listened to one hundred and eighteen testimonies for the religion of Jesus; and they were soul-stirring too. But few such scenes are enjoyed in one's lifetime.

At noon we had a very interesting baptism in the waters of old ocean. At two o'clock we met again in a social meeting, and heard many more joyful testimonies.

Bro. H. L. Hastings preached for Bro. Himes in the morning, and Bro. Walter Pratt in the afternoon. Bro. H. preached for the Conference in the afternoon. His discourse on "Forever with the Lord" was heard with great interest. He showed very clearly from the Bible, that we do not go to be with the Lord at death; but must wait till he returns to raise the dead. The truth looked glorious, and very plain.

In the evening we gathered around the table to commemorate the death and sufferings of Christ. Between two and three hundred sat down with us to show their sympathy and love for Jesus. It was truly a heavenly season, that will hold a hallowed place in the memory of the past. Very appropriate and interesting remarks were made by Brn. Lewis, Couch, Hastings and C. F. Hudson. We sung, "When shall we meet again?" and closed. We are scattered now, but hope to meet again soon in the sweet bowers of Paradise, where lonely weeping is forever unknown.

There seemed to be but one voice concerning the Conference, which was expressed in the following language:—"This is the best one we have ever had."

John Wesley.

John Wesley was a rigid vegetarian; and yet but few men have performed the amount of labor in preaching, visiting and writing, which he accomplished. He died at the advanced age of eighty-three years. In a letter dated London, Feb. 2, 1785, he says:

"Mr. Henry said, I bless God that I am never tired of my work, yet I am often tired in my work. By the blessing of God, I can say more: I am never tired in my work. From the beginning of the day or the week, or the year to the end, I do not know what weariness means; I am never weary of writing, or preaching, or traveling; but am just as fresh at the end as at the beginning. This hath God wrought! Thus it is with me to-day, and I take no thought for the morrow."

Light Advancing.

Some one has sent us the following, which indicates progress in the right direction. We are satisfied that the theological mysteries of the day far surpass those in the Bible.

"It is not often that a clergyman advanced in life avows an essential change in theological opinions. We presume the avowals made by Rev. Wm. Allen, D. D., in the notes to his volume of "Christian Sonnets," will take many of his friends by surprise. He agrees with the theory lately advanced by Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, that Christ had properly no human nature, but only a human body, though he differs widely from Mr. Beecher as to the spirit occupying that body. Mr. Beecher believes Christ to be the supreme God; Dr. Allen considers him the first and highest of created beings, and in a sense divine, but not God. He also denies the personality of the Holy Spirit, which he considers a divine influence or energy exercised upon men. In regard to Christ, he says that the idea of a duplicate being is "inconceivable, an absurdity and a contradiction." "If we ascribe to Him a nature not ascribed to Him in the Bible, one incapable of sufferings which are ascribed to Him, what do we but contradict the word of God and reject the doctrine of the atonement by the sufferings of Christ?" Here Dr. Allen reverses the favorite argument that Christ must have been God in order to make a sufficient expiation, and denies the hypothesis that the man Christ suffered, while the God Christ, who could not suffer, was present to give value to the suffering. The substantial portion of Dr. Allen's argument is as follows:—

'According to our English Bible, the Son of God under the name of the Word seems to be called God by the apostle John, ch. 1, v. 1. But it was not the purpose of John to represent the Word as the infinite, supreme, almighty God. Origen, who wrote in Greek, in the third century, and understood the language better than any modern critic, says, that John's assertion is that, the 'logos, or word, was a god,' using the word god in its inferior, well-known sense, as is proved by his omission of the article. If he had inserted the article, he would have said, that, 'the logos, was the God, the supreme God, Jehovah.' The plain teaching is, there is one God. With him was the logos in the beginning, an exalted, glorious being; a second, inferior God; a being derived from God; and in this sense a divine being. Besides, Origen, Philo and several other fathers of the first three centuries, speak of John's omission of the article here as a proof that by the word god he did not mean the Supreme God. Consider, also, that if the logos existed 'with God,' then he was not the very God, with whom he existed. On the other hand, it is a matter of no weight that when the Supreme God is meant, yet the article is often omitted; for it is an established principle that it may be omitted when the name of God is sufficiently definite without it. In John 1: 6,—'a man sent from God:' here is an omission of it as unnecessary. So v. 12, 18, 18. Origen again says, 'Angels are called gods because they are divine; but we are not commanded to worship them in the place of God, and hence they are not really gods.' He says, the article is withheld, when what is called god is a being different 'from the self-existent God, having a communicated divinity, being a divine person.' Such also was the opinion of Clemens, Alexandrinus and Eusebius; and they were men more competent to decide a matter concerning the construction of the Greek language than any modern critic. In several of the first centuries it was the judgment of such fathers as Justin, Athenagoras, Tatian, Theophilus, Clemens, Origen, etc., that the word god as applied to Christ denoted a celestial nature, superior to all creatures, but inferior to the Supreme God. But the authority of Christ himself is more decisive,—'My Father is greater than I:' and the whole of scripture shows, that the one perfect God and his Son are two distinct intelligent Beings.'"

"The Opposition."

We take the above heading from the Spiritual Eclectic, under which we find the following:—

"Then there is Elder Grant, of the 'World's Crisis,' going about like a roaring lion,—though he more resembles another not very popular animal, which, however, we will not be so impolite as to name,—seeking to devour Spiritualists, and copying into his paper all the gross misrepresentations and scandal which the bigoted, and the spiteful, and the despisers of truth, and the profane, are ceaselessly and most unscrupulously uttering against the new sect! The cause of the Elder's opposition is, because it threatens to submerge, with its 'living waters,' the soulless theory that he has been for a long time endeavoring to foist upon the christian world. Let him pass now—we can but hope, if he comes in contact with Bro. Griswold, that his darkened mind may become penetrated with so many 'sunbeams' as will thoroughly enlighten it. He needs light, more light."

☞ What are the threatenings of the law but the warnings of Divine love? They are a fence thrown round the pit of perdition, to prevent rash men from running into ruin.—Waugh.

"Pre-existence."

We clipped the following from the Spiritual Eclectic. "Straws show which way the current is moving."

"Ma," said a sweet-souled little girl, of five summers, to her mother, not long since, "Ma, did the angels have a funeral when I came away?"

"Why, child!" replied the puzzled and astonished mother, "what are you talking about? What do you mean?"

"Why, ma," rejoined the thoughtful child, "you know I used to live in heaven, don't you? And I want to know if they had a funeral when I came away. Don't you suppose that God felt bad to have me go away off to this world? I know, if I should die and go back to heaven, you and Pa, and Edward, and Maria, and Frank, would feel real bad; and I thought perhaps they felt so up there."

Our Tract Column.

For the Crisis.

Tract Fund for the West.

The leaven is working in the meal, as the following letter will show:—

"Bro. Hastings:—I improve a few moments to inform you that I received a bundle of tracts. It is sometime since I gave them to such as wanted and would agree to read. They caused a great deal of gossip at first, but that died away—at least I heard no more of it for some time; but it appears that they have been to work. In one family the man and his wife confess that it is the truth—wonder why they did not see it before. They belonged to the Methodists, but they identify themselves with us now. They say they would be so glad to hear one preach the truth as plain as it is in the tracts. I requested all to whom I gave tracts, to read and then give to their neighbors. Now, Bro. H., if there are any more tracts you can spare, without pay, we would like a few; for we know there is nothing that will do as much good in this place. We are all very poor, or we would send the money. If you are so kind as to send us some, would like one of the 'Reasons.' The 'Key of Truth' is a good tract; we would like a number of them, and others you would think best and willing to send. We have no preaching of any kind."

The above will serve as a sample of what tidings I receive from tracts when sent out.

God's truth is plain, and if persons instead of splitting hairs, riding hobbies, building sects and making creeds, will cast the bread out on the waters, they will see results glorious beyond all their narrow ideas.

A brother from Iowa writes:—

"Those tracts you sent me have stirred up the hornets' nest. It has led many to searching, and some are giving the traditions of men to the winds. Nearly all agree that they contain Scripture, but it is different from what they have been taught. Next Wednesday we commence a prayer meeting. I wish we had some one to preach to us.—M."

Go on, brother. Let your meetings be Christian, not Methodist, Adventist, or any other sect; but simply Christian, and the Lord, I trust, will bless you.

For the Crisis.

Tracts for the West.

I have just received from Bro. Hastings a large quantity of tracts (148,800 pages) for our western brethren and sisters, supplied by the Western Tract Fund. These are excellent tracts, and many of them new; see the variety as advertised by Bro. H. in the Crisis. Now, brethren, these tracts are sent on to be scattered and not to be kept shut up here with me. I trust you will lose no time in sending on your orders for quantities such as you may require, and let us all go to work in good earnest; they are powerful preachers, they have already, by the blessing of the Lord, accomplished much, and yet but little has been done comparatively in sending them over the country.

Those ordering must send at least enough to pay the postage, if sent by mail, and as much as you can to go into the tract fund. I shall keep an account of all money received with names, and after paying the transportation from the East, remit the same to Bro. Hastings to go into the tract fund. Perhaps some can buy them at the rates advertised by Bro. H. in the Crisis. Let us do all we can, but let none hold back from ordering because they are unable to pay anything. Our eastern brethren and sisters have done nobly in furnishing these tracts; let us do "what we can."

I have received also from Bro. H. a new supply of books, of the kinds advertised by him in the Crisis, to be sold at the regular prices. Also on hand—Debt and Grace, by C. F. Hudson, price $1.25. Dobney on future punishment, 75 cts. Church Debts, by Dr. Ramsey, 40 cts. Death not life, by J. Blain (paper covers), 25 cts. Postage in addition to above prices. N. Branch, Jr.

Cordova, Ill., April 9th, 1860.

N. B. I would say to brethren owing me for books and tracts, that I want the amount very much to send to Bro. Hastings. Some have been standing some time. Be prompt as you can, brethren.—N. B. Jr.

☞ Faith makes a man see the prickles that are in every rose, the thorns that are in every crown, the poison that is in the golden cup, the spot that is in the shining pearl; and thus a christian counts and calls all these things, as indeed they are, "vanity of vanities."

☞ The violet grows low and covers itself with its own tears, and of all flowers yields the sweetest fragrance. Such is humility.

Correspondence.

From Benj. Spaulding.

Bro. Grant:—The Conference at Boston was one of peculiar interest to me. I had started from home with depressed spirits, a frame of mind I am constitutionally subject to, with the intention of visiting Aroostook Co., Me., as a colporteur. The sympathy I received at the Conference dispelled my gloom and depression, so that I went on my way rejoicing. Bundles of second-handed tracts were given me, until I was fairly loaded down with them; and about $15 were presented to me for new ones, until I had obtained four or five thousand pages of tracts, and many back numbers of the World's Crisis and children's papers. Armed with these weapons, which are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of the strong holds, and the building up of the truth as it is in God's word, I started out from Boston, leaning on the strong arm of the God of truth; and with the loving sympathies of my brethren and sisters in the Lord comforting me, I started for the East, willing to spend and be spent, the remembrance of the past leading me still to trust in God, and expect his protection and guidance.

I arrived in Bangor safely, deposited my tracts at Bro. Smith's, and with a bundle in my hands started immediately for Holden; met the brethren, and was comforted. Found them strong in the faith once delivered to the saints. Found Bro. T. Smith there. He is a working man, has done much in this part of Maine for the upbuilding of Bible doctrine. God bless him is my prayer.

God bless those brethren and sisters who contributed so liberally to assist me in my mission to the poor in eastern Maine. And among other donors, I would mention with gratitude to God and to the sister, a sister in my own vicinity, who presented me with five dollars, to be laid out in children's little books, to be circulated in Maine. Her name is requested to be withheld. But God will bless her and her little one, and the act will be recorded in God's book, and the gratitude and thanks of the rising generation will rest upon her, inasmuch as she did it to one of these little ones, she did it to Jesus, and will not lose her reward.

I propose keeping you informed of my whereabouts, operations and success. May God bless the little winged messengers of truth, open ears to the truth, and give hearts to investigate it; until error and the man of sin shall be destroyed by the brightness of Christ's coming.

Pray for unworthy me, for I need heavenly wisdom, holy boldness, humility of heart, and devotion of life, that I may discharge duty as one who expects to give an account in the great day which is nearing.

Holden, Me., April 9th.

From Wm. Ongley.

Bro. Grant—We have left our little home in Prince Albert, C. W., and are now at my son's in Blooming Valley, Pa.; and we do hope by the blessing of God our Father, through Jesus Christ, that our visit in this moral part of God's vineyard may be the means of helping on the cause of God's church here, and in other places where we may be called to labor in word and doctrine. Our God makes use of simple means to work his ends. We hope to do good and win some to the truth. O God! bless us and make us a blessing.

We are thankful for the privilege of reading the Crisis; it cheers us on the way to the kingdom; may God bless you in conducting the same. We with others remember you at a throne of grace.

Brn. and sisters, let us be more Christ like, more useful in our day of trial, that we may be accounted worthy for the glorious age about to come.

From Sr. E. Grant.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—My heart is full of gratitude to my heavenly Father for his goodness to me, and not to me only, but unto all his creatures,—"His tender mercies are over all his works."

When I look back upon days and months that are past, I feel to mourn over my coldness and indifference, and have felt for some time that it was time to awake out of sleep; but the "fear of man that bringeth a snare" has kept me from saying or doing much that was of any use. However, the Lord in his good providence has sent one of his good servants into our vicinity, and blessed his labors in setting us to examine ourselves, to see "whether we be in the faith."

Brn. and Srs., there has been too much examining our neighbors, instead of ourselves, among us as a people, and now will we not, one and all, come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty, repent and do our first works? What are first works? Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and thy neighbor as thyself. Can I love God and hate my brother? Nay, verily. "He that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" Can I love my neighbor as myself, and harbor ill-will or hardness against him? What saith the Scripture? "If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your heavenly Father forgive your trespasses." "If thou bring thy gift to the altar, and rememberest there that thy brother hath aught against thee, leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." Some may say, I have nothing against any one. But, "if thou rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee,"—that is the condition; and yet another, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." The whole seventh chapter of Matthew is to the point on this very subject.

I feel like striving to double my diligence, to make my calling and election sure. I believe that time is short; soon will the door of mercy be closed, and then it will be too late, too late to seek forgiveness; too late to find salvation. Now free; now salvation is offered,—free for you and me.

O come, sinner, come! and accept free salvation. Look not on the failings of those who profess to be christians, but look to Jesus, the Lamb of God, who suffered, groaned, and died for you. He now waits to be gracious, but when he has risen up and shut to the door, then will he say to those professors who have been hindrances to his cause, "I never knew you." God grant that I may not be one of that number, but that I may enter in through the gates into the city.

Torrington, Ct.

From Eld. Wm. Sheldon.

Bro. Grant:—I have just returned from a nine weeks' tour in Wisconsin and Minnesota; and truly it has been a profitable one. Souls have been brought into the fold of Christ, wanderers have been reclaimed, and souls have been "buried with Christ in baptism." To God be all the glory. Were you not crowded with matter for publication, I could furnish your readers with a cheering account of the cause in the west; but I forbear.

I have arranged to spend my whole time in the gospel field for the year to come. Am to move to Wisconsin. My address will be Springville, Badaxe County, Wisconsin, after June 1st. Have arranged to hold five grove meetings in Wisconsin in the month of June, at important points; the first to be at Springville, commencing on Friday, 2 o'clock, P. M., June 1st. Expect several preachers. Yours in the gospel hope.

From R. V. Lyon.

Brethren and Sisters:—Far away from you and your lovely homes, the land of my nativity, and the scenes of my boyhood, in a foreign land, I am striving to win a bride for my Master. I find that the devil is not dead, neither bound, but is alive and awake to all of his old devices; that he is not wanting in means nor agents to carry out his plans. I find in this country, as I have always found in my own, that his most successful agents are those who have a name to live and are dead (to the truth), having a form of godliness, but denying the power, (the gospel is the power.)

But the battle goes well, though sometimes it waxes hot. No wound, as yet, have I received to hinder me in my work of mercy to this last race of Adam's children, though surrounded by many a foe who hates the truth as revealed unto us in the living oracles. Nevertheless they are desirous of being saved, if they can be saved in their own way, and by their own man-made creeds, independent of a belief and obedience to the one faith, the one hope, for which Paul was arraigned before Agrippa. "And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers, ... For which hope's sake, king Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews. Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?"

Beloved, though enemies of truth are numerous in this part of the benighted earth, yet there is a "remnant according to the election of grace," who have not bowed down to those soul-destroying creeds. Glory be to God! They are more precious to me than the gold of Ophir. The Lord reward them for the aid which they have rendered me in the proclamation of the glad tidings of the kingdom at hand. Amen. I am interested in the "Crisis;" and it gives me much pleasure and comfort to read epistles from those that I have long been acquainted with. I see that some are looking for Jesus to come this year. Yours on the road to the highlands of glory.

North Augusta, C. W.

From John Morrison.

Dear Brethren and Sisters, who love and long for the appearing of Jesus Christ;—take King Jesus' counsel; watch ye, therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man, for the generation (that hath seen the signs of Jesus' coming the second time without a sin offering unto salvation) is passing away, therefore we ought to look up, and lift up our heads, for our redemption draweth nigh. Not only this, but likewise all the signs spoken of by the holy prophets and apostles of Jesus Christ, are now in fulfillment before our eyes; for the time has come that they will not endure sound doctrine, they are turned from the truth, and have [illegible] minded with a form of godliness, not willing to come to the knowledge of the truth, choosing their own delusions: from such turn away. For they that are such serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but their own belly; and by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple. They love not the right path; they have forsaken the path of life; their way seemeth right in their own eyes, but the end thereof is the way of death. They hate knowledge, and do not choose the fear of the Lord. They will none of his counsel,—they do not tremble at his word; therefore they shall eat of the fruit of their own way; for Job says, they sow wickedness and shall reap the same.

But the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. But unto you that fear, and obey the Lord and speak often one to another, that do hearken and hear him, a book of remembrance is written before him for them that fear the Lord, and think upon his name; and they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him; and the Son of righteousness shall arise on you who fear my name, with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth and grow up as calves of the stall. And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts.

Dearly beloved, who are loving and looking for that blessed hope, even the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, may that spirit of promise by which ye are sealed, which is the earnest of your inheritance, guide and preserve you blameless until the coming of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, is the prayer of your brother, who is waiting for his adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body; for we are saved by hope: but hope that is seen is not hope, for what a man seeth, why doth he yet hope for? But we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it. Then let us wait for him, for the just shall live by faith.

New Glasgow, C. E.

For the Crisis.

"Reasons for my Hope."

A friend writes us as follows; Feb. 28th: "Dear Bro.:—I received the bundle of books and tracts that you sent me the 24th. I can assure you I retired to rest that night feeling richer and happier than I had for a long time. I have had some precious seasons since—it seemed like having conference meetings with you. I felt much blest while reading the tract "One Thing," and had deeper impressions of my Father's love, I think, than ever before. More confidence to cast all my care upon Him. O is there anything in the wide world to be compared to the glorious gospel of the blessed God? Any hope like "my Hope?" No, no.

I was almost destitute of tracts, and those you sent were very thankfully and timely received.

"Reasons for my Hope" is indeed a precious work . . . already eight of them with some of the tracts are telling their story, and I hope by and by to give you some account of the good resulting from their distribution.—S."

The little Book, "Reasons for my Hope," is making its way along. One Presbyterian minister, after reading it, requested me to come and preach in his church. One preacher read it and ordered one hundred copies which he is putting in circulation. It has not gone to the Editors much, though I see a favorable notice in a religious monthly issued in Canada. And a man in Canada has ordered one hundred copies for circulation there. The edition is nearly exhausted and I must soon print more. Persons who wish one hundred copies to circulate, can engage them for cash at low rates by addressing me. Price in cloth by mail 50 cts.; paper 30 cts.

Your brother, H. L. Hastings.

Obituary Notices.

Fell asleep, at Hartford, Ct., March 17th, 1860, Bro. John W. Butler, eldest son of Leonard and Saphrona Butler, aged twenty-five years.

Bro. J. was converted to God at the early age of nine years, and then being in the enjoyment of health, his experience was very intelligent and joyful. But epilepsy came upon him, his health failed, a cloud came over his mind, and about five years ago utter aberration succeeded. But he passed under this mental cloud a christian, and though the intellect was darkened by it, there is every just reason to believe that his Savior fully accepted him. He loved the Redeemer of sinners, and on his dying day, reason partially returning, strove in vain to tell his feelings to the loved group around him; but the tongue clave to the roof of the mouth, and he but faintly articulated, "Glory!" Then he passed away, to once more in unclouded and immortal day take up that dying strain, at the Lord's blest advent.

Elder W. B. Campbell attended at his funeral [illegible]

Died, in Newark, N. J., on the 8th inst., Freddie J., eldest son of William and Mary Shepherd, aged four years, six months and thirteen days.

Our little boy, after an illness of nearly four weeks, in which he suffered most severely, peaceably "fell on sleep," to await the general awakening voice of the trumpet of the resurrection, when Jesus comes to raise his sainted dead and crown them with immortal beauty.

The funeral services were attended by Eld. William Roworth, who spoke according to the oracles of God from Jer. 31 : 15–17.

This is the heaviest blow and saddest scene of affliction which we have ever been called upon to pass through. May God sanctify it to our good. Pray for us, brethren, that the deep and painful wound inflicted upon the broken heart may be kindly soothed and gently comforted by the sweet influence of the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ, and cheered with "that blessed hope and the glorious appearing" of Him who is "the Resurrection and the Life;" when our little one, together with the redeemed myriads, "shall come again from the land of the enemy" unto "the glory of all lands." We hope, we trust. Amen.

As fades the rose, as droops the flower,
To shed its fragrance but an hour,
We've borne him to an early tomb,—
But yet in Paradise to bloom.

William Shepherd.

Died, at East Haverhill, N. H., March 25th, George Warren, aged fifty-six years; also, March 23d, his wife, Arcathusa Warren, aged sixty-three years.

Bro. and Sr. Warren both died of lung fever, after a sickness of about ten days, and were buried at the same time in one grave, March 27th. They were devoted to God and his cause, and died in the full assurance of the blessed hope of a soon coming Savior to raise the dead. They longed to depart, and felt that their work was done. I have never been called to attend a funeral before under like circumstances. A large concourse of people were in attendance, and a more solemn and impressive scene I have seldom witnessed. The community where they resided deeply feel their loss. May God bless the mourning relatives, and raise up others to fill the place made vacant in the Zion of God.

I. H. Shipman.

Our dear little George is no more. On Wednesday last, at half-past eleven o'clock in the forenoon, he closed his eyes in the long, dreamless sleep of death. His disease was malignant croup. It was only about five days after his sickness excited our alarm, until death closed his sufferings forever. His sufferings were exquisite and protracted, but neither the skill of physicians nor the tears and sympathy of friends, could alleviate the torturing pain or arrest the cold tide of death. Only three years, one month and one day, was the transient sojourn of our dear and only son!

He was the life and the light of our home; but he is gone, and we mourn,—we sorrow, but not as those who have no hope. We believe that he is sweetly sleeping in Jesus, awaiting the voice of the archangel and the trump of God, which shall wake his sleeping dust, and deliver him from the power of the last enemy, and restore him to our fond embrace, a glorious form.

We believe that that Savior, who, with a heart overflowing with tenderest sympathy, could mingle his tears with those of a bereaved Martha and Mary, will share our sorrows, while his sweet and cheering promises shall pour like oil upon our grief-stricken hearts. He was once a helpless and lovely child, caressed and loved by his parents; and even in the years of manhood he never forgot those young and tender days.

Behold him while engaged in the stupendous work of a world's redemption,—while the eternal fate of all the living and the dead was suspended upon his faithfulness, stooping to receive, with the tenderness of a mother, little children, while from his compassionate heart flowed a blessed promise, richer in consolation to bereaved and sorrowing parents, than all the balms in Gilead, and all the cordials in the world. "Then were brought unto him little children, that he should put his hands on them and pray: and the disciples rebuked them. But Jesus said, Suffer little children, and forbid them not to come unto me; for of such is the kingdom of heaven. And he laid his hands on them, and departed thence."

Bro. Ewers preached at our child's funeral from the following text of Scripture, Matt. 2 : 17, 18. "Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by Jeremy the prophet, saying, In Rama was there a voice heard, lamentation, and weeping, and great mourning, Rachel weeping for her children, and would not be comforted because they are not." He showed that the cause of Rachel's weeping was not because her children had gone to heaven; but because they were not, i. e., did not exist. Then, to show the true source of consolation to bereaved and weeping mothers, he read the remainder of the prophecy, from which his text was taken by the inspired apostle. Jer. 31 : 15–18. "Thus saith the Lord; a voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation and bitter weeping; Rachel weeping for her children refused to be comforted for her children because they were not. Thus saith the Lord; Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears; for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord; and they shall come again from the land of the enemy. And there is hope in thine end, saith the Lord, that thy children shall come again to their own border."

It was shown that children at death instead of going to heaven, go to the land of the enemy. That death is not the gate to endless joys, but to the grave; that death is not a friend, but an enemy. And that the only hope of such as are called to mourn the death of loved, innocent children, is in the destruction of the power of this enemy, and their deliverance from his cruel bondage.

Bro. Ewers closed his discourse with a touching appeal to saint and sinner—to not prepare for death, for they were already prepared—but to prepare to live forever in the kingdom of God. And to the bereaved and weeping parents and friends, if thus prepared, you may enjoy the society of your child, your relative, forever in that blessed country where the "inhabitant shall not say I am sick;" where wasting disease shall never show its pale visage; where torturing pain shall never be felt, and sorrow's tears shall never be shed; where sin and death shall never enter, and night shall never dim the glorious prospect; where beauty shall never fade and innocency never suffer. The good of all ages shall be there, and among that vast and glorious throng our beautiful and lovely child shall be seen. May we be there!

Your brother in affliction,
J. M. Stephenson.

Metomen, Wis., Feb. 27, 1860.

My precious boy, thou'rt sleeping now,
With the death-damp cold upon thy brow—
A slumber deep and long;
Oh, not as thou wert wont to rest
So fondly cradled on my breast,
Hushed by my evening song.

No more shall I with tender care
My sleeping boy so gently bear
Safe to his little bed.
No more his waking shall I greet,
Nor listen to his accents sweet,
For, oh, my child is dead!

O death! when will thy cruel sway
Forever pass from earth away?
When will the morning come,
That brings no night of dark despair,
But one bright day of glory, where
We all shall wake at home?

Lusett M. Stephenson.

Died, in Wolfborough, N. H., March 15th, Joseph P., son of Josiah and Rowena Garland, aged fifteen years, one month and fifteen days.

His death was caused by the bursting of a cannon, which was being fired upon the reception of the news of the State election. He was about a mile from home when the explosion took place. Word was immediately carried to his parents; they hastened to the spot, and in a few moments, amid deep anguish of friends, Joseph breathed his last. He was not engaged in the affair, but happened to be near, for a laudable purpose, when it took place. A piece of the cannon was thrown, making a ghastly wound in his head. By the recklessness of others, not only these friends, but others, are thrown into deep sorrow, for by the explosion one more was instantly killed, and others injured.

Joseph was an intelligent young man, and highly respected by those that knew him for his strict honesty and moral deportment. He was one of one hundred and thirty who was attending the Academy school in the place. His funeral was attended by the writer, assisted by Bro. T. W. Piper, and others, March 18th, at the Freewill Baptist meeting-house, which was kindly offered for the occasion, and a very large congregation listened to a subject from 1 John 2 : 3, on the importance of knowing Christ; after which the afflicted friends, together with the teachers and scholars, also the large assembly, looked upon the dear young man for the last time.

May Bro. and Sr. Garland, under their deep affliction, be supported by the grace of God, and the surviving brother and sister be led fully to Christ. J. G. Smith.

FOREIGN.

ITALY.

The Constitutionnel says that France waits only the safety of the Pope, before withdrawing her troops from Rome, but she will not do so until they are replaced by an Italian power.

Letters from Rome confirm the statement that the allocution pronounced by the Pope in the Secret Consistory of the 26th ult., included the excommunication of Victor Emmanuel, without naming him. It specifies his acts, which, it says, have incurred the censures pronounced by the Councils against plunderers of the Church.

The Papal Carbiniers had taken off the escutcheon of Sardinia from the house of the Sardinian Vice Consul at Pisaro.

Garibaldi had been elected Deputy for Nice.

A dispatch from Rome says that, in case of evacuation by the French, Rome will be occupied by the Pontifical troops, and the Neapolitan troops will enter the Marches. Three thousand Papal troops are concentrated at Ancona.

A new revolutionary demonstration was to have taken place at Rome, but did not, in consequence of secret circulars being distributed among the people, intimating that such a demonstration might be the cause of annoyance to the French troops.

A letter to the London Times gives full details of the late massacre at Rome by the Papal gendarmes, from which it appears 147 persons were killed and wounded. A number of ladies were injured. The American Vice Consul received a stab in the side, and several of the French military, off duty, were wounded.

His Holiness has 12,000,000 of scudi, the pious offerings of good Catholics, packed in boxes in the Vatican; so that in case he should consider another Hegira necessary, the money for his traveling expenses is abundantly provided.

In Southern Italy the state of affairs becomes more and more alarming.

Malta. A letter from Malta to the United States Gazette says: The fortress is being placed in a state of complete defense; and I hear from some of the artillery that every bastion is armed to the teeth, and everything is ready for action. All the ammunition is being transported to Valetta, so that, in spite of the many peaceable declarations of the present ruler of France, it would appear that the British government is preparing for any emergency that may arise."

FRANCE.

The Paris correspondent of the London Herald says preparations are making for the campaigning outfit of an army of 250,000 men, and that the officers and men on furlough had been ordered to join their corps.

Business Notice.

About the first of May next, those of our subscribers who have not paid to the end of last volume will receive a Bill for what is due up to that period, with the additional six months in advance. Our friends will please consider the increased necessity of paying up, thus keeping the machinery going which is set apart to perform the Lord's work. We have much to do and a short time to do in. The people are perishing for the lack of the truth, and we who have it must give it to them.

Those who have had books of us longer than three months without paying, will do well to let us have, were it but a part of the money, as the usefulness of the paper is hindered by being compelled to lie out of the price of works for which we pay, when in justice we cannot afford to give long credit. We hope our brethren will cheerfully respond.

Notice.

Who wants a preacher? Bro. Noah Gliddon thinks of changing his position from Barnstead to some other location, where a door opens to do good. Bro. Gliddon is a young man, about thirty years old, of good repute and good preaching talents, and in the work of reformation. There are places where he is needed. He has a family of four children, but not extravagant or expensive. Those wishing to correspond with him on this subject, please direct to Eld. Noah Gliddon, Barnstead Centre, N. H. Hiram Munger.

Notice.

There will be a meeting of Shell Rock Quarterly Christian Conference holden in Marble Rock, Floyd Co., Iowa, commencing May 11th, in the evening, and continue over the Lord's day. Ministers and churches wishing to unite, will be there prepared by letters and delegates to do so. There will be grove meetings held in other places, if desired.

Peter S. W. Deyo, Evangelist.

A Proposition.

To any one who will send us a new subscriber for one year, we will forward, post paid, a copy of our late discussion with Eld. W. W. Clayton, on the conscious state of the spirit after death, and the destruction of the wicked. And for a new subscriber for six months, we will send a copy of the pamphlets on "Soul" and "Spirit." With a little effort, a thousand names may be added to our list. Let every reader try to aid in scattering the light and truth. Now is the time to work.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brn. that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday Morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be in season to be inserted till the week following.

For the Crisis.

The Mother.

A softening thought of other years—
A feeling linked with ours,
When life was all too bright for tears,
And hope hung wreathed with flowers.
A memory of affections fled,
Of voices heard no more,
Stirred in my spirit when I read
That name of fondness o'er.

O mother! in that magic word
What love and joys combine—
What hopes, too oft, alas! deferred,
What watchings, griefs, are thine;
Yet never till the hour we roam,
By worldly thralls oppressed,
Learn we to prize the holiest home—
A tender mother's breast.

Ten thousand prayers at midnight poured
Beside our couch of woes—
She wasting weariness endured
To soften our repose.
While never murmur [illegible] thy tongue,
[illegible] thy care,
How, mother, is thy heart so strong
To pity and forbear.

"I Would not Live Alway."—Job 7:16.

BY HENRY W. DANN.

(Concluded.)

5. I would not live alway, because in that blessed country, weariness of body and mind are alike unknown.

Here, the body under the pressure of the multitudinous cares of life, sickens, fades and dies, and the mind, feeding too much on the historic records of the past, and speculating on that which is to come, finds itself disabled and at last deranged. But there, fatigue of body and lassitude of soul find an end. These human frailties find an eternal end in the tomb. In heaven, I shall be renewed in the strength and vigor of immortal youth; and on the high hills of immortality I shall walk with God, with no pain of body or mind,—no halting steps,—no spirit pressed down by the manifold temptations of this life,—no body crushed by the weight of years,—with no infirmity of flesh to detract from the fullness of joy that shall be mine.

I shall see the glorified, crowning the battlements of heaven, presenting a picture of health and beauty never before beheld by mortal eye. "For there shall be no more an infant of days, or an old man that hath not filled his days;" but immortal youth will characterize the heavenly moving mass. There I can gaze with intensest wonder on the things caused by Omnipotent energy. I can look out on space, once chaotic and empty, and behold the majesty of my God. I see ten thousand glittering orbs, immensely great, revolving in regions of unbounded space, and suns and systems, hitherto unknown, are opened before my vision; and the further my eager eyes peer into illimitable space, the more do I behold of the great and eternal God. Then again, I turn to the home of the blessed, and oh, the raptures of those heavenly joys! Again, I say, I would not live always.

6. I would not live alway, because heaven is beyond the reach of temptation.

Here, temptations meet me at every turning point of life, and a thousand things present themselves before me to draw my soul from God. Our pathway in life is beset by innumerable evils, being kinds from without and unrighteousness in the constantly at work plotting our ruin and instigating man to throw up his allegiance to God.

But there, the wiles of Satan never can entrap the soul, for his emissaries can never pass the eternal gates; and sin and Satan will be cast into the bottomless deep, and wicked men and wicked deeds will be banished from the presence of God, and the glory of his power.

There the infidel, whose baneful influence in this life destroyed the hopes of thousands, will have no place. The Atheists, who have tried to make ours a Godless world, have no place in that country; for sin and sinners are eternally excluded from the glories of that better clime.

There, harmony unknown in the affairs of this life, will reign supreme; no jarring strings will mar the peace and harmony of the heavenly multitude. I shall there be surrounded by kindred minds, fit associates and faithful friends. Society will then be perfect; and the shackles of a lifetime of sin be eternally broken.

7. I would not live alway, because in heaven there will be union without separation.

Here, tender endearments exist in the family association, and ties of friendship stronger than death bind us together; but the hour of dissolution comes on apace, and the strongest tie that ever bound heart to heart is snapped asunder. The minister of Jesus Christ has labored long and faithfully on the walls of Zion, but he also surrenders his work, and death removes him far away from these busy life scenes. The husband dies, perhaps just entered upon the marriage state, and the young and lovely wife stands alone; the voice of sorrow rends the air as the clods of the valley fall upon and cover the last remains of a devoted companion. Like scenes, that hourly transpire, teach us that this is not our home.

8. I would not live alway, because in heaven I shall have pleasure without pain.

Here, the sweetest hours of life are often embittered by a single unfaithful word falling upon the ear, and the brightest day man ever knew was attended or succeeded by a night of sorrow. In heaven pleasures will be unmixed, and the thought of an unending life, and the raptures of immortal bliss that attend it will bring exquisite pleasure to the soul. No more shall I be pained by faithless friends and hostile enemies; no more will life's cares press upon my spirit; but a host of faithful friends, loyal to the great and glorious King, will be my companions forever.

I shall bear a palm of victory in my hand and a crown of life upon my head. O how complete the triumph! The last tear shed—the last groan uttered—death and hell forever conquered, and the last vestige of sin forever gone.

9. I would not live alway, because this is not my home.

I have no continuing city here, no abiding home. I tarry awhile, but am a pilgrim and a stranger here below. Behind me I see nought but blasted hopes and ruined prospects; before me I see forebodings of an impending gloom. The rise and fall of the meridian sun; the fading countenances of earthly friends; the falling of the autumnal leaves; the blasting tempest; the withering mildew,—all tell me in language not to be misunderstood that this is not my home. But heaven is a land of pure delight—a territory of riches and honors as extensive as the domain of God;—and in his presence there is fullness of joy, and at his right hand there are pleasures forevermore. There the Sabbath shall never end; christian communion shall never cease. The Sun of righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings, and we shall ever, ever be with the Lord.

10. I would not live alway, because I long to be freed from these life pangs that so terribly oppress the heart. I want to be rid of these sickening scenes of earth. I want to be freed from the body of sin and death. I do not like to gaze upon the wailing of distress, the groans of the dying, and the cries of mourners as they go about the streets. These things cause me to shrink back even from the dearest relations of life.

But in that better country, such scenes as these find no place. In all the vast domain of God, no tempest howls, or lowering storms shall ever beat; but the music of the seraphs shall fall sweetly upon the ear forever.

Again I roam abroad and increasing and ever increasing wonders fill my soul. I see my Jesus arrayed in brightest glory, surrounded by the marshalled hosts of God's elect. The eternal shout and song of redeeming grace and dying love fall upon my ear. I stand and look as revolving worlds start up into being at God's command; I see stars immensely great, fall by the same fiat into oblivion. I look, and continue to look, and ever delighted, my soul feeds upon the raptures of an eternal life.

Blessed be God, there is a better life, and in a very brief period of time the christian will have passed the bounds of this probation and entered upon its joys. O Lord, for Jesus' sake, let this endless life and joy be mine!

Reflections.

This morning, while the tempest is howling, and all nature seems to be ruffled, the cold, bleak winds finding their way through every crack and crevice; and every tree and shrub whistling, bending beneath its majestic course, I began to reflect upon the passing scene. I turned my eyes from the face of nature, where the elements seem to be at war among themselves. I see puss quietly sleeping in the arm-chair, Charley and Franky chirping over their playthings as they sit upon the floor. I see them manifest no uneasiness on account of the outward appearance of nature; their hearts seem to be full of joy and peace. They do not appear to be in doubt in reference to what they shall eat or drink or wherewithal they shall be clothed; but I see them manifest perfect confidence in him who is their guardian, and their only aim seems to be to extract the most of enjoyment from surrounding objects and circumstances. Though the tempest may howl without, they feel they are under a father's roof. Though they see the chilling wind stiffening the waters and pinching up all before it, yet they have no fears, they are warmed by a father's fire. They see the earth refuse to vegetate, and is clad in its winter's garb. They have no fears. They are fed by a father's hand.

I see manifest here a confiding trust, an unwavering confidence in father. At the same time, I see such love manifested as can be found nowhere except in the great Fountain of love. For while they enumerate all the houses, barns and trees, that if possible to tell their great love, and finding all these combined are not enough to express their love, trust and confidence, they often say I love you more than I can tell. O what an example I receive in my own family circle of love, trust and confidence; and I hear the Lord saying, "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter the kingdom of heaven."

At this point I asked myself the question, do you love the Lord? Although for some ten years I have been trying to serve the Lord, yet to-day, while I view the example the Lord set in the midst of his disciples, and said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven," it causes me to look with shame and regret upon the past, to think I have been so far beneath my privilege. This day's reflection has brought fresh to my mind all my past life, its ups and downs, its joys and its sorrows, with all its trials and disappointments, with the frowns of foes, and flatteries of friends, with many of the temptations incident to a life spent in the service of God.

And while I survey the fact I have to thank my heavenly Father for his goodness and mercy to me. My mind is carried back to the fireside of that praying father and that affectionate mother, who to-day so sweetly sleep in Jesus; whose fervent prayers and earnest exhortations fell on my ear like the hammer upon the flinty rock, which carried convictions to my heart, which have been deep and abiding. I was led to remember my Creator in the days of my youth, before the evil days came on, or before I become immersed in the cares of this life, that I should say I have no pleasure in them.

This hour brings fresh to my mind the events of boyhood days, one of which I will here mention. During the pleasant months of spring, in forty-three, when all nature seems to leap forth into new life, and the feathered songsters struck their highest notes as if to welcome the returning spring; new hopes seem to light up our youthful hearts, and the blessing of God appears to smile on us all. But in that hour, nature's types would have symbolized anything but death. Death threatened to enter our family circle. Not to pluck the tender branch, or opening bud, but to strike at the root of all our hopes and joys: threatening to palsy the strong arm that had for so many years so manfully waged a war with one of the elements of nature, with the hammer and the anvil. While that arm retains its strength we live; but when it refuses to strike the beaten anvil, want must follow, and with it goes our hope. As we gathered around the sick bed, with hopes all chilled, joys darkened, hearts heavy, cheeks bathed in tears, the cold damps of death upon his brow, his feet cold with a death chill, the physician saying he could not stay with us but a few moments longer. Then, at that moment stood by his bedside the two youngest of the family, (one about six the other about eight,) giving vent to their broken hearts. He looked upon them, and then lifted his eyes toward heaven; his features gave indication of fervent prayer; he continued so for some time until his features gave expressions of joy.

"The Coming Man."

BRO. GRANT:—Allow me through your paper to state a few thoughts respecting the COMING MAN, expected by the Spiritualists in the first months of this year; and which they claim has been revealed to them by the spirits of those long since dead. We doubt not but they are correct as to the revelation, but deluded as regards the revealer, because they love not the truth but have "pleasure in unrighteousness."

We believe the word to Daniel, "that the wise shall understand." We think the wise are those who search the word, asking God for wisdom, "who giveth liberally and upbraideth not." Now I understand that the word reveals the coming man in his true character, as the "man of sin," "the son of perdition."—2 Thess. 2d chap. We also find revealed in the word an adversary, called "serpent," "satan," "devil," etc.; whose workings have been opposed to God in leading the people astray. Oft times using the same means. When God led the people by prophets, he also misled them by false prophets. When God worked by miracles, he did the same. See the case of Moses and Aaron with the magicians. When God was manifested to the world through his Son Jesus Christ, he was manifested as the adversary of God through Judas, who betrayed the "Author of life" into the hands of sinful men; and was called by Christ a "devil," the son of perdition," etc. And he did all this—died and left the world before the Savior—"that the Scriptures might be fulfilled;" So will he be revealed again before the Savior, be destroyed by the "brightness of his coming," that the Scripture may be fulfilled spoken by Paul, 2 Thess. 2d chap.

I am aware that some suppose this scripture to have been fulfilled in the Pope of Rome. But I have no hesitation in saying that they are in part mistaken. Though I have no doubt that Paul's prediction commenced to be fulfilled in the Pope; but will not be completed until the "son of perdition" is more fully revealed in the "coming man."

Let us compare the prediction of the Spiritualists with that of Paul.

First, the coming man is to be revealed. Paul declares, 8th verse, "And then shall that wicked be revealed."

Second, the coming man is to change the political economy of the world and become sole ruler. Paul says, 4th verse, "Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God."

Third, the coming man is to work miracles and do great signs and wonders. Paul says, "whose coming is after the working of Satan with all power and signs and lying wonders."

Fourth. The coming man is described as being divine, meek and lowly. Paul says, "with all deceivableness of unrighteousness."

Lastly, the coming man is to arrive soon. Soon we expect the Savior, and Paul declares, "that wicked," the Lord "shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming."

With all this before us, is it not a legitimate conclusion that the coming man is "the son of perdition?" How necessary that we search well the word, that we be not deceived; for remember the word declares, "his coming is after the working of Satan, etc." How easily then for those not on guard to be deceived and "believe a lie." This wonderful personage will imitate Christ, having great power; like him may disappear at pleasure, work signs and wonders which lie against the truth, and will deceive the masses. Yea, I believe that thousands who now put far away the coming of the Savior, will believe the coming man to be the Christ, and follow after him; persecuting all who declare the Savior nigh, with desperation, because they will not accept him as the true Christ. I pray God to keep all who love his appearing from the hour of temptation, for it surely will come.

The Meek Inherit the Earth.

The following was published in the N. E. Puritan, a leading Congregational paper.

This is but a fair sample of the way some of the plainest passages of the Bible are disposed of by those who do not believe God means just what he has said. They do not believe that the meek are to inherit the earth, in fact, any part of it, but they believe that they will inherit heaven above the earth. Now as there is no promise in the Bible that the meek or the saints will ever inherit heaven above, those who believe the sentiment below, believe what the Bible does not say, and reject what it does say. This is true, not only of this passage, but of nearly every promise in the Bible where the future state is referred to.

For our part, we are satisfied with the word of the Lord as we find it. We think that those who endorse this interpretation, would have resorted to some other, had Jesus said the meek shall inherit the Moon.

J. S. WHITE.

"THE MEEK SHALL INHERIT THE EARTH."—A correspondent of the N. E. Puritan mentions an individual who had been not a little perplexed with the question, How shall the meek inherit the earth? The following incident solved all his doubts, by exhibiting before him an instance of the complete fulfillment of the promise:—

"While musing on the subject, he had occasion one day to go near a low and mechanically wretched dwelling, from within which were audible affecting tones of earnest adoration. Curious and impressed, he listened, and at the same time, through some chink, beheld the suppliant. There, scantily appareled, and in a room nearly destitute of furniture, an elderly woman sat, with her repast in her hand; a hard crust and some water. It was over this store her devotion grew eloquent. She could not partake of it till her full heart had relieved itself in acknowledgment to God. With uplifted, tearful eyes, she said, 'What, Lord! all this, and heaven too!'"

For the Crisis.

When Will the Morning Come?

Earth may seem bright and fair, and her sons and daughters seem gay and happy, yet this longing question rises in the heart of many a wanderer o'er her face,—"When shall come the morning," that shall end my night of grief and gloom? There are few hearts in this world of ours so free from grief or care, that the longing does not arise for an end to the grief, the sadness, and the tears, that fall to the lot of humanity in its present condition. The heart oft asks when sadness rests with the bitter weariness that sadness brings, is there no end to this? is there no morning to this night?

"When shall the morning come?" says the lonely watcher, as she wearily weeps o'er buried hopes and faded joys; bright may have been her heart's sky once, and the noonday of joy been hers, but now all is changed. Loved ones which, made life beautiful, have passed away, and in the silent grave-yard, the last resting place of the dearest of earth's treasures may be seen. Fond hopes so bright, so beautiful, are faded ere they bloomed, leaving the weary heart so sad and lone that the cry goes forth like a wail, when shall it end?

"When shall the morning come?" says the man of earth mingling in its busy strife, with care resting on his heart, and tracing its lines on his brow. He has rushed into the hot battle of life, has wandered here and there in search of happiness and pleasure, and mingled in all its scenes, hoping to be satisfied, but sad and weary he pauses in his busy career, and says, is there no brighter scene than this?

Says the aged man with the last moments of his life passing away, "When will the morning come?" His life's work is done, he has proved life, proved that its joys are mingled with sorrows, that its brightest flowers fade first, and its fairest blessings pass soonest away; and as he stands on the verge of the grave, he asks, is there no other joy, than in this life of change?

"When shall the morning come?" says the christian. Long he may have wandered through life's blessings and sorrows; its joys and tears have alike passed over him, but amid it all he has kept his heart and life in his Master's, and longs for a brighter and unclouded scene where all is fair.

Is there no answer to the question? no message to the heart that asks it? There is! There shall be a morning! He who "changeth not" hath spoken it, and it shall be given—an eternal morning, bright and cloudless, never to pass away; no parting there from those we love; no tears there; no sin, with its blighting curse; no fading hopes or flowers; no gloom or sadness; no weary, unsatisfied hearts: all in that morning shall be perfect, entire and eternal.

"For God shall be there!"

MARY E. SWEETLAND.

Springfield, Mass.

"Come to Jesus!"

Sinner, list! a voice is speaking
In sweet tones of love to thee,
Through thy soul's deep silence breaking
With its holy melody,
And each tuneful chord is waking
With its echoes, "Lovest thou me?"

Hear those accents sweetly pleading,
As they whisper, "Come to me;"
Mark that side, now freshly bleeding,
See how truly, earnestly,
That one voice is interceding
For thy soul. 'Tis all for thee.

Thou hast hitherto neglected,
In thy deep iniquity,
That sweet voice, else ne'er reflected
Who it was thus spake to thee;
Surely thou hast oft suspected
It was he who died for thee.

Mark him in his holy calling,
Kneeling in Gethsemane;
Note the sorrow so appalling
Which he suffered there for thee,
Till his sweat like blood was falling
From his brow—and all for thee!

Can'st thou now, that cross reviewing,
Watch his silent agony?
See that saving blood imbuing
With its hue th' accursed tree?
By thy sins each pang renewing,
When those pangs are all for thee?

Hear that cry so agonizing,
"Why hast thou forsaken me?"
Heed that prayer so sympathizing,
"Lord, forgive, they know not me!"
See him whom thou art despising,
Suffering, dying thus for thee.

Come to Jesus! Come believing,
Come in true humility;
Jesus loves to be receiving
Sinners such as thou must be.
Come to Jesus—he forgiving
Waits to pardon all like thee.

"All ye are Brethren."

"Did you notice that new family at church last Sabbath, Mrs. Ellis?" said her friend, Mrs. Brown, as they were slowly walking down the street together.

"Yes—who are they?"

"Their name is Merwyn—they have just moved out from the city, and intend joining our church, I understand; of course, they are wealthy, as they have bought the "Carlton Place."

"Indeed!" said Mrs. Ellis, "I am delighted to hear that we are to have such an addition—how it will encourage our good pastor's heart to have such people join us! We must call on them immediately."

"Let us go now," said Mrs. Brown—and, suiting the action to the word, they turned off from their original destination, and soon reached and entered the spacious and beautifully arranged grounds of the new comer. "What a lovely place!" exclaimed Mrs. Ellis, as they stood a moment, after ringing the bell; "one ought to be very happy here!"

At this instant the door opened, and the ladies were ushered into an elegant apartment, where, at the time, were seated two ladies. One of them, a tall, dignified, serene-faced woman, arose to receive them, as the attendant announced their names, and gave them a cordial greeting.

"Of course, you are acquainted with this lady," said she, turning to the quiet figure at her side—"Mrs. Morris."

The ladies gave a slight, involuntary start of surprise, and then acknowledged the introduction in the coolest manner, as if to one almost beneath their notice. Mrs. Merwin looked surprised, but in a moment she took in the whole scene. These were, doubtless, some of the aristocratic members of the church, and the poor, but devoted christian sister, was not in their circle at all. Of course, her attentions were politely devoted to the new callers for a few moments—but when Mrs. Morris, as soon as possible, arose to take leave, wishing to slip quietly out, she arose too, and in the kindest manner, in which naught of condescension mingled, thanked her for her call, and begged her to repeat it.

While this was going on, the two ladies exchanged glances, and as soon as Mrs. Merwin was again seated, Mrs. Brown remarked,

"You may have thought it strange that we should not know one of our own church members, but I assure you, we are obliged to maintain distinctions in the country, as well as in the city. We flatter ourselves that we can boast as select and refined society in our little village, as can be found anywhere."

"Of course," said Mrs. Ellis, taking up the defence, "we esteem Mrs. Morris as a good woman, but we were amazed at her presumption in venturing to impose herself upon you as one of 'our ladies'—I assure you she is very poor, and labors hard to support herself and family."

"I am truly glad, ladies," answered Mrs. M., "to find my own private judgment so ably supported. Mrs. Morris struck me as a singularly interesting woman. One so delicate must indeed possess great energy to perform the labor she does. I never, I think, was more interested than in her remarks and prayers at the female prayer-meeting, this afternoon. I was, therefore, much pleased to find that she lived on the same street as myself, and gladly availed myself of her company home, and then, at my urgent request, she came in with me. I trust if I am ever called to pass through the trials which she has, I may have the same rich grace to sustain me under them, which she has experienced."

The two callers looked rather confused at these remarks of the rich and elegant woman, so far superior to themselves in worldly advantages; and though she with great politeness, endeavored to relieve their embarassment, and render the call agreeable, they soon arose to leave.

"I am truly obliged for this early welcome," said Mrs. M., "especially since finding that you are members of the church which I hope soon to join. There is nothing, I believe, I prize so highly as christian society. Those who are united in the bonds of Christ's love, cannot be strangers to each other."

The ladies now bid adieu, and walked down the avenue in silence. "Was there ever such a queer woman?" exclaimed Mrs. Brown, as they turned the corner, and were out of all possible hearing.

There were tears in her companion's eyes, and a tremor in her voice, as she answered, "I think she has the right of it, Mary. Did we not feel thus in the days of our first love? I feel I have allowed worldliness to get too much power over me, and that I have almost lost my religious enjoyment. I am determined to try to retrace my steps, and mingle again in that society, where our Savior's presence is sure to be. I thank God for her faithfulness, and that one so capable of doing good has come among us. 'One is your Master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren.'"—N. Y. Chronicle.

Courtesy.

The innumerable fine and delicate threads which true courtesy weaves, as woof and warp, constitute the strength of the social fabric. Courtesy is love embodied, and rendered active and visible; and love attracts into union and oneness, as when contiguous water drops rush into mutual bosoms and form river and lake. Conventional observances may drive men into combinations, as external hoops force the staves to become the barrel and the cask. But the drawings of love will attract, even through impediment and barrier, like the magnetic influence that operates through the vessel upon the mimic floating swan.

Courtesy is essentially different from politeness, etiquette, manners. These may become mere marks of supreme selfishness and hatred; and they may be only exhibitions for praise and profit. Courtesy has, indeed, no special form or manner, and yet never wars with suitable and decorous conventionalisms. Courtesy is inherent, and ever the same; but forms of politeness are shaped by accident; hence the etiquette now reigning may be dethroned in time, and the politeness of to-day become rudeness or vulgarity.

Courtesy cannot be taught or learned; it cannot be put on or laid aside. Courtesy is felt—mere politeness seen. The former wins love—the latter respect. The one bows gracefully and profoundly; the other can lay down a life. To become polite, read Chesterfield; to become courteous, read the Bible. Abraham, the father of the faithful, and Paul, the Apostle of the Gentiles, bowed indeed with courtly grace, respectfully; but it was their courtesy, manifest in look, word, tone, manner, that revealed their heart love, and melted other hearts.

The writer was passing once along a narrow pavement. A young man, in coarse apparel, at our approach, stepped aside, with great alacrity, and into the mud edging the path. He did not bow, he waved no hand, he moved without grace, and yet the whole was evident courtesy.

After passing, the thought arose, should we not acknowledge and thank for behavior so unusual in a young man in this brazen age. We went back. Offering our hand, we said, "Young man, shake hands with me!" "Certainly, sir, but why do you wish it?" "Because you are a kind-hearted fellow, and a true gentleman; you gave all the path to me!" "Sir, I would step into the gutter for an elderly man!" "God bless you, young man! May you become a believer in our Lord Jesus Christ, whose servant I profess myself; and may we meet in heaven, if we never meet on earth!"

Tears stood in the eyes of both; and when we said good-by, our hands seemed to be a love-tie binding our hearts; and we were, at that moment, improved as citizens and republicans, and without becoming red, black, or of any other political color.

Reader! "Be courteous?"—Christian Intelligencer.

One Brick Wrong.

Workmen were recently building a large brick tower, which was to be carried up very high. The architect and the foreman both charged the masons to lay each brick with the greatest exactness, especially the first courses, which were to sustain all the rest. However, in laying a corner, by accident or carelessness, one brick was set very little out of line. The work went on without its being noticed, but as each course of bricks was kept in line with those already laid, the tower was not put up exactly straight, and the higher they built the more insecure it became. One day, when the tower had been carried up about fifty feet, there was heard a tremendous crash. The building had fallen, burying the men in the ruins. All the previous work was lost, the materials wasted, and worse still, valuable lives were sacrificed, and all from one brick laid wrong at the start. The workman at fault in this matter little thought how much mischief he was making for the future. Do you ever think what ruin may come of one bad habit, one brick laid wrong, while you are now building a character for life? Remember, in youth the foundation is laid. See to it that all is kept STRAIGHT.

The First Deception.

When I was a boy, and attended school, I was like a great many other boys—more inclined to play and read story-books than I was to study my lessons; it was a rule at our school to carry a book home every night and study the lesson for the following day; but I would avoid this by some deception; and, of course, the next morning my recitation would be very imperfect.

One morning I awoke quite early, and I remembered that we were to have a very difficult lesson on that morning, and I had neglected it that I might join in a game of foot-ball. It was too late then to commit it to memory, and I felt ashamed to go to school without it, for I knew that I should be punished, and be obliged to remain in it at recess to make up the lesson. I did not want to play truant, for I was fearful of detection; so I went to my father and feigned a headache, and pleaded that I might remain at home that day. The wish was granted, and for a moment I felt relieved, but at breakfast or dinner I was not allowed to eat anything; I was obliged to remain in doors all day, although the sun was shining brightly out of doors, and, with a conscience restless and reproving me all the time, I passed a wretched day.

My father, always kind and attentive to his children, would lay his hand upon my head and pity me, so that my heart ached when I thought how wickedly I was deceiving him. The day passed, and I went early to bed; but I could not sleep. I had told my father a lie, and the thought of it lay like a weight upon my heart. I slept a little, but it was a troubled and unhappy sleep. When I arose in the morning I went to my father and, with tearful eyes, confessed my deception. He was surprised and grieved. I stood before him with head hung down, feeling thoroughly ashamed. I asked forgiveness of him, and it was granted. I was then told to go to school and tell the teacher of my fault, and promise never to attempt such a wrong again.

I have grown a man since then, but the memory of that error is still fresh in my mind. It was the last time I ever attempted to deceive my father. I have no father nor mother now; but the lesson which that day I learned will guard me through life from any attempt at deceiving those to whom I am indebted for kindness and love. If any little boy should read this story, let him be mindful and avoid all temptations, which, if yielded to, will cause him in after years many bitter pangs and hearty remorse.—Christian Witness.

Saying Prayers.

"Nellie, do you remember to pray every night?" I asked. "Oh, yes, I always say the Lord's prayer and two others," was the quick reply. "Well, do you pray or only say your prayers?" Nelly's perplexed look asked for an explanation. "You know that it is very easy to get into the habit of saying over a form of words without thinking much of their meaning, that is saying prayers; but when you really pray you think of every word you say, and really wish for what you ask."

"I am afraid I only say my prayers," said Nelly sadly. "Then you have knelt down every night to ask the great God to hear you say a form of words with your lips, while your heart has been thinking of something else. Are you not afraid that you have mocked him?" After a few moments' thought, Nelly said, "I am sure I did not mean to mock God. If I could make a prayer of my own I should have to think of what I say, but I don't know how to do that."

"Have you nothing to thank God for?" "Oh yes, a great many things," she said, for she was a grateful little girl, and had been taught to consider every blessing as the gift of God, often exclaiming, "How good God is to make me happy!"

"Is there nothing you wish to ask God for, if he sees best to give it to you?" "Oh yes, indeed." "Don't you wish to ask God to bless your little friends, and make them Christlike? Have you no faults that you need the help of God's Spirit to overcome? No sin that you wish forgiven for Christ's sake?" "Oh, how much I have to ask from God!" exclaimed Nelly in surprise. "I don't think I shall ever just say my prayers again, I shall pray them; but can't I say the other prayers too?" "I hope you will say them every day of your life, but be careful not to say them with your 'lips only.'"

"And will God be just as willing to hear me as if I were older?" asked Nellie. "The Savior said, 'Suffer little children to come unto me.' Try him, Nelly, by praying from the heart, and see if he is not willing to bless you." Nelly promised to try; and will not all the little boys and girls try with her?

Conceal Nothing.

A little boy not seven years old, in the absence of his parents, carelessly broke a valuable dish. When his father returned at evening, he told him what he had done, said he was very sorry, and would not do so again, and asked his father to forgive him. This his father cheerfully did, and told the child he loved him, and did not mind the loss of the dish, because he had told him the truth about it. The next morning one of the family asked the little boy if he had told his father what he had done the day before. "Oh, yes," said he, "and father forgave me, and I knew he would; for the Bible says, "He that confesseth and forsaketh his sins shall find mercy.""

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county, and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. Miles Grant, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

☞ CANADA SUBSCRIBERS have to pre-pay the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above; i. e., $1 will pay for twenty-three [illegible] Provinces.

I Would be There.

There is a world to which I haste,
A world that's bright and fair,
Beyond this dark and dreary waste,
And oh! I would be there.

I would be there where Jesus is,
To see his lovely face,
And share unutterable bliss
Through triumphs of his grace.

I would be there, where God's own hand
Shall wipe all tears away;
Where in the presence of the Lamb
Is one eternal day.

I would be with the angel band,
'Mid harps of shining gold,
When God's dear saints from every land
Are gathered in one fold.

I would be there, where t ils are o'er,
And sorrows are unknown;
Where joys abide forevermore,
Around th' eternal throne.

I would be there, where loved ones meet,
No more to say farewell,
But, in harmonious accents sweet,
Eternal praises swell. E. M. F.

Reminiscence of the Past.

No. 8.

Under ordinary circumstances, I might have feared a charge of egotism; but from a manifold assurance that aught connected with my checkered experience is eagerly sought after by my friends, I make bold to offer another item in the history of my life. There is no particular moral in the tale, if it do not serve to illustrate the peace which the righteous find in their death. It is said by David, Ps. 73: 4, 5, that the wicked have no bands in their death, neither are they plagued like other men; but their grim stolidity is as little like the placid tranquility of the dying christian as the frigid fixedness of the ice-bound brook is like the summer calm of the mountain lake, which reflects the heaven that throws its tinge upon its bosom. I have seen men die without a hope or without a fear; and they seemed to sink into the dark slumber of the grave as unconcerned as if they expected to behold the light of day to-morrow, yet their features bore not the holy stamp of prospective happiness which the countenances of those "who die in the Lord" do bear,

Ere yet decay's effacing fingers
Have swept the lines where beauty lingers.

In the lineaments of those who have been cut off by violence, there is a great difference. There is a sad solemnity about the features of the drowned, an almost smiling cast upon those who have been shot dead, but oh, what a look of poignancy and fierceness is there about the brow and glazed, staring eye of him who has fallen by the sword, bayonet, or boarding pike! And yet it is all death—deep, dark, unconscious death!

Among the very welcome visitors at my father's house, was the widow of a Captain Young. Her husband and son perished in a gale of wind,—and she, stricken in her pride and prosperity, had learned to look for help to the Mighty, and she found in him a friend dearer than all kindred, and a physician whose balm healeth the deepest wound. I remember her very well, and how often she has taken my hand in hers and questioned me about my Hopes. Many and many a time I felt uneasy when she looked steadfastly at me, not because there was any piercing inquiry about her looks, but her eye seemed so calm and serene that I thought my very thoughts must be reflected in it. Yet I have often sidled up to her; and half-accusing, half-excusing myself,—have been reproved, comforted and encouraged. I have shown her the ground-plan of some of my most magnificent castles, which, based upon the rainbow of hope, disappeared before the black squall of bitter experience. Often she has laughed with me, and laughed at me, as I have used every means to beguile her thoughts from the heavy grief which was pressing her down to the earth.

Her dwelling was in a cottage midway up a steep acclivity which overlooked the sea, and where she could daily look upon the serrated ledge of rocks where all her earthly hopes were shipwrecked. My mother drew her as much as possible from her sequestered dwelling, and as her health grew more infirm, she more gladly shrank from the searching sea breeze, and finally became an almost constant guest at our house. She could sing beautifully, but did not know how to play on any instrument.

There was an organ in the house; but since my sister's marriage there was no one to awaken its tones save an occasional visitor who might choose to open its solemn sound. I had a good ear, and fair untutored voice, and the reason why I do not understand music is, that I had not the patience to learn, but essayed to become a master without becoming a pupil. I undertook to learn the violin; but after setting the dentals of the house on edge for a week, I abandoned it. I studied the jewsharp under the gardener, and congratulated myself on my success, until the performance of a chimney sweep put me in the shade, when I laid it aside also. My next effort was on a flute, and there I rested. With great industry I learned (of myself) to play the Old Hundredth, the National Anthem, some patriotic and some ultra Protestant tunes. I took that flute to sea, and subsequently performed with more eclat on board than ever I did ashore.

The face of the widow grew paler, save the small, bright spot of red which burned on either cheek, and her dark eye glittered, and her breath grew short and shorter, and she knew that she must shortly die. Death had to her no terrors; for she could say of Him, who, jealous of his own, prostrated the idolatrous props and made her lean upon his arm,—"Though I walk through the valley and shadow of death yet I will fear no evil, for thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff they comfort me."

Although the destroyer was making hasty strides to seize his victim, we all thought him farther off than he proved to be. My mother and I paid the invalid a visit with the intention of inducing her to change her quarters to a more genial location; but she shook her head, and said she wished to remain where she could see the waves and hear their voices as they sung their requium to their unnumbered dead.

We three sat upon the sofa, in her little parlor that looked upon the restless sea below. She said she felt pretty well, and I ventured a suggestion that there was a possibility that she might yet recover, when she said, "I do not wish it—my time is almost come. My dear friend, (to mother) and you, Fred, join me in singing my favorite hymn:"

"There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Emmanuel's veins;
And sinners plunged beneath that flood,
Lose all their guilty stains."

Never did I hear her voice ring out with such a glorious melody, clear, full-toned and unfaltering, till she came to the verse,

"Ere since by faith I saw the stream,
Thy healing wounds supply,
Redeeming love has been my theme,
And shall be till I die."

Her soul seemed to gush forth upon the last line. Her head sank forward upon her breast, and when we raised her gently up, the last smile of recognition was fading from her lips, and laying her wasted form upon the couch, we knelt beside the corpse and prayed that we might live the life of the righteous, that our last end might be like hers. I said we, when indeed I was too much frightened to do much of anything but tremble, while through the deep silence of that chamber of death, there seemed to peal the loud and solemn admonition—"Be ye also ready!"

JNO. F. COTTON.

P. S. It was to remove a barrier out of the way of many that I undertook the task of preparing a tract for free distribution among seamen, that they might be also ready. There was a vast quantity of religious material placed before them; but the food was so strongly impregnated with brimstone that the majority of gorges rose at it, and they would none of it. The tract is almost finished, and would have been altogether, but for the severe illness of my wife, which has occupied a large portion of my spare hours for the last four weeks.

I hope and believe that the little messenger will do much good in revealing some of the great Bible facts, which have been concealed or distorted to the serious prejudice of man's salvation. I want about thirty dollars yet to give the "Light-Ship" to our gallant tars. I have a small, a very small library, and I shall part with almost every book in it if necessary to raise that money. But I do not believe such a sacrifice will be needed; for there is plenty of money unemployed among us to do ten times as much, and the will to do is also with us.

Since my last notice, I have received one dollar each from E. Cleaves, of Boston, T. Hardy, Jr., Salem, I. J. Stedman, of Oakfield, N. Y., and fifty cts. from Bro. Rich of New Bedford. Move, brethren and sisters, move, and also pray that a rich and plenteous harvest may be produced from the precious seed we scatter for the Lord. Yours faithfully, J. F. C.

TEXT.—"The rich man also died, and was buried; and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom."—Lk. 16: 22, 23.

(Concluded.)

Finally. Admitting this to be a parable, the query may suggest itself—What is its signification?

To answer this we shall by no means endeavor to make this parable "go on all fours." Its intention is obvious. It is one of the series of parables which Jesus spake to the "Pharisees and scribes," justifying himself from the charge which they preferred against him—"This man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them." This Jesus did not deny, but exhibited the propriety of his conduct, and the design of his mission by this series of parables.

In the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, he also rebukes their rigid sectarianism, and points out their deficiency in the grand basis principle of Scripture christian benevolence, clearly illustrating their own treatment of the very class which they charged him with receiving, that is, sinners, or those out of their communion; teaching them that by pursuing this course—the exclusion of every one except their own nation—they were constantly violating the christian hospitality so clearly enjoined in the Scriptures; opposing the purpose of God which he proposed and in the prophets taught most clearly; "That the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his (God's) promise in Christ by the gospel."—Eph. 3: 6; Rom. 16: 25, 26; 1 Pet. 1: 10–12.

In thus explicitly illustrating their course of conduct, Jesus also teaches them, if they would be taught; see Acts 28: 25–28; and not prove it true, that "their eyes have they closed, lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their hearts, and should be converted, and I should heal them;" that to continue in the course that they were then pursuing, would result in the most complete overthrow of their ecclesiastical polity, subjecting them to the most afflicting and humiliating condition, and that then they would be earnestly desirous to secure favors from the very classes that then they were so officiously excluding from their intercourse and communion; and for his reception of whom they had entered this complaint against him (Jesus)—"This man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them."

The terms in this parable which evidently point to this application are these:—"Father Abraham."—John 8: 39. "They (the scribes and Pharisees, see verses 3, 13) answered and said unto him, Abraham is our father."

The next term is "son." This, of course, was an appropriate term by which to designate his children, and an acknowledgement of paternal relation to the rich man.

Thirdly. The reference to Moses and the prophets, in which the Jewish race almost unanimously believe; all at any rate who are not infidels indeed; while any reference to the personal teaching of Jesus Christ and the apostles, although of equal authority to a Gentile, would have been entirely without point or success.

Fourthly. The term "dogs," expressive of a relation, was equally appropriate. Observe Matt. 15: 26, 27; "It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it to dogs." The Gentiles were thus reputed by the Jews. See Dr. Clarke on Matt. 15: 26. Do please to compare also Matt. 15: 27; "Yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their Master's table," with Lk. 16: 21; "And desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table." How perfect the comparison, and how evident that they refer to the same thing.

Fifthly. Now the relation which the whole record of Lk. 16: 19–31 necessarily sustains to the four preceding prominent points, actually demonstrates that the whole parable is to be correctly, and only developed, by an application of its teaching to the ecclesiastical relation of both Jews and Gentiles to the purpose of God. This accords with the true definition of a parable: "A representation of any matter accommodated in the way of similitude to the real subject, in order to delineate its different parts with the greater force and perspicuity;" and also with an excellent rule given for their interpretation, by Maimonides, in his Moreh Nevochim: "Fix it as a principle," says he, "to attach yourself to the grand object of the parable, without attempting to make a particular application of all the circumstances and terms which it comprehends."—Quoted from Dr. Clarke's Com., vol. 1, pp. 153, 155. This should govern us in our explanation of, and preaching on, the Scripture parables.

It must be apparent to the reader that the parable of the rich man and Lazarus is but the accommodation of the fiction of the Talmud of Babylon, and also of Josephus' account of hades, given above, both of which were exactly adapted by our Savior to illustrate the folly of the Scribes and Pharisees in preferring the charge against himself which they did, and expose the consequences of their exclusiveness of all but themselves from the promises of God, when God had purposed otherwise. Nothing certainly can be more fictitious than Josephus' account of hades, which has been given above. In the construction of his parable from the above records, our Lord Jesus Christ has added such points as were essential to the completion of the sense, and thereby he fully illustrated to the Pharisees their overthrow, as also its cause and consequence. O let us believe God; "yea, let God be true, but every man a liar," rather than array parabolical teaching against the plain "thus saith the Lord."

Dear reader, carefully and critically examine the above argument. Please to come to it uninfluenced by the creeds, and without prejudice or prepossession in favor of popular sentiments, willing to believe what is true at the sacrifice of worldly honor. Read John 5: 44. May God, who has sown light for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart, "guide our feet into the way of peace," by an intelligent obedience to his precious word; and may we become the inheritors of future glory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Seventh Day.

"For he spake in a certain place of the seventh day on this wise, and God did rest the seventh day from all his works."—heb. 4: 4. "And in this place again, (He speaketh of the seventh day;) if they shall enter into MY REST."—(Verse 5.) "Again, he limiteth a certain day, saying in David, to-day, after so long a time; as it is said, to-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts."—(Verse 7.)

One of two positions must be taken with regard to the above scriptures, viz.: either the apostle Paul is enforcing the observance of the seventh day according to the letter of the law; or else he speaks of it as only "a shadow of things to come;" in other words as a type. That the first position is not the true one is evident; for they kept the letter of the seventh day under Moses and Joshua; yet they did not, and could not, enter into that rest, which Jehovah calls emphatically "MY REST."

But some will say that "unbelievers" only were denied entrance into that rest; while "believers" entered in under Caleb and Joshua and possessed it. The apostle however denies this position by saying that "if Joshua had given them rest, then he would not afterward have spoken of another day;" but as he did afterward speak of another day, the apostle argues that Joshua did not give them that rest, which Jehovah signified when he spake by Moses on this wise;—"And God did rest the seventh day from all his works." "Seeing, therefore, it remaineth that some must enter therein, and they to whom it was first preached entered not in because of unbelief; . . . . there remaineth therefore a rest unto the people of God;" (i. e.) that rest which the seventh day shadowed forth; that rest which Joshua did not and could not give; that rest which Jehovah signified in his oath by the expression "MY REST," remaineth to the people of God.

The same rest is doubtless spoken of by Isaiah 11: 10,—"And in that day [the gospel day] there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek: and HIS REST shall be glorious," (margin, glory.) Again, chap. 28: 11,—"For with stammering lips and another tongue will he speak to this people. To whom he said, this is the rest wherewith ye may cause the weary to rest; and this is the refreshing: yet they would not hear." Still it is said unto us, "He that hath ears to hear let him hear;" and again, whosoever "will not hear that prophet shall be destroyed from among the people;" for he saith, "Come unto me, [not to Moses or Joshua] all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Now if Joshua had given them rest, this doubtless would not have been spoken by him of whom it is said, "The isles shall wait for His law;" and again, "Judah is my Lawgiver," saith the Lord; "for it is evident that our Lord sprang out of Judah." Again, "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a Lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be;" for this is that "Lion of the tribe of Judah," "The root and the offspring of David, the bright and morning star," which our God hath set for "a light to lighten the Gentiles;" who also hath said, "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last." "Blessed are they that do the commandments of him." (Greek text.)

Again, "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock." "For this man was counted worthy of more glory than Moses;" and by as much more as the ministration of the Spirit is more glorious than the ministration of the letter; either that written with ink, or written on tables of stone; by so much more, is the Sabbath or rest of Jesus more glorious than that of Moses; or land of rest given by Joshua, the earthly Canaan with its earthly rest. For if the keeping of those Sabbaths prepared them to enter that earthly rest, the keeping of this shall prepare us to enter the rest that remaineth to the people of God when it shall come. For it is written, "You who are troubled, rest with us; when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God." Let us therefore agonize to enter the strait gate; let us labor to enter into God's Rest; for we which have believed do enter into rest, as he said; and as Jesus said, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." And he that cometh to Jesus must come to learn of him, and he will teach men how to cease from their own works, that they may be found not doing their own ways, finding their own pleasure, or speaking their own words, on one day in seven only; but on every day and every night, that they must bridle their tongues and know that for "every idle word that men shall speak they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment."

Time past must "suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles," and the works of the natural man must cease. All wrath, malice, blasphemy, backbiting, hatred, envy, murder, adultery, witchcraft, variance, emulation, heresies, idolatry, drunkeness, covetousness, all these and many more of man's works must cease; for he that hath entered into his rest, he also hath ceased from his own works as God did from his, (own works) when he rested on the seventh day.

This is the Sabbath magnified and made honorable by Christ; universal in its extent and application, an embodiment of that law which is fulfilled in one word, even in this; "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Man, by nature, is a child of wrath, and is averse to the law of Christ, which is fulfilled in bearing one another's burdens, and loving our enemies. This doctrine to him is a hard saying; and he thinks, and often says, "Who can bear it?" He had much rather observe days, and times, and months, and years, than submit to this yoke; yet he who has worn it, declares that it is easy; and to such as will wear it, "I will give you rest."

Sleep of the Dead.

"And the Lord said unto Moses, Behold, thou shalt sleep with thy fathers."—Deut. 31: 16.

"So man lieth down, and riseth not: till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep."—Job 14: 12.

"And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake."—Dan. 12: 2.

"And the graves were opened, and many the bodies of saints which slept arose."—Matt. 27: 52.

"These things said he: and after that he saith unto them, our friend Lazarus sleepeth; but I go that I may awake him out of sleep."—John 11: 11.

"But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept. . . . Behold I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed."—1 Cor. 15: 20, 51.

"For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."—1 Thess. 4: 14.

"And saying, where is the promise of his coming? for, since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation."—2 Pet. 3: 4.—Bible.

The House of Jacob.

When Jesus Messiah, and those who are elected to fill the holy office of kings and priests, reign over the house of Jacob, for the age or dispensation to come, and which also is called the "day of the Lord," "day of judgment," every individual will be dealt with according to their character.

Jacobs are supplanters. A class of people who know not the judgment of the Lord; have despised his chastening; when they have received the measure they have meted out to others, they have not humbled themselves under the mighty hand of God, nor regarded his word, which says, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay"; but have taken the work into their own hands.

Now there are multitudes of such in the professed church, gathered from among the Gentiles, whom God regards in a different light from those who have never known the Lord. This class, with those of the same character among the scattered Jews, will, according to the light I have received from the Word, constitute the house of Jacob. Though they have been gathered into the church; have cherished high hopes of entering the kingdom; and will cry, "Lord, Lord, open unto us!" they will be repulsed as characters differing from those to whom the promise was given, of reigning with Christ. "Blessed are they who are called to the Marriage Supper of the Lamb." "Blessed and holy is he who hath part in the first resurrection." Such have labored to enter into that rest, have submitted to the righteousness of God, have been crucified with Christ, condemned and killed, and not resisted. E. J. MARDEN.

1 Tim. 5: 24, 25.

"Some men's sins are open beforehand, going before to judgment, and some men they follow after. Likewise also the good works of some are manifest beforehand, and they that are otherwise cannot be hid."

We believe this Scripture has often been misunderstood. It is generally supposed that the righteous are those whose sins go to judgment beforehand, and are pardoned, while the sinner meets his at the judgment.

We think the idea is simply this. Some persons are openly vile; their wickedness is known and read of all men; while others are apparently moral and righteous, and not until that day, when the secrets of all hearts are laid open, will they be seen in their true character.

Likewise the good works of some are manifest in this world; while with others, their alms are in secret, and not until the day of reward comes will they be brought to light. Then, to the secret gift of charity is granted the open reward. M. D. W.

The Kingdom at Hand.

"In those days came John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness of Judea; and saying, repent ye; for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

In examining this text we will notice, first, the fact of his preaching in the wilderness. Why did he preach in the wilderness? Why did he not call together the rulers of the Jews, and proclaim the coming of their Messiah in the temple? He was a Levite, and in accordance with his genealogy, and the peculiar circumstances of his birth, he not only had a perfect right to do so, but had reason to expect that they would believe on him, and gladly hail their coming King. Or if he wished to preach more directly to the common people, why did he not preach in the streets of Jerusalem, where the multitude could hear him without the necessity of going out into the wilderness of Judea? (which was a mountainous region southeast of Jerusalem, a long way from there, or from the Jordan where he subsequently baptized many.) Let us then consider what was the probable cause of his preaching in the wilderness.

First, it is plain, from John 1: 23, he did so in fulfillment of a prophecy in Isa. 40: 3,—"The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God." (Which prophecy was however, only fulfilled in a primary sense to the Jewish nation, for with all his labors, combined with those of his Lord and Master's they failed to get the Jews as a nation to accept of the kingdom offered them; the prophecy therefore, in its broad literal sense, remains yet to be fulfilled.)

Secondly. He preached in the wilderness, figurative of the church of the last days. Hosea 2: 14.—"Therefore behold I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderness and speak comfortably unto her; and I will give her vineyards from thence, (compare also Isa. 35:—"The wilderness and solitary place shall be glad for them, and the desert shall bud and blossom as the rose,") and the valley of Achor for a door of hope." This refers to the place where Joshua cleansed the camp of Israel, and buried the dissembling, covetous, house of Achan, and named it the valley of Achor unto this day. So the church, coming out of mystical Babylon, (Rev. 18: 4,) will then dwell alone, shall bury her covetousness and Babylonish garments, and [illegible] together in the bonds of faith and love, become a people prepared for the coming of her Lord.

That the prophet has reference to the Gentile church, into which the house of Israel [illegible] is evident from the last verse and, confirmed [illegible]—"And I will sow her [illegible] in the earth; and I will have mercy upon her that hath not obtained mercy; and I will say to them which were not my people, thou art my people, and they shall say, thou art my God."

Again, he preached in the wilderness that he might get the common class away from the immediate influence of the proud theology of rulers and Rabbis, who, like a similar class in these days, held the common people in Egyptian bondage; who fed themselves and not the flock; and have turned the truth of God into fables. They also claimed all the religion and sanctity of the age; yet John boldly denounced them as a generation of vipers, and demanded of them fruits meet for repentance. (Luke 3: 8.)

Let us next inquire into the nature of the kingdom offered to the Jews, and proclaimed ready to be set up. That it was a literal kingdom, and that Christ offered himself to them as a literal king until after they rejected him, is evident from all the four gospels, which testify that in fulfillment of the prophecy (Zech. 9: 9,) he rode into Jerusalem as king, [illegible] riding upon an ass; and assumed a temporary authority in the temple. It is also plain from Matt. 10: 5, and onward:—"These twelve, Jesus sent forth and commanded them saying, Go not in the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not. But go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel; and as ye go, preach, saying, the kingdom of heaven is at hand." 23d verse:—"But when they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another: for verily I say unto you, ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel till the Son of man be come." As their preaching here is confined to the cities of Israel, his coming here referred to is his riding into Jerusalem as their king; for immediately after, (Matt. 21: 23), he tells them the kingdom shall be taken from them and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof; and no more speaks of his kingdom at hand, but far in the future.

The foregoing view also agrees with Luke 17: 20,—"And when he was demanded of the Pharisees, when the kingdom of God should come, he answered them and said, the kingdom of God cometh not with observation, neither shall they say, Lo here! or Lo there! for behold the kingdom of God is within you." Is within your acceptance, you need not look about for any supernatural manifestation, for behold your King is among you, in your midst, and is about to offer himself to you as such; not in the gorgeous manner you expect him, but meek and lowly, as predicted by your prophets. And the Savior, knowing they would reject him for his humility, directly after tells his disciples (not the Pharisees) of a future coming as the lightning; and tells them that generation would reject him; and in consequence of which, he gives them to understand from verse 22d, that his coming he is about to explain to them was in the dim future, beyond their natural lives.

From the foregoing, although summed up in few words, I feel bold to affirm, that the kingdom preached to the Jews was a literal kingdom; and that they understood it as such is plain from John 11: 48,—"If we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him; and the Romans shall come, and take away both our place and nation." What consistency would there be in this expression, if they did not understand that the kingdom preached was a literal one, and designed to oppose the Roman government under which they lived?

But it may be asked as an objection, did not Christ imply a submission to the Romans in the case of the tribute money, Luke 20: 25? I answer, he probably did, but in every case (and it is recorded in three of the Gospels) it was after his offering himself as their king and rejecting them as the subjects of his kingdom. He had only proclaimed himself their king in parables, and in fulfilling a plain prophecy, and giving them to understand the kingdom was within them, to accept or refuse, yet given in such obscure words that it was impossible to make evident of them; [illegible] after scornfully rejecting him, and seeking to make him individually amenable to the Roman government for treason, they thought they had hit on a plan to make Him commit himself; which was to send their [illegible] [illegible]

I Would be There.

There is a world to which I haste,
A world that's bright and fair,
Beyond this dark and dreary waste,
And oh! I would be there.

I would be there where Jesus is,
To see his lovely face,
And share unutterable bliss
Through triumphs of his grace.

I would be there, where God's own hand
Shall wipe all tears away;
Where in the presence of the Lamb
Is one eternal day.

I would be with the angel band,
'Mid harps of shining gold,
When God's dear saints from every land
Are gathered in one fold.

I would be there, where toils are o'er,
And sorrows are unknown;
Where joys abide forevermore,
Around th' eternal throne.

I would be there, where loved ones meet,
No more to say farewell,
But, in harmonious accents sweet,
Eternal praises swell. E. M. F.

Reminiscence of the Past.

No. 8.

Under ordinary circumstances, I might have feared a charge of egotism; but from a manifold assurance that aught connected with my checkered experience is eagerly sought after by my friends, I make bold to offer another item in the history of my life. There is no particular moral in the tale, if it do not serve to illustrate the peace which the righteous find in their death. It is said by David, Ps. 73 : 4, 5, that the wicked have no bands in their death, neither are they plagued like other men; but their grim stolidity is as little like the placid tranquility of the dying christian as the frigid fixedness of the ice-bound brook is like the summer calm of the mountain lake, which reflects the heaven that throws its tinge upon its bosom. I have seen men die without a hope or without a fear; and they seemed to sink into the dark slumber of the grave as unconcerned as if they expected to behold the light of day to-morrow, yet their features bore not the holy stamp of prospective happiness which the countenances of those "who die in the Lord" do bear,

Ere yet decay's effacing fingers
Have swept the lines where beauty lingers.

In the lineaments of those who have been cut off by violence, there is a great difference. There is a sad solemnity about the features of the drowned, an almost smiling cast upon those who have been shot dead, but oh, what a look of poignancy and fierceness is there about the brow and glazed, staring eye of him who has fallen by the sword, bayonet, or boarding pike! And yet it is all death—deep, dark, unconscious death!

Among the very welcome visitors at my father's house, was the widow of a Captain Young. Her husband and son perished in a gale of wind,—and she, stricken in her pride and prosperity, had learned to look for help to the Mighty, and she found in him a friend dearer than all kindred, and a physician whose balm healeth the deepest wound. I remember her very well, and how often she has taken my hand in hers and questioned me about my Hopes. Many and many a time I felt uneasy when she looked steadfastly at me, not because there was any piercing inquiry about her looks, but her eye seemed so calm and serene that I thought my very thoughts must be reflected in it. Yet I have often sidled up to her, and half-accusing, half-excusing myself,—have been reproved, comforted and encouraged. I have shown her the ground-plan of some of my most magnificent castles, which, based upon the rainbow of hope, disappeared before the black squall of bitter experience. Often she has laughed with me, and laughed at me, as I have used every means to beguile her thoughts from the heavy grief which was pressing her down to the earth.

Her dwelling was in a cottage midway up a steep acclivity which overlooked the sea, and where she could daily look upon the serrated ledge of rocks where all her earthly hopes were shipwrecked. My mother drew her as much as possible from her sequestered dwelling, and as her health grew more infirm, she more gladly shrunk from the searching sea breeze, and finally became an almost constant guest at our house. She could sing beautifully, but did not know how to play on any instrument.

There was an organ in the house; but since my sister's marriage there was no one to awaken its tones save an occasional visitor who might choose to open its solemn sound. I had a good ear, and fair untutored voice, and the reason why I do not understand music is, that I had not the patience to learn, but essayed to become a master without becoming a pupil. I undertook to learn the violin; but after setting the dentals of the house on edge for a week, I abandoned it. I studied the jews-harp under the gardener, and congratulated myself on my success, until the performance of a chimney sweep put me in the shade, when I laid it aside also. My next effort was on a flute, and there I rested. With great industry I learned (of myself) to play the Old Hundredth, the National Anthem, some patriotic and some ultra Protestant tunes. I took that flute to sea, and subsequently performed with more eclat on board than ever I did ashore.

The face of the widow grew paler, save the small, bright spot of red which burned on either cheek, and her dark eye glittered, and her breath grew short and shorter, and she knew that she must shortly die. Death had to her no terrors; for she could say of Him, who, jealous of his own, prostrated the idolatrous props and made her lean upon his arm,—"Though I walk through the valley and shadow of death yet I will fear no evil, for thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff they comfort me."

Although the destroyer was making hasty strides to seize his victim, we all thought him farther off than he proved to be. My mother and I paid the invalid a visit with the intention of inducing her to change her quarters to a more genial location; but she shook her head, and said she wished to remain where she could see the waves and hear their voices as they sung their requium to their unnumbered dead.

We three sat upon the sofa, in her little parlor that looked upon the restless sea below. She said she felt pretty well, and I ventured a suggestion that there was a possibility that she might yet recover, when she said, "I do not wish it—my time is almost come. My dear friend, (to mother) and you, Fred, join me in singing my favorite hymn:"

"There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Emmanuel's veins;
And sinners plunged beneath that flood,
Lose all their guilty stains."

Never did I hear her voice ring out with such a glorious melody, clear, full-toned and unfaltering, till she came to the verse,

"Ere since by faith I saw the stream,
Thy healing wounds supply,
Redeeming love has been my theme,
And shall be till I die."

Her soul seemed to gush forth upon the last line. Her head sank forward upon her breast, and when we raised her gently up, the last smile of recognition was fading from her lips, and laying her wasted form upon the couch, we knelt beside the corpse and prayed that we might live the life of the righteous, that our last end might be like hers. I said we, when indeed I was too much frightened to do much of anything but tremble, while through the deep silence of that chamber of death, there seemed to peal the loud and solemn admonition—"Be ye also ready!"

JNO. F. COTTON.

P. S. It was to remove a barrier out of the way of many that I undertook the task of preparing a tract for free distribution among seamen, that they might be also ready. There was a vast quantity of religious material placed before them; but the food was so strongly impregnated with brimstone that the majority of gorges rose at it, and they would none of it. The tract is almost finished, and would have been altogether, but for the severe illness of my wife, which has occupied a large portion of my spare hours for the last four weeks.

I hope and believe that the little messenger will do much good in revealing some of the great Bible facts, which have been concealed or distorted to the serious prejudice of man's salvation. I want about thirty dollars yet to give the "Light-Ship" to our gallant tars. I have a small, a very small library, and I shall part with almost every book in it if necessary to raise that money. But I do not believe such a sacrifice will be needed; for there is plenty of money unemployed among us to do ten times as much, and the will to do is also with us.

Since my last notice, I have received one dollar each from E. Cleaves, of Boston, T. Hardy, Jr., Salem, I. J. Stedman, of Oakfield, N. Y., and fifty cts. from Bro. Rich of New Bedford. Move, brethren and sisters, move, and also pray that a rich and plenteous harvest may be produced from the precious seed we scatter for the Lord. Yours faithfully, J. F. C.

The Rich Man and Lazarus.

BY J. HOWELL.

No. 6

TEXT.—"The rich man also died, and was buried; and in hell he lifted up his eyes, being in torments, and seeth Abraham afar off, and Lazarus in his bosom."—Lk. 16: 22, 23.

(Concluded.)

Finally. Admitting this to be a parable, the query may suggest itself—What is its signification?

To answer this we shall by no means endeavor to make this parable "go on all fours." Its intention is obvious. It is one of the series of parables which Jesus spake to the "Pharisees and scribes," justifying himself from the charge which they preferred against him—"This man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them." This Jesus did not deny, but exhibited the propriety of his conduct, and the design of his mission by this series of parables.

In the parable of the rich man and Lazarus, he also rebukes their rigid sectarianism, and points out their deficiency in the grand basis principle of Scripture christian benevolence, clearly illustrating their own treatment of the very class which they charged him with receiving, that is, sinners, or those out of their communion; teaching them that by pursuing this course—the exclusion of every one except their own nation—they were constantly violating the christian hospitality so clearly enjoined in the Scriptures; opposing the purpose of God which he proposed and in the prophets taught most clearly; "That the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his (God's) promise in Christ by the gospel."—Eph. 3 : 6, Rom. 16 : 25, 26; 1 Pet. 1 : 10–12.

In thus explicitly illustrating their course of conduct, Jesus also teaches them, if they would be taught; see Acts 28 : 25–28; and not prove it true, that "their eyes have they closed, lest they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their hearts, and should be converted, and I should heal them;" that to continue in the course that they were then pursuing, would result in the most complete overthrow of their ecclesiastical polity, subjecting them to the most afflicting and humiliating condition, and that then they would be earnestly desirous to secure favors from the very classes that then they were so officiously excluding from their intercourse and communion; and for his reception of whom they had entered this complaint against him (Jesus)—"This man receiveth sinners, and eateth with them."

The terms in this parable which evidently point to this application are these:—"Father Abraham."—John 8 : 39. "They (the scribes and Pharisees, see verses 3, 13) answered and said unto him, Abraham is our father."

The next term is "son." This, of course, was an appropriate term by which to designate his children, and an acknowledgement of paternal relation to the rich man.

Thirdly. The reference to Moses and the prophets, in which the Jewish race almost unanimously believe; all at any rate who are not infidels indeed; while any reference to the personal teaching of Jesus Christ and the apostles, although of equal authority to a Gentile, would have been entirely without point or success.

Fourthly. The term "dogs," expressive of a relation, was equally appropriate. Observe Matt. 15 : 26, 27; "It is not meet to take the children's bread, and to cast it to dogs." The Gentiles were thus reputed by the Jews. See Dr. Clarke on Matt. 15 : 26. Do please to compare also Matt. 15 : 27; "Yet the dogs eat of the crumbs which fall from their Master's table," with Lk. 16 : 21; "And desiring to be fed with the crumbs which fell from the rich man's table." How perfect the comparison, and how evident that they refer to the same thing.

Fifthly. Now the relation which the whole record of Lk. 16 : 19–31 necessarily sustains to the four preceding prominent points, actually demonstrates that the whole parable is to be correctly, and only developed, by an application of its teaching to the ecclesiastical relation of both Jews and Gentiles to the purpose of God. This accords with the true definition of a parable: "A representation of any matter accommodated in the way of similitude to the real subject, in order to delineate its different parts with the greater force and perspicuity;" and also with an excellent rule given for their interpretation, by Maimonides, in his Moreh Nevochim: "Fix it as a principle," says he, "to attach yourself to the grand object of the parable, without attempting to make a particular application of all the circumstances and terms which it comprehends."—Quoted from Dr. Clarke's Com., vol. 1, pp. 153, 155. This should govern us in our explanation of, and preaching on, the Scripture parables.

It must be apparent to the reader that the parable of the rich man and Lazarus is but the accommodation of the fiction of the Talmud of Babylon, and also of Josephus' account of hades, given above, both of which were exactly adapted by our Savior to illustrate the folly of the Scribes and Pharisees in preferring the charge against himself which they did, and expose the consequences of their exclusiveness of all but themselves from the promises of God, when God had purposed otherwise. Nothing certainly can be more fictitious than Josephus' account of hades, which has been given above. In the construction of his parable from the above records, our Lord Jesus Christ has added such points as were essential to the completion of the sense, and thereby he fully illustrated to the Pharisees their overthrow, as also its cause and consequence. O let us believe God; "yea, let God be true, but every man a liar," rather than array parabolical teaching against the plain "thus saith the Lord."

Dear reader, carefully and critically examine the above argument. Please to come to it uninfluenced by the creeds, and without prejudice or prepossession in favor of popular sentiments, willing to believe what is true at the sacrifice of worldly honor. Read John 5 : 44. May God, who has sown light for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart, "guide our feet into the way of peace," by an intelligent obedience to his precious word; and may we become the inheritors of future glory through our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Seventh Day.

"For he spake in a certain place of the seventh day on this wise, and God did rest the seventh day from all his works."—heb. 4 : 4. "And in this place again, (He speaketh of the seventh day;) if they shall enter into MY REST."—(Verse 5.) "Again, he limiteth a certain day, saying in David, to-day, after so long a time; as it is said, to-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts."—(Verse 7.)

One of two positions must be taken with regard to the above scriptures, viz.: either the apostle Paul is enforcing the observance of the seventh day according to the letter of the law, or else he speaks of it as only "a shadow of things to come;" in other words as a type. That the first position is not the true one is evident; for they kept the letter of the seventh day under Moses and Joshua; yet they did not, and could not, enter into that rest, which Jehovah calls emphatically "MY REST."

But some will say that "unbelievers" only were denied entrance into that rest, while "believers" entered in under Caleb and Joshua and possessed it. The apostle however denies this position by saying that "if Joshua had given them rest, then he would not afterward have spoken of another day;" but as he did afterward speak of another day, the apostle argues that Joshua did not give them that rest, which Jehovah signified when he spake by Moses on this wise,—"And God did rest the seventh day from all his works." "Seeing, therefore, it remaineth that some must enter therein, and they to whom it was first preached entered not in because of unbelief; . . . . there remaineth therefore a rest unto the people of God;" (i. e.) that rest which the seventh day shadowed forth; that rest which Joshua did not and could not give; that rest which Jehovah signified in his oath by the expression "MY REST," remaineth to the people of God.

The same rest is doubtless spoken of by Isaiah 11 : 10,—"And in that day [the gospel day] there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek: and HIS REST shall be glorious," (margin, glory.) Again, chap. 28 : 11,—"For with stammering lips and another tongue will he speak to this people. To whom he said, this is the rest wherewith ye may cause the weary to rest; and this is the refreshing: yet they would not hear." Still it is said unto us, "He that hath ears to hear let him hear;" and again, whosoever "will not hear that prophet shall be destroyed from among the people;" for he saith, "Come unto me, [not to Moses or Joshua] all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Now if Joshua had given them rest, this doubtless would not have been spoken by him of whom it is said, "The isles shall wait for His law;" and again, "Judah is my Lawgiver," saith the Lord; "for it is evident that our Lord sprang out of Judah." Again, "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah, nor a Lawgiver from between his feet, until Shiloh come; and unto him shall the gathering of the people be;" for this is that "Lion of the tribe of Judah," "The root and the offspring of David, the bright and morning star," which our God hath set for "a light to lighten the Gentiles;" who also hath said, "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last." "Blessed are they that do the commandments of him." (Greek text.)

Again, "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock." "For this man was counted worthy of more glory than Moses;" and by as much more as the ministration of the Spirit is more glorious than the ministration of the letter; either that written with ink, or written on tables of stone; by so much more, is the Sabbath or rest of Jesus more glorious than that of Moses; or land of rest given by Joshua, the earthly Canaan with its earthly rest. For if the keeping of those Sabbaths prepared them to enter that earthly rest, the keeping of this shall prepare us to enter the rest that remaineth to the people of God when it shall come. For it is written, "You who are troubled, rest with us; when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God." Let us therefore agonize to enter the strait gate; let us labor to enter into God's Rest; for we which have believed do enter into rest, as he said; and as Jesus said, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." And he that cometh to Jesus must come to learn of him, and he will teach men how to cease from their own works, that they may be found not doing their own ways, finding their own pleasure, or speaking their own words, on one day in seven only; but on every day and every night, that they must bridle their tongues and know that for "every idle word that men shall speak they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment."

Time past must "suffice us to have wrought the will of the Gentiles." and the works of the natural man must cease. All wrath, malice, blasphemy, backbiting, hatred, envy, murder, adultery, witchcraft, variance, emulation, heresies, idolatry, drunkeness, covetousness, all these and many more of man's works must cease; for he that hath entered into his rest, he also hath ceased from his own works as God did from his, (own works) when he rested on the seventh day.

This is the Sabbath magnified and made honorable by Christ, universal in its extent and application, an embodiment of that law which is fulfilled in one word, even in this; "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Man, by nature, is a child of wrath, and is averse to the law of Christ, which is fulfilled in bearing one another's burdens, and loving our enemies. This doctrine to him is a hard saying; and he thinks, and often says, "Who can bear it?" He had much rather observe days, and times, and months, and years, than submit to this yoke; yet he who has worn it, declares that it is easy; and to such as will wear it, "I will give you rest."

The House of Jacob.

When Jesus Messiah, and those who are elected to fill the holy office of kings and priests, reign over the house of Jacob, for the age or dispensation to come, and which also is called the "day of the Lord," "day of judgment," every individual will be dealt with according to their character.

Jacobs are supplanters. A class of people who know not the judgment of the Lord; have despised his chastening; when they have received the measure they have meted out to others, they have not humbled themselves under the mighty hand of God, nor regarded his word, which says, "Vengeance is mine, I will repay"; but have taken the work into their own hands.

Now there are multitudes of such in the professed church, gathered from among the Gentiles, whom God regards in a different light from those who have never known the Lord. This class, with those of the same character among the scattered Jews, will, according to the light I have received from the Word, constitute the house of Jacob. Though they have been gathered into the church; have cherished high hopes of entering the kingdom; and will cry, "Lord, Lord, open unto us!" they will be repulsed as characters differing from those to whom the promise was given, of reigning with Christ. "Blessed are they who are called to the Marriage Supper of the Lamb." "Blessed and holy is he who hath part in the first resurrection." Such have labored to enter into that rest, have submitted to the righteousness of God, have been crucified with Christ, condemned and killed, and not resisted. E. J. MARDEN.

1 Tim. 5 : 24, 25.

"Some men's sins are open beforehand, going before to judgment, and some men they follow after. Likewise also the good works of some are manifest beforehand, and they that are otherwise cannot be hid."

We believe this Scripture has often been misunderstood. It is generally supposed that the righteous are those whose sins go to judgment beforehand, and are pardoned, while the sinner meets his at the judgment.

We think the idea is simply this. Some persons are openly vile; their wickedness is known and read of all men; while others are apparently moral and righteous, and not until that day, when the secrets of all hearts are laid open, will they be seen in their true character.

Likewise the good works of some are manifest in this world; while with others, their alms are in secret, and not until the day of reward comes will they be brought to light. Then, to the secret gift of charity is granted the open reward. M. D. W.

The Kingdom at Hand.

"In those days came John the Baptist, preaching in the wilderness of Judea; and saying, repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand."

In examining this text we will notice, first, the fact of his preaching in the wilderness. Why did he preach in the wilderness? Why did he not call together the rulers of the Jews, and proclaim the coming of their Messiah in the temple? He was a Levite, and in accordance with his genealogy, and the peculiar circumstances of his birth, he not only had a perfect right to do so, but had reason to expect that they would believe on him, and gladly hail their coming King. Or if he wished to preach more directly to the common people, why did he not preach in the streets of Jerusalem, where the multitude could hear him without the necessity of going out into the wilderness of Judea? (which was a mountainous region southeast of Jerusalem, a long way from there, or from the Jordan where he subsequently baptized many.) Let us then consider what was the probable cause of his preaching in the wilderness.

First, it is plain, from John 1 : 23, he did so in fulfillment of a prophecy in Isa. 40 : 3,—"The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God." (Which prophecy was however, only fulfilled in a primary sense to the Jewish nation, for with all his labors, combined with those of his Lord and Master's they failed to get the Jews as a nation to accept of the kingdom offered them; the prophecy therefore, in its broad literal sense, remains yet to be fulfilled.)

Secondly. He preached in the wilderness, figurative of the church of the last days. Hosea 2 : 14.—"Therefore behold I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderness and speak comfortably unto her; and I will give her vineyards from thence, (compare also Isa. 35 :—"The wilderness and solitary place shall be glad for them, and the desert shall bud and blossom as the rose,") and the valley of Achor for a door of hope." This refers to the place where Joshua cleansed the camp of Israel, and buried the dissembling, covetous, heaps of Achan, and named it the valley of Achor unto this day. So the church, coming out of mystical Babylon, (Rev. 18 : 4.) shall dwell alone, shall bury her [illegible] and Babylonish garments, and, uniting together in the bonds of faith and love, become a people prepared for the coming of her Lord.

That the prophet has reference to the Gentile church, into which the house of Israel is sown, is evident from the [illegible] and confirmed [illegible]. "And I will sow her unto me in the earth; and I will have mercy upon her that had not obtained mercy; and I will say to them which were not my people, thou art my people, and they shall say, thou art my God."

Again, he preached in the wilderness that he might get the common class away from the immediate influence of the proud bigotry of rulers and Rabbis, who, like a similar class in these days, hold the common people in Egyptian bondage; who feed themselves and not the flock; and have turned the truth of God into fables. They also claimed all the religion and sanctity of the age; yet John boldly denounced them as a generation of vipers, and demanded of them fruits meet for repentance. (Luke 3 : 11.)

Let us next inquire into the nature of the kingdom offered to the Jews and proclaimed ready to be set up. That it was a literal kingdom, and that Christ offered himself to them as a literal king until after they rejected him, is evident from all the four gospels, which testify that in fulfillment of the prophecy (Zech 9 : 9,) he rode into Jerusalem as king, [illegible] riding upon an ass; and assumed a temporary authority in the temple. It is also plain from Matt. 10 : 5, and onward—"These twelve, Jesus sent forth and commanded them saying, Go not in the way of the Gentiles, and into any city of the Samaritans enter ye not. But go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. And as ye go, preach, saying, the kingdom of heaven is at hand." 23d verse: "But when they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another: for verily I say unto you, ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel till the Son of man be come." As their preaching here is confined to the cities of Israel, his coming here referred to, is his riding into Jerusalem as their king; for immediately after, (Matt. 21 : 23) he tells them the kingdom shall be taken from them and given to a nation bringing forth the fruits thereof; and no more speaks of his kingdom at hand, but far in the future.

The foregoing view also agrees with Luke 17 : 20,—"And when he was demanded of the Pharisees, when the kingdom of God should come, he answered them and said, the kingdom of God cometh not with observation, neither shall they say, Lo here! or Lo there! for behold the kingdom of God is within you." Is within your acceptance, you need not look about for any supernatural manifestation, for behold your King is among you, in your midst, and is about to offer himself to you as such; not in the gorgeous manner you expect him, but meek and lowly, as predicted by your prophets. And the Savior, knowing they would reject him for his humility, directly after tells his disciples (not the Pharisees) of a future coming as the lightning, and tells them that generation would reject him; and in consequence of which, he gives them to understand from verse 22d, that his coming he is about to explain to them was in the dim future, beyond their natural lives.

From the foregoing, although summed up in few words, I feel bold to affirm, that the kingdom preached to the Jews was a literal kingdom; and that they understood it as such is plain from John 11 : 48,—"If we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him; and the Romans shall come, and take away both our place and nation." What consistency would there be, in this expression, if they did not understand that the kingdom preached was a literal one, and designed to oppose the Roman government under which they lived?

But it may be asked as an objection, did not Christ imply a submission to the Romans in the case of the tribute money, Luke 20 : 25? I answer, he probably did, but in every case (and it is recorded in three of the Gospels) it was after his offering himself as their king, and rejecting them as the subjects of his kingdom. He had only proclaimed himself their king in parables, and in fulfilling a plain prophecy, and giving them to understand the kingdom was within them, to accept, or refuse, yet given in such obscure words that it was impossible to make evidence of them; and after scornfully rejecting him, and seeking to make him individually amenable to the Roman government for tribute, they thought they had hit on a plan to make him commit himself, [illegible] cried, "Hosanna to the Son of David!" when he entered the city), and coming to him in a very loyal manner, and inquiring very interestedly, "Is it lawful for us to give tribute unto Cæsar or not?" But he whom they had rejected had already passed sentence upon them, and the answer he gave them probably satisfied them ever afterward that his mission to them, as their king, was finished.

I would say in conclusion, that inasmuch as the Jews as a nation did not receive John as the forerunner of Christ; he did not fulfill any of the prophecies in the sense designed by them; but typified another event, like as the destruction of Jerusalem typified the end of the world. And the Savior himself evidently considered his mission a failure, for he said, Matt. 11 : 13, "For all the prophets and the law prophesied until John; and if ye will receive it this is Elias which was for to come." From [illegible] he was received as Elias, he could not fulfill the mission of Elias. By turning to Mal. 4 : 6, we find what that mission was. "And he shall turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the hearts of the children to the fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse."

The Jews at the coming of John were divided (like the Gentile church now) into bitter opposing sects and parties, their commentaries and traditions had supplanted the true sense of God's word; they were covetous, selfish, proud and arrogant. John came to harmonize them, to teach them humility, and to love one another; "Saying, if any man have two coats let him impart to him that hath none; and meat likewise" (Luke 3 : 11); and as John did not succeed in bringing them to this standard of love and unity, he did not fulfill the prophecy in the sense designed; for as a nation they rejected both him and his Lord, and put them both to death, and the curse followed as predicted. It cannot be argued that even a respectable minority adhered firmly to Christ through John's preaching; for although they loudly clamored for John as a prophet after he was dead, and followed Christ for loaves and fishes; yet they were so biased by Jewish traditions and the influence of their rulers, like the waves of the sea before a change of wind, when the Savior proclaimed any new truth, they were ready to desert him. See John 6 : 67. And when he came to the judgment and the cross, where were his multitude of followers? Where were the five thousand that had fed on his miraculous bounty? Where were the men to whom he had imparted the virtue of his existence in healing their maladies? Gone! all gone! not one to vindicate his cause! not one to attest the innocence of the Son of God!

In the face of these facts will any one contend that John prepared a people to receive the Lord, and therefore all the prophecies teaching that event are fulfilled? If it can be proved he did, then I admit a spiritual kingdom is at least partially established, although such a kingdom is beyond my comprehension. But I feel satisfied such an argument cannot be sustained; and our Lord, foreseeing the result of John's labors, compares him to a reed shaken with the wind; and looking still forward to a more successful event of like nature, speaks of a lesser one who should be greater than he; evidently meaning the faithful and wise servant who shall prepare a people for his future coming shall be the least (that is the humblest and meekest) in his kingdom. Compare Matt. 24 : 45, and Luke 12 : 42, with Matt. 18 : 4. Such shall be his policy in rewarding his subjects, he will exalt the lowly, and the meekest one shall be ruler over all his goods.

That the future kingdom, now so near at hand, will be a literal one, the evidences from the word of God is overwhelming to those who have eyes to see, and ears to hear. A gospel kingdom (as some call it) I read nothing of. The gospel of the kingdom I understand, and when it is established I look for a king, subjects, territory, and metropolis.

This is the object of my faith and hope; for this I wait, for this I pray.

Conference in Augusta, Me.

Our quarterly Conference in Augusta, which commenced March 29th, was one of great interest and profit. The brethren came together "in the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ." The first meeting was a good one, and the interest and numbers increased to the end. The appointment of this Conference seemed to alarm the devil, so as to provoke preparation for a full trial of strength. So we met the evil elements in the onset. God blessed the word and testimony; the community were drawn to hear, and signs were visible that many were deeply impressed with the truths preached; and sinners wanted to find the Savior.

The reports from the different parts of our fields of labor were very cheering. In most places souls have been recently converted, and the blessed hope embraced. Bros. H. B. Sevey, N. Smith, I. C. Wellcome, S. N. Partridge, E. R. York, Wm. M. Ingham, and James Hemenway, were the ministers present, who were united in the work of the gospel.

Dr. Howland, (so called), of Worcester, Mass., "came also," and offered some of his prophecies, strange tongues, and other demoniacal exercises, on one forenoon. Eld. J. Hemenway, who resides in the same city, and knows the man, arose, and from a sense of duty, informed the congregation that Howland has not a christian character at home, nor regarded as a christian, but as a deceiver; and that he could and would furnish the proof if needed. This was very timely. A policeman who was in the meeting, then ordered said Howland out of it, and advised him to leave town, which he did. We record this to warn all, especially women, to beware of this deceiver. We have known him before. By great sanctity and solemn visage he "crept into houses." God delivered us from him.

Our real, personal, opposing enemy, and who threatened us mischief before the conference commenced, was James Hall, known to many of us as an insane man, or lunatic, with spirits alternating, sometimes lamblike, at others demoniac, the most furious and blasphemous. He was backed up by several persons who did not sympathize with order, union and equal rights. The struggle continued, at times, for three days and waxed hot. Saturday P. M., God gave us decided victory, and without using the law. Order and truth triumphed, the audience were fully convinced of the difference between the Advent Conference, its christian conduct, and those ruinous elements there fully exposed. The development was in the right place, and right time. We bless God for this victory given us through our Lord Jesus Christ.

The brethren in Augusta now stand in their true light before the people, with an open door of usefulness before them. Our social meetings were excellent. The preaching was with spirit and with power. Our place of worship was crowded to its utmost capacity, and many were not able to gain access. A deep and lasting impression of the gospel hope was made on all our hearers. Conference closed Sunday eve, but as there was a general wish to continue meetings through the week, afternoons and evenings, Bro. Ingham stopped to labor among them. Monday, a number of penitent seekers attended, and five rose for prayers. Some wanderers were reclaimed. In the evening the meeting was in Darby Hall, a spacious one, yet it was filled, more than could find seats. May God carry on the work. Our quarterly conference adjourned to meet in June, at the call of the secretary.

The Man for the Times.

In the governments of the earth, and in the progress of the church, there have always been men adequate to every emergency. When God determined to drown the world and destroy everything living upon it, he found Noah, a righteous man. And when he wanted to call out a people for his worship, he found Abraham. When he wanted to deliver his children from Egyptian bondage, he found Moses; and so on through all ages of the church there have been men raised up for every exigence. We might mention, Luther, Calvin, Whitefield, the Wesleys, Miller, Edwards, and others, who in those days were the men for the times.

But how is it in this day of falling away, backsliding and lukewarmness? Where is the man with the eloquence of Demosthenes, and full of faith and the Holy Ghost, who will stand out above the fear of man and proclaim to the world lying in wickedness, the truths necessary to be published at this time? We know there are men in the ministry who can write logical sermons, gather large audiences, and command large salaries; but are they the men for these times? Vital religion will degenerate under such ministrations. If the world continues ten years longer, we may expect to witness a more rapid degeneracy; according to the prophecy, the love of many shall wax cold; but we also may expect to see men raised up, who will be qualified to meet these exigencies, and lead the faithful who will be found watching when the Master returns; and we may also expect to find them among this number or denomination. We pray the Lord of the harvest to send them forth.

The great chart by Bro. John Stevenson is sixty-six feet long—three wide. It gives the world's history, through three thousand years; from David, king of Israel, down to Pius IX—the present Pope in Rome. It was written by hand, and is unique; having no duplicate, of course it is not in market. It may have cost him, as mechanics value their labors in lettering signs, etc., near $1,000.

The author has wished to publish it; but as yet has not found sufficient encouragement; hence there is but this one in the world.

The World's Crisis.

Relief for the Distressed; or, How we got out of "Doubting Castle."

No. 18.

Being thankful for our own deliverance from the dismal windings of "Doubting Castle," we feel anxious to help our Bro. out into the pure gospel light, beyond the gloomy shades of Papal night. Knowing from sad experience how unpleasant it is to be immured within the walls of the old "Castle," where no light comes but what is reflected from the muddy brains of some bigoted sectarian, who is trying to sustain the relics of popish dogmas, we would spare no effort that will aid the escape of Bro. B. and others who may be in the same sad situation.

We will pass to Division twenty-four, and let Bro. Burnham relate the instruction he there received, which was the following:

"The prophet speaks of the inhabitants of Sheol being stirred up to greet, intelligently, the Monarch of Babylon, as he descends unto them. Is this a metaphor? A metaphor is always founded on elements of reality. Sheol is a reality. The inhabitants of Sheol are a reality. Is not the element of intelligence there a reality too? If this is not a metaphor, then all can understand it." (56)

56. As in the case referred to, death and hades, or sheol, are often personified, and represented as active agents. This passage reads, (Sheol) "hell from beneath is moved for thee, to meet thee at thy coming; it (sheol) stirreth up the DEAD for thee, even all the chief ones of the earth."—Isa. 14. 9. When the monarch of Babylon died and was laid in sheol, or the state of the dead; sheol is represented as a person waking up the dead to receive this noted king, while they say to him, "Thy pomp is brought down to (sheol) the grave, and the noise of thy viols, the worm is spread under thee, and the worms cover thee." Where was he when the worms covered him? Do worms cover spirits? What effect will material worms have on immaterial spirits? Worms feed on dead men who are laid in sheol—the grave, and the mighty king of Babylon, when dead, was treated with no more respect by the worms than the poorest beggar in his kingdom.

Sheol is truly "a reality," and real beings are placed therein; but when it is said there is intelligence there, we are boldly met by the Scripture, which says, "There is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in (sheol) the grave, whither thou goest."—Eccl. 9. 10. All in sheol are DEAD. Hence we read, "The sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell (hades or sheol, margin, the grave,) delivered up the DEAD which were in them; and they were judged every man according to their works."—Rev. 20. 13. That which is "judged" is the accountable part, the real man, but the part which is to be "judged" has been DEAD in sheol or hades; both of which words have the same meaning, one being Hebrew, the other Greek, and while dead in sheol they have no knowledge. Hence, the fact that sheol is personified, and represented as stirring "up the DEAD," and putting words into their mouths, is no proof that man is conscious between death and the resurrection, when the Bible so plainly declares the opposite.

We will go on to the next Division, and let the light of truth illumine its gloom, and expose its poisonous errors, to the joy of the weary pilgrims who have been so cruelly treated by the faculty of this antichristian institution. In this twenty-fifth Division, they endeavored to perplex our brother with the following:

"In the Greek text of, 'by which he went and preached to the spirits in prison,' there are two tenses! 'Went' is past tense—'spirits in prison' is present tense. He went and preached to spirits which then were in bodies but are now in prison. What and where is the prison?" (57)

57. There is no doubt as to "what and where is the prison;" to wit, the prison house of DEATH. It appears evident that the preaching was done by Noah, through the aid of "the Spirit" which was employed by God in raising "up Jesus from the dead." The time of the preaching is definitely specified as being "while the ark was a preparing," "in the days of Noah." An old translation reads, "He (Noah) delivered solemn admonitions to those who are now in the state of the DEAD;" i. e., in sheol, where there is no knowledge. So we see there is no proof in this Division that man knows any thing when dead.

We advance to the twenty-sixth Division. In this we find the managers of the "Castle" making a strange effort to explain away the plain and positive Scriptures which speak of the state of the dead. Let Bro. Burnham tell us what they said to him. It is as follows:—

"May not such expressions as, 'The dead know not any thing'—'There is no device, or knowledge, work, or wisdom in sheol,' have reference to the affairs of this present world? (58) Are not such expressions limited by the connection in which they stand? Is not the limiting sentence written in the very midst of such words?—'Neither have they any more a portion forever in any thing that is done UNDER THE SUN'! (59) If we press such words to the radical point, will they not prove too much? for the same is said of the living as of the dead: 'Ye know nothing at all'—'We are of yesterday and know nothing.'—'The lad knew not any thing.'—'A foolish woman is clamorous; she is simple, and knoweth nothing.'—'He is proud and knowing nothing'—'Thou hast tried me, and shalt find nothing in me.' So, you see, the living know not any thing too! If we limit one of such expressions, why not limit all of them? (60) The dead know nothing about the prosperity or adversity of their relations in this world; or about affairs of government; or about any matter, general or particular: but may they not be be intelligent as to the sheol world?" (61)

58. In relation to the remarkable question in the fifty-eighth section, we would say yes with emphasis. And when a man is where he knows nothing about "the affairs of this present world," where is the proof that he knows any thing about any other? There is no promise in the Bible that he will ever live on any other planet than this. Those who "sleep in Jesus" are to be raised from sheol "at the last day," and "inherit the earth;" but while in sheol, or the state of the dead, they do "no work," get up no "device," and have no "knowledge nor wisdom." They sleep in profound silence. As David says, when a man's "breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." This being true, he does not keep on thinking about some other world.

59. It is true that the context does limit the expression that "the dead know not any thing," and other similar expressions, so that there is no room left for doubt in the matter. No language could be more explicit. In order to show that the dead have no consciousness or knowledge of any world, or of what is done above or beyond the sun, as well as "under the sun," the context affirms that "their love, and their hatred, and their envy is now perished." When one is in such a situation that he has no love, hate or envy, and knows nothing; we think none but "Doubting Castle" D.D.'s would dare contradict such plain Scripture declarations, and affirm that the dead know more than the living, and that they love more ardently, or burn with more bitter hate, than ever.

60. In this sixtieth section it is asserted that "the same is said of the living as of the dead." When the Faculty of "Doubting Castle" bring one example from the Bible that even intimates that the "love," "hatred," and "envy" of a living man is now "perished;" that he is where there is "no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom;" not only on his part, but of all about him; and that "his thoughts" are perished, it will be soon enough to believe their ASSERTION.

"The same is" never "said of the living as of the dead." It is said of the living that they know nothing about some things; but never said they know nothing about any thing, or that their love, hatred, and thoughts are perished, and that every body about them is in the same situation.

61. In this section it is freely admitted that the dead know nothing about this world either in "general or particular," and then the strange question is asked, "May they not be intelligent as to the sheol world?" We are astonished that any one should listen for a moment to a question so diametrically opposed to the positive teaching of the Scriptures. After declaring that "the dead know not any thing," the Scriptures then affirm, that where they go, no one else knows any thing. They are placed with those who have no knowledge; and this is the "Sheol world;" hence the point is forever settled, unless we receive heathen mythology and deny the Bible, that no dead man, or any part of a dead man, knows any thing in "general or particular," concerning this world or any other, after the breath of life is taken from him.

As we find no proof in the twenty-sixth Division in favor of the idea that man has a spirit that is conscious when he is dead, we proceed to the next. In the twenty-seventh Division, Bro. Burnham discovered the following:

"The expression, 'His thoughts perish'—may it not mean his plans of a worldly nature? The word 'thoughts' here, in the Hebrew, is purposes or plans. When a man dies, he can do no more about his purposes or plans—they all, so far as he is concerned, perish. The Savior says, 'Take no thought for the morrow.' We limit this expression to 'anxious thoughts.' Why not limit the above to 'worldly thoughts?' (62.)

62. The questions in this Division are very similar to the ones in the preceding, and need but a brief notice. The verse under consideration reads, "His (man's) breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish."—Ps. 146 : 4. Where does the man go? "He returneth to his earth." Where is the man then? In the earth. Suppose, for argument's sake, that it means "plans of a worldly nature;" will the man have "plans" or "purposes" of any other nature when he gets into sheol? We have just read from the Bible that there is no "device"—plans or purposes—there. In all candor we ask, how can a dead man plan or devise any work? His brain, the organ of thought, is entirely inactive, how then can he think? A moderate blow upon the head will stop a man's thinking, and render him unconscious, will a heavier one, which scatters his brains upon the ground, set him to thinking about the affairs of some other world, and give him new purposes and plans to execute in sheol, where no one knows any thing?

It is no marvel that so many have turned infidels, rather than believe the theological absurdities of "Doubting Castle." It is a wonder that any one was ever so far deceived as to believe and proclaim them.

Editorial Notices.

Destruction of the Wicked.—In compliance with a request of Bro. S. H. Platt, Editor of the Household Magazine, a valuable "monthly," published at No. 5 Beekman St., New York, we are writing a series of articles on future punishment, which are to appear in the April, May, and June No.'s of the above named periodical. Bro. Platt is a Methodist preacher of fine talents; and the Household Magazine, in its moral worth, is far in advance of any other with which we are acquainted. It is free from the sickly, wishy-washy, novel stories, which are so abundant in nearly all the popular "monthlies."—It is $1. per annum. Single numbers, 10 cents.

Cassell's Illustrated Family Bible.—Parts 2 and 3 of this valuable work have been received. Also Part 1st of Cassell's Natural History, which, with the other, is to be published fortnightly, on the 1st and 15th of the month, until completed. The perfect volumes will make an addition to any library.

Revival in Castleton.

On the 12th inst., we commenced another series of meetings at Castleton, Vt., and the good Lord is still pleased to favor us with his kind presence through the agency of the Holy Spirit. The work is moving steadily on against a strong opposition from nominal professors, in company with their ministers. Some were converted during our absence, and all seemed determined as ever to be christians in earnest, and live so as to be ready to meet Jesus at his coming. They love to hear about the return of our Savior, as true christians always do, and are rejoicing to know that the day is near when they will see him who has pardoned their sins and given them such great joy and peace. It is truly heart-cheering to hear their testimonies.

As the Methodist minister was gone to Conference, the Trustees of the house kindly opened it for us to occupy, the first three evenings of our present series of meetings, and offered it also for the Lord's day; but as some of the members were opposed, we repaired to the Town Hall, to enjoy another of our excellent love feasts, which are to the christian as cool water to a thirsty soul. When about half way through our love-feast, an intelligent looking stranger arose, and remarked that he might differ on some points, but he was in favor of missionary labor, especially among the lower classes, urging all to be charitable, and call nothing evil. Soon after he commenced speaking, he closed his eyes, and spoke with much earnestness. At first, he spoke well, and appeared much like a very zealous member of some evangelical church; but we soon discovered that he was a Spiritualist in a trance state. We let the demon go on with his harangue through this medium for about fifteen minutes, in order that the inexperienced might see for themselves how Satan transforms himself "into an angel of light." The lambs of the flock began to feel that something was wrong in the man. One who sat near, felt such a strange influence coming over him, that he got up and went out for awhile to get rid of it and others were influenced in a similar manner. When matters had progressed thus far, we arose and rebuked the medium, requesting silence, and exposing this device of Satan to lead the flock of God astray. The man, or the demon speaking through him, made very earnest efforts to say more, but was unable to speak another word during the meeting. He remarked afterwards, that there were angels about us, when we stood up to preach, and he could not say any thing. We learned since that he is a Spiritualist preacher, who advocates the free-love system. He went into other meetings and took a part, carrying out his deception in an admirable manner. He is reported to have said that there was too much religion in our meetings for him to act freely. It is said he obtained some thirty subscribers in the place to a Spiritualist paper; among whom was a minister, who promised to aid him, wishing to overthrow the doctrine we have preached. This same minister took the pains to circulate some two hundred of a work on "Sadduceeism," aimed against the "blessed hope" we love so well, besides saying many hard things.

The Lord's enemies are very busy in this place, and are seldom surpassed in using the tongue of slander and ridicule. We learn that a lady (?) a church member, offered the feathers towards a coat of tar and feathers for our benefit; and another very prominent and active church member is reported to have said that we ought to have a large iron ring put into our nose and led out of the place.

Well, thank the Lord, that we are counted worthy to suffer reproach for Christ's sake. As Paul said, "None of these things move me; neither count I my life dear unto myself, so that I might finish my course with joy, and the ministry which I have received of the Lord Jesus, to testify the gospel of the grace of God." The battle goes well. The saints are gaining ground, and pressing for the coming kingdom. We have new witnesses in every meeting and the light and truth are spreading rapidly. We have large audiences that listen with deep attention. They are astonished at the simplicity and harmony of Bible truth; and now see that the reason they did not love and understand the Scriptures was because they had been mysticised by the ministry.

Lord's day afternoon, we went down into the river, and buried some willing souls in the likeness of Christ's burial and resurrection. They received the Holy Spirit and went on their way rejoicing. Many others intend soon to follow their example. Several prominent church members have resolved to withdraw from the churches that are so earnestly opposing this good work of God, and unite their sympathies and hearty co-operation on the side of the Lord and his truth.

A Sabbath school and Bible classes were organized last Lord's day, with encouraging prospects. Two little girls, who have been blessed during the meetings and resolved to follow Christ; and who had been laying up their gifts and earnings, till they had accumulated nine golden dollars, voluntarily gave all to purchase a library for the Sunday school. Praise the Lord for what he is doing in Castleton.

This evening, April 16th, we are to commence a series of meetings at the Baptist meeting house, in Hydeville; a place about three miles from C. The work of the Lord is spreading all around us. Pray for us, that more glorious results may follow than we have yet seen. While Satan and his demons are all awake, let us not sleep as do others. Christian soldier, gird on the armor—"the whole armor of God"—and firmly stand against the advancing foe with his embattled legions. The contest between truth and error grows more severe every day, but the victory is certain to the faithful.

"Great Trouble."

In a letter of the Pope to the Bishop of Orleans, he says Italy is in "great trouble." "The legitimate authority of the Holy See" is "ruined throughout the Æmilea and the Romagna."

An American lady, writing from Rome, under date of March 23d, says, "We are in the midst of great excitement here. . . . The Roman people are thoroughly roused and excited, and fully determined to have their liberty. They would make mighty short work of it, were it not for the 10,000 French troops kept here by Napoleon. As it is, these is constant trouble. Every few days the people make a demonstration."

The Paris Constitutionnel says, "At Rome we have protected the Holy Father during the last eleven years." France, under Napoleon III, appears to be "the beast that was, and is not, and yet is," as described in the 17th chap. of Revelation. The wounded head is fully healed.

There is some prospect that the French troops will soon be taken from Rome. A Paris correspondent says, "It was stated that France had expressed a disposition to withdraw her troops from Rome, provided the Pope consented, and engaged himself to call in no other foreign troops. . . . . . It is asserted that all the divisions of the French army in Italy had received orders to be ready to march at a moment's notice. A variety of other rumors to the effect that a struggle was imminent, and that preparations were being made on all hands, were in circulation."

A correspondent of the London Times says the Pope recently "expressed his extreme distress that in these days this very faith should be made an especial object of attack, and added that this fact alone was the cause of his deep and profound dejection." . . . . "Although," his Holiness continued, "in the midst of persecution it was his duty only to arm himself with greater courage, as the grief of his heart was, nevertheless, rendered more bitter still by beholding that in this very peninsula, so highly privileged by God, not only endowed with the faith, but honored with being the centre of that faith, and with possessing the most august throne on earth—that even here the minds and hearts of men were hopelessly perverted. No, his fears were not raised by the arms or armies, or the forces of any Power, be it what it might. No, it was not the loss of temporal dominion which created in his heart the bitterest of afflictions. Those who have caused this loss must, alas! bear the censures of the Church, and must henceforth be given over to the wrath of God, as long as they did not repent and throw themselves on His loving mercy. What afflicted and terrified him far more than all this was the perversion of all ideas—this fearful evil, the corrupting of all nations."

Says another Paris correspondent, "At your distance you can have no conception of the violence of the Romanists and the Protectionists, and of those old parties whose hate proceeds from an older and bitterer source. . . . The whole church is convulsed to its very center."

A Paris correspondent of the London Times, says:—"There is great wrath here against the Pope." Letters from Rome state, "that the agitation is so great as to make it doubtful whether even the French army will be able to restrain it much longer." This looks like the beginning of the fulfillment of the Scripture which declares that the ten horns . . . . "shall hate the harlot."

State of Europe.

Every thing seems to betoken a tremendous revolution in Europe. "Rome and Napoleon" are occupying the attention of all classes. The Emperor of the French has become the observed of all observers, or the object of "wonder," as expressed by the Revelator, and yet he ascends higher and higher. All Europe is trembling before this wonderful man. He bids fair to become the sole dictator of morals and politics. He may well be called a "prophetic man," "the man of destiny." All Europe appears to be playing into his hands. We may expect to see him, like Augustus Cæsar, both Emperor and Pontiff. We think he will soon make another grand move. It is now a settled fact that his promises and treaties bind him no longer than they subserve his special interests. He has already risen so high, that, like the Popes of the thirteenth century, he can make and reverse decrees at pleasure, and no one dares to interfere. We think he is "the son of perdition," the last protector of the woman of Rev. 17th chap., and that both are doing up their last work. All things proclaim the end near at hand.

The battle of Armageddon is evidently at hand. The enemies of the Lord are mustering their forces; and, brethren, let us not be found sleeping.

A Paris correspondent says:

"Louis Napoleon is about organizing an immense army in addition to the regular army. He knows that before he attains the objects he proposes, he must confront all Europe in arms. . . . . By this management Louis Napoleon will have ready to take the field at any moment—

Reserved National Guards	500,000
National Guards (all old soldiers, mind you!)	1,500,000
Regular army	800,000
Total army	2,800,000

While Napoleon talks peace, he is making gigantic preparations for war.

A Paris correspondent of March 29th, says:

"A week ago there was no Europe; the Emperor Napoleon and France were the only power; theirs was the only voice capable of dictating terms or of being heard above the confusion. Is the waking up which has just taken place in England and Switzerland but a dying kick, or is it the forerunner of a European coalition against France? Nobody believes a coalition possible, because nobody is willing to take the lead. The Emperor Napoleon tears up the treaties of 1815, throws the pieces in the faces of the great Powers, and nobody dares reply by a call to arms."

"Reasons for my Hope."

Eld M. Batchelor, Rutland, Vt., March 16th, 1860, writes: "I have read your "Reasons for my Hope" with interest. I have tried to introduce it at C——."

Rev. Edward Winthrop, A. M., writes from N. Y., Feb 15th, 1860: "The tracts enclosed in your letter, I have read with great pleasure. They are written with much fervor and eloquence. The subjects of them—"Peace in Christ,"—"Now,"—"All things are yours," and "Worth knowing," are of surpassing interest. The book, entitled "Reasons for my Hope," was received yesterday, and so far as I have glanced at it, appears to be written in an excellent spirit."

For the Crisis.

Christ our Life.

A NEW BOOK.

I have felt for some time past the need of a pretty complete scriptural argument for immortality through Christ alone, in a form accessible to all. Such a book or pamphlet would exclude almost every word of extra-scriptural argument, and hence would not meet the wishes of those who like to know the history of opinion on the subject, or the theological relations and practical bearings of the doctrine we hold. But it might meet the wants of many who rely, or profess to rely, on the Bible alone, and who have not the means to possess, or the time to read, the more extended argument.

I have for some time past been preparing such a scriptural argument as I thought was needed. It will consist of seven or eight chapters, the longest of which will be the examination of passages alleged to imply the endless suffering and immortality of the lost. The whole will make about 144 duodecimo pages, and will be put at 45 or 50 cents bound, and 30 cents unbound, which will be a low price. The usual discount to those who buy to sell again. I expect to have the book ready early in May. It will be published by Messrs. J. P. Jewett & Co., 20 Washington St., Boston, and can be had at the Crisis office.

☞ Of all mercies, pardoning mercy is the most sweetening mercy. It is a mercy that makes all other mercies look like mercies, and taste like mercies, and work like mercies. He who has it cannot be miserable; he who wants it cannot be happy.

The Head and the Heart.

The sacred writers have none of the timidity of their modern apologists. They never sue for an assent to their doctrines, but authoritatively command the acceptance of them. They denounce unbelief as guilt, and insist on faith as a virtue of the highest order. In their catholic invitations, the intellectual not less than the social distinctions of mankind are unheeded. Every student of their writings is aware of these facts; but the solution of them is less commonly observed.

It is, we apprehend, that the apostolic authors assume the existence, in all men, of a "Spiritual Discernment," enabling the mind, when unclouded by appetite or passion, to recognize or distinguish the Divine voice, whether uttered from within by the intimations of conscience, or speaking from without in the language of inspired oracles. They pre-suppose that vigor of reason may consist with feebleness of understanding; and that the power of discriminating between religious truth and error, does not chiefly depend on the culture or on the exercise of the mere argumentative faculty. The especial patrimony of the poor and the illiterate, the gospel has been the story of countless millions who never framed a syllogism.

Of the great multitudes whom no man can number, who, before and since the birth of Grotius,* have lived in the peace, and died in the consolations, of our faith, how incomparably few are they whose convictions have been derived from the study of works like his! Of the numbers who have addicted themselves to such studies, how small is the proportion of those who have brought to the task either learning, or leisure, or industry, sufficient to enable them to form an independent judgment on the questions in debate! Called to the exercise of a judicial function for which he is but ill prepared,—addressed by pleadings on an issue where his prepossessions are all but unalterable,—bidden to examine evidences which he has most rarely the skill, the learning, or the leisure to verify,—and pressed by arguments, sometimes overstrained, and sometimes fallacious,—he who lays the foundations of his faith in such "evidences," will but too commonly end either in yielding a credulous, and therefore an infirm, assent, or by reposing in a self-sufficient, and far more hazardous, incredulity. —Sir J. Stephen, Essay 5, Vol, 2, pp. 49, 50.

*The author of the famous treatise on "The Truth of the Christian Religion." It is not unlike Paley's "Evidences." Richard Baxter attempted a similar service in behalf of Christianity, which is the occasion of the above remarks. The important point is, that the religion of Christ is addressed mainly to the conscience and the inmost need of man's nature. It is a religion of the heart, and not specially of the head. It courts investigation, if one doubts; but asks, or rather demands, our love.

Correspondence.

From Eld. M. Batchelor.

Bro. Grant:—The Lord has given us a little reviving in Rutland. He has added to our numbers, and, I trust, to our graces. We are waiting for the Lord, and believe he is soon to be revealed from heaven in all his glory. I think I can say, Come, Lord Jesus! To me it will be an hour of sweet release.

Children of the kingdom, cheer up! there is land ahead,—victory will soon be yours. Let us be up and doing, for blessed is that servant who shall be found working and watching when the Master cometh.

Peace be with all that love his appearing.

From Eld. Boutell.

My Dear Brethren:—I had anticipated much pleasure in being with you at the late Boston Conference; there to have greeted those dear ones, made so by the love of God shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost, and made doubly so by holding on to the faith, bearing reproach and letting their light shine. I wanted to enjoy this feast; but as I was in Portland, Me., and to stay still longer, and calls for me at that time to go to Yarmouth and Cumberland, I concluded cheerfully to deny myself and make my way to Bro. York's parish, and attend the calls, having learned long ere this that "it is more blessed to give than to receive."

I am glad to hear of your good times, when convened to give expression of faith and hope by the waiting disciples, and I hope they did not shun to bear faithful testimony in the love of Christ, of all those doctrines which give us an identity.

And while Christendom is alarmed at the sweeping miasma, (Spiritualism), they are more alarmed at its antidote, the unconsciousness of the dead. But, thank heaven! this is the sure weapon of defence—no consciousness in the grave—no immortality out of Christ—the sleep of the saints. Here is ammunition that all can use, and it will do execution. To attack this damning sin with the common faith of the church, is like going up to give battle to the enemy, using nothing but paper balls.

But the cause is rising, truth is working mightily against tradition and fables. There is an ear to hear, and the people, yea, the "common people," hear gladly.

I have labored in Biddeford, Portsmouth, Portland, and in the regions about those places; and there is everything to encourage. Some have been converted in all those places, especially to the doctrine of life only through Christ and a coming Lord. The voice of the convert praising the Lord for deliverance, can be heard in all the places I have visited. The wandering have been reclaimed. Thank the Lord!

Be of good cheer, and do up your last work valiantly. No sacrifice is too great to make for the salvation of men and the glory of Christ. Have strong faith, clean hands, and a pure heart, and soon life eternal will be ours. Amen.

Groton, Mass.

From R. V. Lyon.

Bro. Grant:—I am still a pilgrim, joyfully wending my way through this vale of sorrow to the highlands of glory. Never did fair Beulah's blissful plains look so glorious! By faith I can view the blood-washed throng walking amid those beautiful groves, all clad in white, bearing in their hands the victor's palm, and shouting their loud Alleluias to him that hath loved them, and washed them from their sins in his own blood, and hath made them kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion forever and ever. Amen.

Glorious day, when the redeemed of all ages shall in harmony meet each other upon the plains of Paradise restored! O! what a thrill of joy will fill each heart, as they walk beside those crystal waters, and reach forth their immortal hands, and pluck fruit from life's fair tree, which will then grow in the midst of the paradise of God!

View them as they repose themselves among those vine-clad hills of Eden, dressed by a hand all divine; and to make their happiness the more complete, listen to those sweet notes that now fall from Eden's songsters, borne along on zephyrs' stainless wing, saluting the ears of the redeemed throng. Glory be to God! Eden's beautiful city, with its jasper walls, its pearly gates and streets of gold, is full in my view. Its glories beam upon my soul; its odors are wafted to me; its sound strikes upon mine ear; its spirit breathes into mine heart.

O my Father! shall I be gathered with the ransomed host within those jasper walls?

Northern Railroad, N. Y., April, 1860.

P. S. My tract—"The True Source of Immortality"—can be had of me at North Augusta, C. W., at $3.00 per hundred. To the poor I send them free.—R. V. L.

From Eld. Jona. Wilson.

Bro. Grant:—Please say to your readers, that I am well and slowly returning towards my western home. My mind is filled with gratitude to God for past favors. I am this day eighty-three years old, in good health, able to preach weekly, write, read one hundred pages in a day, and converse on the Scriptures with ease and delight. Blessed be God for such continued favors. I am now writing in the house in Colraine, Mass., where I first drew my breath. Although it is eighty-three years since, I am not become immortal, but expect to when the last trump of God sounds. I am to preach next Lord's day within about one mile from where I was baptized, joined the close communion Baptist church, and began to preach fifty-two years ago, last October. There has never been any Advent influence there until now. My theology is somewhat different from what it was then. I received it then from tradition; now, from the Bible. I am glad to have the opportunity to lay before the people the difference between the two.

Letters sent to East Shelburne, Mass., will reach me until the tenth of May next.

From Chas. H. Sutton.

Bro. Grant:—The church in Philadelphia, worshiping at Ninth and Spring Garden streets, were greatly edified on Sunday, March 18th, by the preaching of Bro. Hastings. His discourse in the morning, from 1 Thess. 4:17,—"And so shall we be ever with the Lord,"—was to us "a feast of fat things." The discourse in the evening, from 1 John 5:9,—"If we receive the witness of men, the witness of God is greater,"—was truly a master-piece. He dealt some powerful blows at those who reject the ordinance of baptism. Bro. H. rightly divided the word of truth, and gave a portion to each in due season. His remarks on baptism were to the point; they went home to the hearts and consciences of his hearers; they were certainly home thrusts; he struck from the shoulder, and hit hard. Bless God for gospel truth! and for men who are not afraid to proclaim it! I hope Bro. Hastings and other preaching brethren will come this way. Philadelphia is behind; we need more instruction. Come along, brethren!

From F. M. Berry.

Bro. Grant:—Agreeable to the request of our dear Bro. Champlin, I write you a line this morning, that the friends may know of his prosperity and labors in the cause of God in this place.

He came here April 7th, and commenced laboring to good acceptance—house crowded. He baptized four happy converts on the first Sabbath. The meetings continued every afternoon and evening during the week. Quite a number have given their hearts to God, and found "peace in believing and joy in the Holy Ghost."

Yesterday, the 15th, he again led into the baptismal waters eleven more converts, and buried them in the likeness of Christ, welcoming them into the church by giving them the right hand of fellowship; which exercise was very affecting. The blessing of God was upon him. Great attention was given, and crowds went away—not being able to gain admittance to the house.

Portsmouth, N. H., April 16th.

From M. A. B.

Bro. and Sis.:—It is with much interest that I peruse the Crisis, from week to week, and learn how the cause of Christ is prospering in different places. Although strangers, we are all of one family, have all one Father. If we are faithful to the grace already given us, we shall one day meet an unbroken family in the kingdom of God. Oh! what a cheering thought to the weary pilgrim, to those that have borne the burden and heat of the day, that have been looking and praying these many years, "Thy kingdom come." I believe we are almost home. Soon we shall see Jesus; and if we are his shall be made like him; for we shall see him as he is; and every one that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure.

Do we not come far short of our duty? The world and its cares call us from the things of God, and many times lead us astray. O let us, who are looking for the coming of the Lord so soon, arise, and trim our lamps anew, that we may not be found like the foolish virgins, when the Master comes. I have felt these many months that I was a pilgrim and stranger here as all our fathers were, but like them was traveling to a better country.

When I consider how I have wandered from the way, and yet have been spared, I wonder that I have not been cut down like the fig tree, as a cumberer of the ground. But God has seen fit to spare me a little longer, and my prayer is that I may be the instrument in his hands of doing some good the little time that remains.

Brethren and sisters, pray for me that I may be found in peace at the appearing of Jesus, not having on my own righteousness, but that which is of God.

> Jesus, our Lord, will soon appear
> To take his children home;
> The signs proclaim his coming near,
> And he will say, well done
> Oh! let us then gird on anew
> The armor of the Lord,
> That we may hear him say to us,
> Receive your great reward!

South Windsor, Ct.

For the Crisis.

Harmony Wanted.

Will our good Bro. H. L. H., reconcile or harmonize his interpretation of Micah 5:2, with Prov. 8:12 to 36, particularly with verses 22—30. Then both of these with John 1:1, 2, and Heb. 1:2 and 2:5. I would be very glad to be as firmly settled on that point as he seems to be. Query; was the Logos of John 1:1, and the Divine Wisdom of Prov. 8, both one and the same. I want, for one, to "Stand up for Jesus," but would like to do it understandingly. In this I have got pretty near on to Bro. T.'s "rail." Do help me off, Bro. H., if you can.

G. W. Stetson.

Obituary Notices.

Fell asleep in Jesus, at Worcester, Mass., April 13th, 1860, of consumption, Bro. John W Heath, aged forty-nine years four months.

His funeral was attended at Thomas Street Chapel on the 16th, Elder A. Ross preaching an excellent discourse on the resurrection from 1 Cor. 15:35. Elders S. S. Brewer, Geo. Burnham, J. N. Andrews and the writer being present

A kind father, an affectionate husband, an estimable citizen and a staunch christian is no more With some twenty years' experience as a Methodist and about eight years as an Adventist, he was always first, always active, always zealous, always prompt, living for God's kingdom, dying respected, he is gone from us in calm faith of the resurrection to endless life, such being his only and blessed hope. Every preparation was intelligently made and his house fully set in order.

Peacefully and with unfaltering heart he met the enemy, among his latest words exclaiming, "Jesus is with me—all is peace. Farewell!" A wife, one son and two daughters who inherit the father's faith, are left to mourn, but in hope of an eternal re-union with the object of their love in Paradise. Soon may it come. Amen.

D. T. T.

Died, in North Prairie, Scott Co., Ill., March 4th, of consumption, William A. Armstrong, aged twenty years and nine days.

One year ago, William was blooming in health and enjoying the buoyancy of youth; but consumption marked him for its victim. For some time nature struggled to repel the attack, but in vain. Though he was a thoughtful youth, he had never given his heart to Christ. A short time previous to his death, he sought and found peace to his soul. He spoke to his mother about baptism, and said if he was able he would be baptized. He expressed a desire to recover from his illness, for, said he, I shall be so happy when I shall meet with you, dear mother, around the family altar; but when he found that death had marked him for its victim, he seemed to have no fear. He exhorted his friends and relatives to meet him in heaven. He leaves his affectionate parents and a fond brother, many friends and relatives, to mourn his absence.

Consolation was administered by the Rev. Perry Bennett from 1 Cor. 15:22. The funeral was attended by a large concourse of friends, who consigned him to his narrow house to wait the sounding of the last trump, when we expect to meet our friend in the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness.

> O let it be a solace in the mourner's loneliness,
> That to his soul ere he departed the Savior whispered peace;
> That he died with faith in Jesus, and spoke of sins forgiven,
> And his weeping friends exhorted to meet with him in heaven.

J. G. Brink.

Died, in Brownhelm, Lorain Co., Ohio, April 9th, 1860, Henrietta L., wife of J. D. Goodrich, aged twenty-one years eight months and twenty-eight days.

Her disease was nervous fever, which continued something over a week, during which time she manifested a christian resignation to the will of God. About two years ago she professed faith in Christ, and was baptized by Rev. J. W. Leister. Since that time she lived as one born to die, and when called was found ready. Her funeral was attended by a large number of sympathizing friends, at which time a sermon was preached by Rev. A. C. Hand from Jas. 4:14. A husband and three children still live to mourn their loss. May grace divine support them.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Advices of the 4th inst.]

A revolutionary movement was on foot in Spain. Gen. Ortega with three thousand men had proclaimed Don Carlos king.

Austria had solemnly protested against the annexation.

FRANCE.

On Thursday, some persons from Geneva made a menacing demonstration at Thonou, and hoisted the Swiss flag. A steamer with armed people left on Friday for Thonou.

The French government has revoked the article of the Concordat, so that no bull, brief, rescript, mandate or provision, or other document from the Court of Rome, even regarding private persons can be received, published or otherwise put into execution without the authorization of the government.

A second warning has been given to the Ami de la Religion for an article against the Concordat.

Naples, March 31. The propaganda in favor of annexation to Sardinia is becoming more daring.

Vienna, Tuesday. The Oesterreichische Zeitung states from a reliable source that the Neapolitan army will not enter the States of the Church.

Paris, April 3. The latest advices from Spain say that the Revolutionists were concentrated in the town of Tortola, near Valencia.

ITALY.

The Times' correspondent at Rome, in summing up the affairs of the Pope and the King of Naples, says:

"But, were the King of Naples, as is far more likely, to persist in his obduracy, or were he too far gone to find people willing to come to terms with him, then, no doubt, he and the Pope, if abandoned to themselves, would surely fall, and then either would Piedmont have the whole of Italy, or the southern half would fall into the hands of him who has just been baffled in his crooked designs upon Central Italy, and who is now digesting, with such relish as he can, those meagre bones of Savoy and Nice, with which Sardinia was, in an evil moment, compelled to glut his appetite. Let Europe be on the look out, or we shall have a Bonaparte on the throne of Naples ere we are three months older."

The Paris correspondent of the Times says: Public opinion, in the financial and commercial world, is greatly agitated by alternate hope and fear, in consequence of the uncertainty which prevails with respect to the future position of the country. The government has made extraordinary efforts to restore confidence, but without success.

The Excommunication.—The Unione Liberale of Turin states that the papal excommunication has been received with the greatest indifference by the people of Central Italy. They consider the act as a mere formality, which the Pope, in virtue of his office, is bound to fulfil; since, on assuming the triple crown, he had taken the oath binding him to maintain the States of the Church as he received them. Accordingly, the excommunication is only general, and no interdict has been yet pronounced. Hence it has no more value, in the eyes of Central Italians, than the protests of Austria and the dethroned princes, which are simply regarded as waste paper. The Pope, instead of a diplomatic protest, which is out of his line, has made a spiritual one, with which his Chancery is more familiar. On the other hand, the Sardinian Government has taken proper measures to prevent any disturbances arising in the kingdom in consequence of the excommunication.

[From a letter to the Independent by Mrs. H. B. Stow.]

Rome, March 23d.

The affair in the Corso, on Monday night, comes nearer to being a crisis than we at first imagined. At first, we thought that the fears of people had exaggerated the thing, but we find since examinations have been made that this is not the case. More than two hundred people have been wounded, one is dead, two others are dying. Among the wounded are two French officers and several French soldiers. One or two Americans of our acquaintance were wounded. Two old men of seventy and a child of fifteen, who stood cowering with their faces to the wall, were stabbed in the back. They slashed at the carriage of a Roman lady of rank, who fainted through terror—in short, it was the same fiendish spirit which inspired the slaughters of Perugia.

Since then, the Pope has given five dollars to each soldier engaged in this outrage, and twenty to the ten who were first in the Corso, together with a silver medal, which they wear, in the face of a scowling, indignant people. Much indignation prevails among the French soldiers, who sympathize with the people, but General Guyon the next morning, in his orders for the day, commended the general movement of the Italian police in putting down the demonstration, but regretted that they should have employed their weapons. The course of the French authority here seems just now inexplicable. The solution, I have heard from high authority is, that the Pope has told the Emperor that he wished him to take away his troops, and that if he wanted aid he could get it of the King of Naples, and that the French powers are not unwilling to foment the difficulties and excitements which make their presence necessary. It is threatened that on Sunday next the liberals intend to crowd to St. Peter's and to break out into a "Te Deum" for the annexation. The students of the Sapientia have already done this once, and been put down; and if they get agoing in St. Peters, there may be warm work.

The Pope has in this last outrage sundered the last cobweb of respect or religious feeling which yet bound Roman hearts to him. Such a cruel, merciless, indiscriminate attack on an unarmed populace, without giving them time to retire, and sparing neither age nor sex, shows the nature of the beast. Under all that soft, gracious demeanor, those brown eyes so full of tranquillity, lies the ferocious claw of the tiger. He will have blood as soon as he can get it, and henceforth between him and this people is no place for repentance.

The Independence Belge thus writes: The French Government, weary of its relations with the Holy See, appears determined to withdraw its troops from Rome. For this purpose it has obtained from the Roman government, and from that of Piedmont promises to respect the actual state of things—the one agreeing not to attack the Romagna, the other to abstain from all intervention in Umbria and the Marches. It now remains to organize a pontifical army sufficiently strong to defend the Holy Father, the King of Naples positively refusing this duty.

Revival in Ireland.

Not only have ministers of all denominations, and secretaries and committees of religious societies, described the reality of this great change in its purely religious aspects but a host of laymen, of the greatest diversity of circumstances, and most unimpeachable competency, have borne independent witness to its social and moral results. These witnesses embrace "all sorts and conditions of men," from the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, down to the Roman Catholic carman and pig-drover. They include peers and peasants, lord-lieutenant of counties, judges of assize, local magistrates, police officers and their men, inspectors of factories, jailors, parish officers, editors of newspapers, physicians and barristers, merchants and mechanics, men of all religions and men of no religion, men of all possible diversities and contrarieties of taste and education and sentiment, and they all agree in ascribing to the "revival" the greatest social change and moral improvement they have ever known! An Irish Roman Catholic peasant boy is reported to have listened attentively to a priest earnestly denouncing the "revival," and warning the people against it as the work of the devil! "Ah! then, your reverence," replied the lad, "it must be a new divil, for that's not the way the ould divil used to make the people behave themselves." Sure enough, Pat! May thousands such as you learn the true origin and character of this wonderful work of God!

Notices, &c.

Notice.

There will be a meeting at Seneca, Crawford Co., Wis., commencing Thursday evening, May 3d, and continue over the Lord's day following. Elds. M. Chandler and Y. Higgins will be present to preach the word. A general attendance is requested.

Notice.

There will be a meeting of Shell Rock Quarterly Christian Conference holden in Marble Rock, Floyd Co., Iowa, commencing May 11th, in the evening, and continue over the Lord's day. Ministers and churches wishing to unite, will be there prepared by letters and delegates to do so. There will be grove meetings held in other places, if desired.

Peter S. W. Deyo, Evangelist.

A Proposition.

To any one who will send us a new subscriber for one year, we will forward, post paid, a copy of our late discussion with Eld. W. W. Clayton, on the conscious state of the spirit after death, and the destruction of the wicked. And for a new subscriber for six months, we will send a copy of the pamphlets on "Soul" and "Spirit." With a little effort, a thousand names may be added to our list. Let every reader try to aid in scattering the light and truth. Now is the time to work.

Pray look into the Scriptures
And see how sisters of old
Denied themselves of fashions
And stood them like the world.

They followed Christ the Savior,
Were filled with humble love,
Adorned themselves with meekness,
And sought a world to come.

They had no such adorning
As [illegible] and broidered hair,
Nor the putting on of apparel
And ornaments to wear.

On earth they lived like strangers,
[illegible] of the Lord;
Devoted all to Jesus,
And trusted in his word.

Their works were seen by many,
Who glorified the Lord,
And thousands were converted,
Who yielded to the word.

Thoughts on my Birthday.

BY R. MATHEWS.

Here I am, here where have passed away scenes of pleasure and sadness. Here, where the day-dreams of youth have passed together with friends known and unknown. Here, where youth has grown old, and the old are growing older, and ripening for the tomb; here, where my waywardness has been corrected; and where I have been hushed by songs,—here I am. Twenty years down against me. Two hundred and forty months, with all their Sabbaths and opportunities of doing good, are passed. With them there remains no returning. Gone forever are those hours, whether well or ill spent.

What good has my existence done? Have I been an instrument of drying one tear or of soothing one sigh? Have I assuaged the pains of one dying head, or awakened a good hope of salvation in one wayward heart? Or have I done any harm in the world? Have I enemies? Do I merit their displeasure? Have I been of less account than the space I occupy? Would it have been better for the world if I had never been in it? Eternity shall tell.

If I have disobeyed God, I have praised him. If my path has been crooked, I have been on the right one. And if I have not walked very fast, nor sung very loud, nor stood up very straight, I have walked in the road to Zion, on the platform of Truth, and have sung the songs the Fathers sung. And to

Those who have braved life's ocean long,
As the Fathers have done before,
I would cheer thy oft sad heart with song,
As thou nearest the distant shore.

I freely confess that I have made many missteps. I look back on them with a tear of regret, and then brighten up my sword and trim my lamp anew and start over again. Yes; I go back to the cross of the Crucified, and begin where all began. I am sorrowfully perplexed at times. Are not others? Yes, my chart is as clear as my fellows. Then why should I not have courage to face all sorts of weather?

Well, a new year is dawning to me. How shall I begin it? How shall it end? O that Jesus would come! I am weary of the narrow confines of time; measure me out eternity in ages on ages. My heart is sick. My ears are quite weary of the mournful sounds that greet them. My eyes are tired of the pitiful sights that shock human senses. Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly! Friends say I'm praying in vain. I trust not. They tell me to unite my heart to a more truthful faith. I can't find such. They tell me Jesus will tarry. He says he cometh speedily. They say I am deceiving myself. Happy deception! Wish it were "catching," and all creation could come in contact with it. Praise God for truth!

Reader, who are you? Are you a lover of God and his word? Is your life insured? Have you a hope in Christ? Are you ready to meet Jesus? Are you on your way rejoicing? Then exchange signals. "Stand up for Jesus!" be the watchword. "Hoist every sail to catch the gale," and fill them with the breath of prayer. You are safe in the old tempest-tried "ship Zion."

Rest in hope. God and all things are yours, and soon at mature age you will be put in full possession of the purchased world. But, sinner, you are poor. O how poor! What are all those fields spreading out before you, or that gold heaped so closely?—you are poorer than ten thousand Lazaruses. You have only what belonged to another. The deed is not yours. Your land is not registered. Come to Jesus, and be a joint heir to a throne and a kingdom. Come just as you are, poor and [illegible]. It is to you he offers mercy; to [illegible] is this Physician sent.

[illegible] brother and sister, will you come to Jesus? Will you secure [illegible]? Will you give your heart to God, and take in exchange ETERNAL [illegible]

For the Crisis.

"In the Day," etc.

EDITOR OF THE CRISIS:—The following letter will for the most part explain itself. It is lent me by Bro. W., with the privilege of printing it if it shall seem worth while. The writer is well known as among the foremost of Hebrew and Greek scholars, and one of our ablest theologians. It may seem hardly modest to offer any comment upon the letter, either favorable or adverse to the views it contains. I will say, however, that even granting all that is said of a metaphorical sense of the term death, or of life, no argument can be thence constructed for the immortality of the spiritually dead. And if moral causes may produce physical results, or affect and impress the being of the soul, then may not "spiritual death" be as it were a disease of the soul, the shadow and forerunner of its proper death? Yet if any one doubts such a natural connection between sin and a literal death of the being, the judicial connection may be real, and the argument from the scriptures will be no less valid.

In a work which I am now preparing I shall examine the supposed metaphorical sense of death in such passages as Eph. 2: 1; Col. 2: 13, "dead in tresspasses and sins," and the like. I find scores of authorities, besides ample reasons, as I think, for the liveliest form of the literal sense,—"under sentence of death," etc.

This I deem the true view of Gen 2: 17; and Dr. L. admits this as not inconsistent with the view which he gives more fully, though he seems not to adopt it.

But I should not keep back your readers from his letter. C. F. H.

UNION COLLEGE, Dec. 25th, 1854.

DEAR SIR:—In reply to your queries I would say that the Hebrew preposition, B, is more indefinite than our in. It may be rendered, according as the context may require, either in, or at, or by, or on, or with; but I am quite confident that it can never bear the meaning of after, either in time or space. In the passage you refer to, all the old versions, Greek, Latin, and Syriac, agree with our common translation, and yet they all have doubtless the same latitude of meaning.

In Hebrew the prepositions are often, and in general, prefixes to the noun which is their object, making with them one word, as be-yom, in the day. Thus used, the phrase comes to be equivalent to an adverb of time, and may frequently be rendered simply when—yom (or day), as you are probably aware, being in Hebrew very indefinite, or often used for time in general. Thus in Gen. 2: 4, we have the same expression be-yom, which is rendered, "in the day, (that is, the time) when the Lord made the heavens and the earth," including the whole work of creation in all its times and periods.

It is a common principle of languages that adverbs of time come to be used as particles of condition. Thus when, in English, is used for if—when you do so and so, that is, if you do so and so, you shall be punished"—implying by this mode of expression the certainty rather than the immediateness of the connection between the events.

I should have no great difficulty in applying either of these views to the passage in question if I regarded it as denoting only the natural death of the body. The word day may be taken indefinitely for time, without any exact limit being intended in respect to duration, except as denoting the beginning of the period in which the threatened event is to take place. Or the whole phrase may be taken as denoting the certainty of the connection between the two events expressed emphatically—as though they were to be taken as immediately sequent in causality, however far apart in time.

Equivalent to this is the view which regards it as denoting the death of condemnation immediately consequent on the act, although the actual execution of it may be deferred. "As sure as thou eatest, thou diest, thy doom is fixed;" "in that very day thy fate is determined," etc. We would not regard such expressions in our own tongue, as denoting immediateness of actual execution.

Either of these views would satisfy me philologically, if I regarded the death of the body as the only thing intended, as perhaps I might regard it if I had to draw my conclusion from this passage alone. A comparison, however, with other parts of the Scripture produces the conviction that something more is intended here.

Death is frequently spoken of in the Old Testament in a manner which shows it could only have been intended of the spiritual or moral nature. The same is the case with its antithesis life. In proof compare such passages as Prov. 14; 12, 27; 8: 33; 15: 4, 24–31; 16: 22; 19: 23; 21: 16, 21; compare Paul, Rom. 2: 7; Prov. 22: 4; 8: 22; 4: 13; 14: 12; 4: 23; 5: 5; 6: 23, and other passages that might be brought from Psalms and the prophets, especially Ezekiel.

In the New Testament we know the idea is most prominent. Paul has it every where. I would, however, only refer to James 1: 15, which I would regard as a great help to the exegesis of Gen. 2: 17 on the assumption [illegible] when lust (or the desire) hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin; and sin when it is finished (or perfected) breeds (so the Greek word means) death."

If we may apply this to Adam, his first moving desire was a conception of sin, and the immediate offspring or embryo of this was death. In other words, immediately when Adam sinned his soul died. That which is its true spiritual life departed, and left it a dead soul, just as the body dies when the soul, which is its life, departs, and leaves it a dead body. It may be said, this application to the soul is figurative. But both modes of expression are so used in the Bible, and in early language generally, that we cannot say which is the primary and which the metaphorical, or whether they are both alike literal.

But you may say I am giving you my theological as well as my philological views. It is, however, difficult to separate them. You can do so, if you choose, and make such use of either as may seem to you most for the cause of truth and righteousness. Yours truly, TAYLOR LEWIS.

The Lord's Prayer: A Curious Poem.

The following is a curious piece of poetry. The initial letters spell, "My boast is in the cross of Christ. Read the words in italics downward with those on the left, and upward with those on the right, and you will have the Lord's prayer.

Make known the gospel truths, our heavenly King;
Yield us thy grace, dear Father, from above;
Bless us with heart which feelingly can sing
Our life thou art for ever, God of love.
Assuage our griefs in love for Christ we pray,
Since the bright Prince of heaven and glory died;
Took all our shame, and hallowed the display,
In first being man and then being crucified.
Stupendous God! thy grace and power make known,
In Jesus' name let all the world rejoice;
New labors on thy heavenly kingdom own,
That blessed kingdom for thy saints the choice.
How vile to come to thee, is all our cry,
Enemies to thyself, and all that's thine;
Graceless our will our lives for vanity
Loathing thy truths being evil in design.
O God, thy will be done from earth to heaven
Reclining on thy gospel let us live;
In earth from sins delivered and forgiven
O, as thyself, but teach us to forgive,
Unless its power temptation doth destroy,
Sure is the fall into the depths of woe,
Carnal in mind, we've not a glimpse of joy;
Raised against Heaven in us no hope can flow;
O give us grace and lead us on the way,
Shine on us with thy love and give us peace,
Self and this sin which rise against us slay,
O, grant each day our trespasses may cease.
Forgive our evil deeds that oft we do,
Convince us daily of them to our share;
Help, us with heavenly bread, forgive us too
Recurrent lusts, and we adore thy name,
In the forgiveness we as saints can die,
Since, for us and our trespasses so high,
This Son, our Savior, bled on Calvary —Ex

Immateriality.

Materialism is considered in the minds of most people as a system opposed to the truth and subversive of the spirituality of divine revelation. Such may have been the materialism of heathen philosophers, but we acknowledge and believe both the spirituality and the truth of the Scriptures, while we yet claim that Materialism is essentially the doctrine of the Bible. The doctrine of immateriality underlies the whole system of orthodox christianity, and, as we conceive, when legitimately carried out, works the entire destruction of the whole scheme of christianity.

Our philosophers assume that all matter is gross: they invest it with certain properties or qualities, which they define; Inertia, Divisibility, Tangibility, Corruptibility, etc., etc.; and having determined the nature and properties of matter—of which, in the end, they confess they know but very little—they then speculate upon the nature and properties of spirit, and prove by their speculations that they know a great deal less about it than they would like to have credit for.

It is not tangible not divisible, connot be seen or felt; form any conception you please of a living, intelligent being, the idea of form, parts, etc., is an absolute necessity, but spirit is not that; it is immaterial, hence, of necessity nothing.

The Bible declares that God is a spirit; and religious philosophers say he is without body, parts or passions. A glance at the Scriptures will convince the unprejudiced that this philosophical decision is at variance with the truth. Read Ex. 33: 20. The Lord said to Moses, "Thou canst not see my face, for there shall no man see me and live." Verse 23, "And I will take away mine hand, and thou shalt see my back parts; but my face shall not be seen." Matt. 5: 8, "The pure in heart shall see God." 1 Cor. 11: 7, "Man is the image and glory of God." Jesus Christ is the "brightness of his (God's) glory, and the express image of his person."—Heb. 1: 3. Compare the no-body-and-no-parts philosophy with Bible truth, and say which you will believe.

The philosophy which does away with the personality of God, destroys also the idea of his locality. The philosophers could not conceive of God, only as a universal "Mind," a "Great First Cause," a "Divine Energy," "Creative Power," "Divine Influence," etc.; and this Divine Intelligence was not confined to any particular part of creation, or the universe, being manifested alike in every part and in every place; the blade of grass, the lofty tree, the grain of sand, the massive rock, the whispering zephyr, the howling hurricane—God was in them all; but where did he [illegible] vading, immaterial spirit. Conceive then, if you can, how Jesus ascended up and sat at the right hand of an immaterial spirit, which hath neither body nor parts.

But, if philosophy truly defines the nature of God, his Son must also be a partaker of the same nature with the Father; so Christ becomes reduced to the same condition of immateriality; and as the promise to christians is, that they shall be like Christ, of course, they all become immaterial together, and there is nothing left. Disembodied spirits, it is said, sing songs of praise; but how do they sing? they have no vocal organs; it is said they play upon golden harps; how do they play? they have no body or parts; and the whole is dissolved into a mere philosophical fancy.

When Socrates, "the most enlightened of the Grecian sages," had fully mastered the idea of the existence of God, he next set himself to work out the problem of an immortal soul; and having accomplished the task, he was rewarded with the discovery, according to his philosophy, that man was possessed of an immaterial essence, which he called an immortal soul. His disciple, Plato, followed up the same inquiry, and having satisfied himself that Socrates was right about the immaterial essence, he concluded that it was spiritual and indivisible in its nature, and hence immortal.

Cicero, the great Roman orator and philosopher, followed Socrates and Plato. He declares, "The origin of the human soul is not to be found anywhere on earth; there is nothing mixed, concrete or earthly in it. Nothing of water, air or fire." The Essenes firmly believe in the immortality of the soul, and that it resembles in substance the most mere and subtle air." "The Stoics fancied that the soul was a subtilized, fiery substance, which survived the body after death." Cicero argues, "The nature of the soul, therefore, is of a singular kind; distinct from these known and obvious natures; and whatever it be that feels and tastes, that lives and moves in us, it must be heavenly and divine, and for that reason eternal. Nor is God indeed himself, whose existence we clearly discover, to be comprehended by us in any other manner than as a free and pure mind * * * * observing and moving all things, and indued with an eternal principle of self motion. Of this kind, and of the same nature, is the human soul."

* * * * * * *

The following remarks from the Editor of the Gospel Banner, are appropriate and to the point:

"IMMATERIALITY is but another name for nonentity. It is the negative of all things and beings—of all existence. There is not one particle of proof to be advanced to establish its existence. It has no way to manifest itself to any intelligence in heaven or on earth. Neither God, angels, nor men, could possible conceive of such a substance, being or thing. It possesses no property or power by which to make itself manifest to any intelligent being in the universe. Reason and analogy never scan it, or even conceive of it. Revelation never reveals it, nor do any of our senses witness its existence. It cannot be seen, felt, heard, tasted or smelled, even by the strongest organs, or the most acute sensibilities. It is neither liquid nor solid, soft nor hard—it can neither extend nor contract. In short, it can exert no influence whatever—it can neither act, nor be acted upon. And even if it does exist, it can be of no possible use. It possesses no one desirable property, faculty or use, yet, strange to say, Immateriality is the modern Christian's God, his anticipated heaven, his immortal self—his all.

O sectarianism! O atheism!! O annihilation!!! who can perceive the nice shades of difference between the one and the other? They seem alike, all but in name. The atheist has no God. The sectarian has a God without body or parts. Who can define the difference? For our part we do not perceive a difference of a single hair; they both claim to be the negative of all things which exist—and both are equally powerless and unknown.

The atheist has no after life, or conscious existence beyond the grave. The sectarian has one, but it is 'IMMATERIAL,' like his God; and without body or parts. Here again both are negative, and both arrive at the same point. Their faith and hope amount to the same; only it is expressed by different terms.

Again: the atheist has no heaven in eternity. The sectarian has one, but it is immaterial in all its properties, and is therefore the negative of all riches and substances. Here again they are equal and arrive at the same point."—Time Messenger.

Selections.

The Glory-filled Earth.

The son of Jesse breathed his last prayer, in these glorious words,—"Let the whole earth be filled with his glory. Amen and amen."—Ps. 72: 9.

This is the prayer of David, the son of Jesse, in which he prays that the whole earth,—no village, hamlet, capital, country, continent, or island excluded or exempt,—may be filled with the glory of God—a glory that involves in its bosom the highest happiness and the most lasting pleasures to all.

Once this prayer was an impossibility. Adam could not have prayed in Paradise, "Let the whole earth be filled with thy glory;" for he must have praised his Maker that the whole earth already was filled with his glory; he saw it lying like a soft and shining atmosphere over all space; every bush in that beautiful Eden burning like Horeb's bush: every mountain glowing with the splendors without the transience of Mount Tabor; and in all whispers of the wind—in all chimes of the waves—in all murmuring of brooks—and in the voice of God at early morn and dewy eve he heard the most delicious music. On every acre and on every footpath of that beautiful and sequestered spot he recognized the footprints and the trail of the glory of his God and Father as he passed by. He praised him that the earth was filled with his glory; he could not pray that that might be which was already come.

But since that day—I appeal to the hearts that falter in their beating, to the eye, the ear, and all the senses, to the annals of nations, to the history of the world—a great deterioration has passed upon our earth; deep shadows are now mingled with its brightest sun-streaks; and the lingering and flickering bits of sunshine alone remain to remind us what a beautiful Paradise has passed away; yet presenting tokens and prophecies also that a yet more beautiful Paradise is one day to dawn. In our present experience there is scarce a line of glory upon our world that a line of suffering or a shadow of sorrow does not run parallel with.

Yet, fallen as our world is, one can see traces of what it once was. An architect visiting Jerusalem guessed from the fragment of an arch what must have been the measure of its span, and the resting-place of its piers. From seeing the fragments of this ruined world, we may form a rude conjecture what a magnificent thing it once was; and even in its darkest places one can notice many things that prove if it hath fallen it is not utterly forsaken. Are there not some days in the loveliest summers that seem rays of glory just come forth from the gates of Paradise, to give us a transient glimpse of a faded glory? Even in the deepest winters the laurel, and the bay tree, and the holly, and the group of evergreens, seem to say, "We will not yield as others have; we will keep the path open between the summer that has left us and the summer that is to come," thus ministering to man's heart hope in the deepest depth of nature's decay; and with other vestiges leaving on the bosom of our world memorials that if fallen it is not altogether forsaken. But the mere natural glory that breaks upon our world in fragments is shaded by the departure of that moral glory which once overspread the whole heaven and earth as with the very presence of God.

If in Adam's day all was harmony without, it was only responsive to a deeper harmony within. If man saw all the tokens of perfect peace above, around and beneath, he appreciated and felt the peace the more because of the perfect repose and quiet that was within. But since the fall, these sombre shadows have covered up not only the outer glory, but they have also projected themselves into the very heart of man, and in his inmost soul he feels that more has gone wrong with it than even with the world outside. He needs to pray, whether he looks within or without, with intenser fervor, O Lord, let the departed glory return; let Ichabod be erased from the surface of our globe; let the days of Eden come round again; let the tide of sin and sorrow ebb, and let the whole earth be covered with the glory of God. But do we not read in the Psalms even in this dispensation, and in the world as it is, "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth forth his handiwork?"

If then the heavens declare the glory of God, is it so shaded as has been alleged? Few, indeed, can study the heavens without seeing a glorious apocalypse of God's glory; no one can read the last discoveries of astronomy without being struck with the evidence of the magnificence of that Being who sits enthroned amid the shining hosts that are encamped on the plains of infinitude. Were we to see a starry, frosty night once in our life, it would be an apocalypse such as we should never forget. It is the commonness of the spectacle that dims its beauty, or rather deadens our sense of it. But if it be so beautiful now, what must it have been ere that mist between us and the sky had exhaled from earth! If while we see nature through a glass darkly there be so much to admire, what must have been the splendor of the spectacle when we saw it face to face!

It is, however, necessary to explain what is the glory of God. A human or finite being receives glory when something is added to him that he had not; an infinite being receives glory just in the ratio in which he is made known. The more we know of man, the more we detect the evidences of the fall, and the less we admire him; the more we know of God, the intenser is our admiration. To glorify a creature, we must add to him dignities that he has not; to glorify Deity, we have simply to make known more of what he is. If you wish to see God's glory, or rather to read a record of it, let us refer to that passage where Moses prays, "I beseech thee, O Lord, show me thy glory." What was the answer? The Lord descended in the cloud, and proclaimed the name, which he there regards as synonymous with the glory of God. "The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity, transgression and sin." That is the glory of God.

When David says, that God's glory [illegible] throughout the earth, he prays that [illegible] not in unison with God; that every pulse in human nature from the humblest even to the highest, may be love to God; that every district may be covered with this glory—that there may be no lane, nor court, nor alley, into which the sunshine of heaven does not penetrate, and none into which the light of the Sun of Righteousness doth not shine. No interest that we feel in the distant must make us overlook the near; we must not carry corn to the ends of the earth, whilst many are starving from want at our own doors and upon our own thresholds; we must not be so taken up with the romance of a converted world, that we forget the very plain but very dutiful necessity of a converted individual under the shadow of our own residence.

Whilst we pray for each individual, and for each district of our country, we at the same time still pray that the whole earth may be covered with the glory of God, that every continent may bask in it—that every capital may reflect it from its spires, that the hum of great cities may have it for its key-note; that all the nations of the earth, inspired by love, illuminated by truth, may constitute together, one worshiping, united, and happy church; until the nations rise to a state of peace, of happiness and rest, that will multiply with the multiplying years and ages yet to roll; and David shall no longer say, "Let the whole earth be filled with his glory;" but shall sing, "The whole earth is filled with thy glory."

There are many and strong reasons why we ought more and more to pray this prayer. The first reason is sympathy with man simply as a sufferer; if you want to be humane, and to do the slightest good to man as an individual, you pray and try to practise this prayer. The highest happiness of man is involved in the greatest glory of God. Christianity feeds the roots of all social development. Where is it that nations have reached a culminating grandeur? Where christianity has struck deepest its roots. And, therefore, when you pray that the whole earth may be filled with God's glory, you pray that there may be the most substantial temporal happiness to your fellows; and that our country under the influence of the Gospel may, as a country, rise to its greatest pitch of happiness, peace, and enjoyment.

But you pray this prayer still more because of the preciousness of each individual soul. After all, this is the great argument for trying to do good. To make man happy and contented here is right; but to show him a way that leads to a better world when this world departs, and to show him that his soul depends for its happiness upon the blood of sprinkling, and its interest in the sacrifice of Jesus; to teach man that, and to tell him how he can be saved; and to go to the beds of the sick and the pillows of the dying, and to tell them that there is a God, our Father, and that he may be happy here and happier hereafter; I say, the man that does so is entitled to your greatest sympathy, and the cause in which he is employed to most munificent and liberal support. We pray this prayer because we believe that the Gospel, which is the glory of God, is adapted to every order of the human race, to every want, and every necessity; that there is nothing in it local, nothing exclusive, nothing national; but that to the people in the purlieus of St. Gile's, and to the people on the plains of India, the same Gospel may be carried with the same results, because embosomed in the same sure promise: "My word shall not return to me void." And we pray this prayer specially, because it is God's own promise that it shall be fulfilled. He himself says to Moses, "As I live, saith the Lord, the whole earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord;" and David, recollecting God's promise, which is the guarantee of the successful prayer, says, "Let the whole earth be filled with God's glory."

David beautifully adds, "The prayers of David are ended." When are they ended? When the whole earth is filled with God's glory. And what then shall be our case? At present we say with stammering lips and hesitating hearts, "Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name; thy kingdom come; thy will be done;" all having the under-thought that God's kingdom is not come, that God's will is not done. But in that day, when the prayers of David the son of Jesse shall be ended, we shall no more pray the Lord's prayer as we do now; then we shall say, "Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed is thy name; thy kingdom is come; thy will is done in earth as it is heaven; our bread is given us, and our sins are forgiven us; we are led into no temptation, we are delivered from all evil; and as it began in thy name, Father, it will end with thy name, Father, again; for thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever and ever.—Dr. Cumming.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

Eating.

The stomach has two doors, one for the entrance of the food, on the left side, the other, for its exit, after it has been properly prepared for another process. As soon as the food is swallowed, it begins to go round and round the stomach so as to facilitate dissolution; just as the melting of a number of small bits of ice is expedited by being stirred in a glass of water; the food, like the ice, dissolving from without, inwards, until all is a liquid mass.

Eminent physiologists have said, that as this liquid mass passes the door of exit, where there is a little movable muscle, called the Pyloric Valve, (a faithful watchman,) that which is fit for future purposes gives a tap, as it were; the valve flies open, and it makes an honorable exit. Thus it goes on until the stomach is empty, provided no more food has been taken than there was a supply of gastric juice for. If a mouthful too much has been taken, there is no gastric juice to dissolve it; it remains hard and undigested; it is refused to pass, and the janitor refuses to open the door; and another and another circuit is made, [illegible] until the work is properly done. [illegible] like, are kept dancing around for about five hours and a half.

After, however, there has been a repeated refusal to pass, and it would appear that any longer detention was useless, as in the case of indigestible food, or a dime, or cent, or fruit-stone, the faithful watchman seems to be almost endowed with intelligence as if saying: "Well, old fellow, you never will be of any account; it is not worth while to be troubled with you any longer, pass on, and never show your face again."

When food is thus unnaturally detained in the stomach, it produces wind, eructations, fullness, acidity, or a feeling often described as a "weight," or "load," or "heavy." But nature is never cheated. Her regulations are never infringed with impunity; and although an indigestible article may be allowed to pass out of the stomach, it enters the bowels as an intruder, is an unwelcome stranger, the parts are unused to it, like a crumb of bread which has gone the wrong way by passing into the lungs, and nature sets up a violent coughing to eject the intruder. As to the bowels, another plan is taken, but the object is the same—a speedy riddance. As soon as this unwelcome thing touches the lining of the bowels, nature becomes alarmed, and like as when a bit of sand is in the eye, she throws out water, as if with the intention of washing it out of the body, hence the sudden diarrhœas with which two-legged pigs are sometimes surprised. It was a desperate effort of nature to save the body, for if undigested food remains too long, either in the stomach or bowels, fits, convulsions, epilepsies, apoplexies, and death, are a very frequent result. Inference: Always eat slowly and in moderation of well-divided food.—Health Tract.

Health and a Well-formed Body.

Take abundant exercise in the open air—free, attractive, joyous exercise, such as young girls—when not restrained by false and artificial proprieties—are wont to take. If you are in the country, or can get there, ramble over the hills and through the woodlands; botanize, geologize; seek rare flowers and plants; and chase butterflies. Be a romp, even though you may be no longer a little girl. If you are a wife and a mother, so much the better. Romp with your children. Attend also to your bodily positions in standing, sitting, lying, and walking, and employ such general or special gymnastics as your case may require. Live while in-doors, in well-ventilated rooms; take sufficient wholesome food, at regular hours; keep the mind active and cheerful—in short, obey all the laws of health.

COLD FEET.—Few know the extent of the sympathy between the feet and good health. While they are dry and devoid of perspiration, the health cannot be good. When they are cold and damp, the lungs and bronchial tubes are liable to be affected. We have known a constant hacking cough to be kept up by cold feet. The best remedy is to wash the feet every morning, and then apply a brisk friction until they glow with warmth. Never, under any circumstances, go to bed with cold feet.

Scalds and Burns.

The best, most instantaneous, and most accessible remedy in the world, is to thrust the injured part in cold water, send for a physician, and while he is coming, cover the part an inch or more deep with common flour. The water gives instantaneous relief by excluding the oxygen of the air; the flour does the same thing, but is preferable, because it can be kept more continuously applied with less inconvenience, than by keeping the parts under water. As they get well, the flour scales off, or is easily moistend and removed. If the injury is at all severe, the patient should live mainly on tea and toast, or gruels, and keep the bowels acting freely every day, by eating raw apples, stewed fruits, and the like. No better and more certain cure for scalds and burns has ever been proposed.

A VALUABLE SECRET.—The unpleasant odor produced by perspiration, is frequently the source of vexation to gentlemen and ladies, some of whom are as subject to its excess as their fellow-mortals of another color. Nothing is simpler than the removal of this odor, at much less expense and much more effectually than by the application of such costly unguents and perfumes as are in use. It is only necessary to procure some of the compound spirits of ammonia, and place about two tablespoonsful in a basin of water. Washing the face, hands, and arms with this, leaves the skin as clean, fresh, and sweet as one could wish. The wash being perfectly harmless and very cheap, we recommend it, on authority of one of our most experienced physicians, to our readers.—Petersburg Express.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	21.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition [illegible] as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Preludes by the Way.

What scenes of glory meet my view
As onward I my course pursue;
Bright visions of celestial joy
Beyond the reach of earth's alloy.
Such sounds of rapture strike my sense
As call my waiting spirit hence,
And bids me join the angel throng,
And mingle in their holy song.
O! if to humble faith is given
Such rapturous views of God and heaven,
What will the bright effulgence be,
When I within the veil shall see
All, that while below on earth
Gave to my joys their holy worth?
Dazzling forth amid the throne,
There sits the High and Holy One,
Who in his majesty approves
The chosen objects of his love.
If while I travel here below,
Mingling with earth's scenes of wo,
Such joy and peace, such love, may rest
Within my care-worn pilgrim breast,
Leading me onward with delight
Through this dark world of moral night,
Unhurt, unharm'd, 'mid all the way,
My God my sure and only stay;—
What will it be when feeble sight
Shall be exchanged for glory bright;
When sin and doubt, and toil and care,
And e'en the joys of holy prayer,
Shall be exchanged for perfect bliss,
Supreme delight where Jesus is?
In this blest path of onward love
O! may my willing footsteps move;
Just like my Savior may I live
To labor, suffer, cheerful give
My substance, time, and talents all,
In sweet obedience to his call.
Thus would I live, and waiting still,
Rejoice to know and do his will;
And consecrated to my Lord,
Would know no impulse but his word.
This be my lot while here I stay,
And when I close my pilgrim way,
May I with all the ransom'd race
Unite to sing redeeming grace,
And with my Savior ever be
Throughout a long eternity. M. A. T.

A Sermon.

LIFE TO COME.

"Behold, I set before you the way of life and the way of death."—Jer. 21: 8.

These words were uttered more than two thousand years ago. They were full of meaning and interest then to God's chosen people, Israel; to-day, they are interesting to all the intelligences God has made; and every moral being the Creator has made must heed them in order to acceptance with their Author.

The words of the text were spoken by the mouth of Jeremiah, under the inspiration of the Most High; and for this, if for no other reason, demand solemn attention and reflection.

Jeremiah is one of the four greater prophets of the Old Testament—these are Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel and Daniel. Jeremiah became a prophet under the reign of Josiah, king of Judah; for we read, "To whom the word of the Lord came in the days of Josiah, king of Judah, in the thirteenth year of his reign."—Jer. 1: 2. He continued to prophesy under the reigns of Shallum, Jehoiakim, Jeconiah and Zedekiah, to the taking of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans. It is thought that he died two years after in Egypt.

This prophet is outspoken and clear in his language; he denounces the heinous sins of his age, in plain, unequivocal statements direct from the inspiration of the Almighty; he delineates the dispersion of Israel and Judah, the demolition of their kingdom, and great metropolitan city, Jerusalem, by Gentile power and authority; but finally turns the subject, evidently with great pride, joy and buoyant hope, to the time of the ingathering of the whole house of Israel into their own borders, into the land flowing with milk and honey, as in days of old, when they served and worshiped the true and living God.

But this glorious and final return of Israel and Judah, is not to be until Gentile rule is rebuked, dethroned and demolished by the power of Him who rules the nations in equity and righteousness. For He, whose "goings forth are from everlasting," has announced to the world the startling fact, that he will hold an awful controversy with the nations because of their high-handed crimes against God and man, and to deliver his chosen people from their iron rule.—Jer. 25: 18—33.

At this deliverance all heaven and earth will rejoice, and shout "Amen!" "The Lord Almighty reigneth" in heaven and earth. The angelic hosts of heaven will strike their harps of gold,—saints just waking from the long sleep 'neath the ground, will echo back to heaven the loud anthem of thanksgiving and praise to Him whose right it is to reign, and all nature will unite to repeat—

"Waft, waft, ye winds His story,
And all ye billows roll,
Till like a sea of glory,
It spreads from pole to pole."

Shall we be there? Shall we raise our voices with that happy band, that shining, heaven-like army? Or shall our hearts be filled with lamentations and wo? Shall we utter cries of horror, and finally sink down, down into that dark abyss of death—no more beyond it—no day to light up the eternal reign of silence,—

"Without one single star of hope,
Or spark of glimmering day!"

Heaven forbid! O Jesus, forbid! Sinners, fly, oh! fly now! to that Jesus—to his atoning blood. He will receive and pardon you, if you will but repent. Why longer delay?

This brings me more fully to the subject matter of the text. "Behold"—reflect, look, see. He commences the subject as though something all-important was about to be uttered. That is true. Hence the phraseology of the first word of the text. It is the announcement of an universal truth in the moral universe, that, "I," the Creator, the great "I AM," the only God, "set," fairly place, "before you," particularly Israel and Judah, and all men, "the way of life and the way of death;"—for all men, all moral beings, are traveling in one or the other of those ways.

I purpose to direct my thoughts to the main points in the text. Those points are, as I conceive, "Life and Death" in their broadest sense; and "the way"—means or course—"of life," and "the way,"—dark and broad way—"of death."

That the Creator has explicitly pointed out to us life, must be clear to every reflecting mind; and unless we seek diligently for life we are threatened with death. We are in the way to death, if we are not in the way to life. Hence, men are naturally in the way of death: for naturally all men are sinners, and "the wages of sin is death."

Where there is no law, there is no sin; conseqently, there could be no moral beings in the universe, but for law. In that case man would not—could not—be an accountable being. He would be a law unto himself, and answerable to no higher tribunal. The apostle Paul argues this point clearly and forcibly, in the seventh of Romans. At the eighth verse the apostle inquires, "What shall we say then? Is the law sin? God forbid. Nay, I had not known sin, but by the law; for I had not known lust, except the law had said, "Thou shalt not covet." "Where no law is, there is no transgression"; "Sin is not imputed where there is no law"; "For sin is the transgression of the law."—Rom. 4: 15; 5: 13; 1 John 3: 4.

The point is then clearly settled,—there must be law in the world before men can be held morally accountable. We now ask, has the Creator announced a law to the world? He has. Let us, then, "to the law and the testimony." "Come, let us reason together."

At the very commencement of man's career, the Creator announced to him, "Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." This was a law. This was the law of God; and from the moment that law was proclaimed, man became a moral being—became accountable to his sovereign Lord, the Creator. It is a settled point in the moral world, that a law must have a penalty attached, or else it is no law. In the above law you will notice the penalty attached to its violation is death; plainly stated in the words, "Thou shalt surely die"—if thou violate my righteous law. But man violated this law of God and the penalty threatened has been, and still is being executed, even upon those who have not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression. "Death is passed upon all men, for all have sinned." Or, to state it in other words, Adam's sin, in the garden, subjects us all to death, in consequence of being his by the great law of generation. As he was mortal and dying in his nature, so are we; for we cannot transcend those natural laws the Creator fixed over the universe, "When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy." It is a law of nature that like begets like. Adam being mortal, corruptible, dying, his posterity partake, fully, of the same nature. Hence, we are by nature literally dying men and women.

Thus the words of the prophet come to us with power and force, "O turn ye! turn ye! oh, house of Israel, for why will ye die"? Sinners, it is equally addressed to you, for you are dying: "O why will ye die"? Christ has died that you might live, and live forever.

I come now to treat more directly of the terms "life" and "death." What is life? Webster defines it to be, "A state of being animated, or living, energy, spirit." Cruden terms it—"Power to move and do the actions of life." Hence, in man, I call it sentient existence. Need I ask, What is death? It is just the opposite of life. What is the opposite of heat? What is the opposite of being? What the antithesis of sentient existence? But one answer can be given. Webster defines death, "Not life, or the extinction of life." The Divine penman defined death to king Hezekiah to be, "Die, and not live"; and we have no account up to this date, that it has ever been changed. It is not, to-day, susceptible of a different definition. The experience of the world for nearly six thousand years, defines it (death) not life. Every living being is marked "die and not live." Millions upon the back of millions of human beings have experienced the force and power of, "Thou shalt surely die." Where are all the generations of the earth? That's the question now before the public mind of the nineteenth century. It is an important one. How shall we settle the point, "What is truth?"

We ask Orthodoxy, Where are the generations of the past? The theological reply is, In heaven and hell. Part of them are in happiness, and part in unending woe.

We ask the Spiritualist, Where are the generations of the past? The serpentine reply is, "Not dead," but in the spheres, progressing somewhere between spheres "one" and "seven." They are pushing on to a higher life.

We inquire of the Bible, Where are the generations of the past? and what answer do we get? Hear David, "Put not your trust in princes nor in the son of man." Why? Because "his breath goeth forth, he (the man) returneth to his earth." And what is the result? "In that very day his thoughts perish." Where is the man? In the grave—sheol—where there is "no work, device, nor knowledge."—Eccl. 9: 10.

Job remarks, "Man dieth, and wasteth away: yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?" He then answers the question by way of comparison, thus: "As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down and riseth not: till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." That is Job's theology of death.

Where did David go at death? To the land of forgetfulness. He declares in another place, "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence.—Ps. 115: 17. Where did Peter say he was?—"The patriarch David is both dead and buried and his sepulchre is with us unto this day." He was not in heaven then, nor any of the spheres, for Peter adds, "David is not ascended into the heavens."—Acts 2: 29, 34.

I might follow this point on still further, but my limits will not allow. However, let me remark, before I pass, that reason and facts join with the Bible answer in proclaiming the generations of the dead to be, not in heaven, hell nor the spheres, but in death and in silence!

But is there no future existence? Is there no life to come? I answer unreservedly, there is. This reverts my thoughts to the way or means of eternal life.

I here observe that Jesus is the way of life. "I am the way," saith he, "and the life."—John 14: 6. This is tantamount to saying, "I am the true way to life." "There is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved.—Acts 4: 12.

Once more. Our Lord declares himself to be "the resurrection and the life."—John 11: 25. "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Rom. 6: 23. But, dear reader, our course of life in this world must accord with the spirit and letter of "the gospel of the grace of God," in order to obtain the unending life of which God, through Jesus, is the only source. Hence we are exhorted to "strive to enter in at the strait gate." "If thou wilt have life," remarked Jesus to the young man, "do the commandments." Amen!

That is it, young man, young woman—young and old, that is the point; that is the test. Will you do Jesus' commandments? If you will, you may have eternal life. Where are you? Are you in the dark road and broad way of death? If so, turn your course. Turn now; do not delay. O! I pray you, do not wait another hour. May God bless these thoughts to your good, is the prayer of your servant in Christ. J. A. SOARS.

For the Crisis.

Counting the Cost.

In a late number of the Crisis I showed how the materialist philosophy is in its history more or less connected with scepticism. It was the system of Epicurus, and those who know his system, know that by it he fortified himself and his followers against the preaching of Plato about an after life, which, poor as it was, was the best the Gentiles then had. Materialism is now also the boasted system of Feuerbach, of which it is claimed that he has given the most powerful demonstration, and in which fortress he hopes to shelter himself and his school against the duty of seeking a better life than the present. And I might show, and shall do so if need be, that the history of infidelity has been mainly, and by a large preponderance, a history of materialism.

On the other hand, I showed that christian materialists have not all held life in Christ only. Some of them have asserted the immortality of all men, and the eternal torment of bad men. A fact doubly instructive, as showing that materialism is no infallible guide to the christian, and no impenetrable shield to the infidel against the fear of a judgment beyond the grave.

I also showed that the doctrine of all substance existing in a certain form and shape is not peculiar to us poor heretics; but heretics with whom we have no dealings, the Swedenborgians who are so respectable that we despise them, hold it in common with us. Heresy makes strange bedfellows.

The whole state of facts presents a few considerations of prudence and duty, and a few suggestions of possible truth, which I wish to treat as I find leisure.

The first is, that in all our presentations of gospel truth, we would make that most prominent which is most essential and important—so plain a truth, that all honest inquirers will be pretty sure to see it; or so plain a duty, that all earnest workers will be pretty apt to do it. The distinction between things fundamental and not fundamental in doctrine is commonly admitted. But the same distinction holds in matters of argument. We would lead men to Christ by the plainest and surest road. If we try to bridge the chasm between unbelief and faith, by reasonings that are very open to criticism, we may jeopard the interests we would secure. On this subject Dr. Whately has said some things so pertinent, that I will use his own words. He says:

"The genuine and fundamental doctrines of christianity may become liable to the scoffs of some, and to the dread and disregard of others, from their supposed connection with such as are, in fact, no part of the gospel revelation. It then becomes a matter of importance to rectify even the mistakes which are not in themselves of any moment; since we thus (to use an expression of Dr. Paley) 'relieve christianity of a weight that sinks it.'" (Difficulties of the Writings of St. Paul, Essay VI.)

And we dissenters are specially bound to regard this advice. We have raised our protest against a very prevalent doctrine of endless woe. Why have we done this? Not simply because we regard it as false, though we are bound by our convictions of truth in all things; but we deem it such a false doctrine as has driven, and does drive, fair minded men away from christianity. Many christians hold the awful doctrine, yet it makes infidels. It is not incompatible with faith in Christ, as we see in thousands of instances; yet it is such a burden, not only to the faith of those who hold it, but to christianity itself, that we cry out, "However true you may think the doctrine, do not insist upon it as an essential part of christianity. You know that thousands cannot believe it. One of your own godly bishops has told you of eternal suffering, 'Imagine it you may, but you can never seriously believe it, nor reconcile it to God and goodness.' You may believe it, or think you believe it, and be a good christian. But you must allow others to be good christians without believing it. You know there have been and now are many such. Let there be more, if God will. Hast thou faith to bear the burden of believing eternal woe? Have it to thyself. Destroy not thy brother for whom Christ died, by saying he must bear that heavy burden, or be an unbeliever."

On this ground, then, we have protested. The gloomy doctrine is not only untrue, but if it were true, it would not be essential. Thrown in the path of one seeking Christ, it is a stumbling block that must be removed. If he shall ever believe it, he may do so not as a babe in Christ, but as one that can be fed with very strong meat.

Wisdom is meet for them that are perfect; or for those proficient, well advanced, and initiated in the mysteries, the deep things of God; and the doctrine of eternal evil is certainly very deep.

Now we say all this about a doctrine very prevalent and even popular. Regarding it as false, we offer instead what we think is true. A very unpopular truth, held by a very unpopular minority. And how shall we advocate and advance this precious truth, so it shall save the greatest number from infidelity, and bring most men to love Jesus?

Very clearly, we ought not to repeat the evil against which we protest. When we offer the glorious truth, let us not burden it with any unsafe, uncertain, or even suspicious company of argument. Let the apple of gold be in a picture of silver. Let us clear away every obstacle and remove every stumbling block which does not lie in the proper depravity and malignity of human nature. The cross itself is heavy enough; and to confess that one has been in error on the main difference is humiliating enough.

Let us, then, when we invite men to rest their hope of immortal life in Christ alone, present the doctrine free of incumbrances, and with no connections or surroundings save those which clearly belong to it. Whatever is essential to its argument and demonstration, let that be advanced plainly, boldly, and without faltering or disguise. And all opinions that may seem helpful but not essential to it, let them be mentioned accordingly. And if any have methods of proof which have pleased themselves but which are distrusted by others and disliked by many of those yet to be convinced, then let them not be pressed unless they are absolutely required; and even then let us show that we understand and appreciate the difficulties they involve.

Those who hold the materialist view, then, should never appear to be ignorant of its history. The appearance of such ignorance will be of itself prejudicial, quite as much as the fact that one holds such a view. When, therefore, a christian who denies the separate existence of the human soul would commend his view to other christians, he should frankly say:

"I am well aware, dear friends, that this view of man's nature and constitution has been held by sceptics generally, from Democritus and Epicurus to Comte and Feuerbach. And I can easily understand how you would look with suspicion upon it for this reason. I can sympathize with the difficulties you must feel on account of it. It is, certainly, a very disparaging fact, if taken alone. But if my view of man's nature be the truth of God's word, it is to be accepted and firmly held, nevertheless. Nay, if infidels have dishonored it with their assertion of it and their deductions from it, the more is the reason why christians should redeem it, and honor it by their courageous assent and avowal of it, with the just inferences from it. We do not disown the truths of mathematics because Satan holds them. He believes that two and two make four; but we do not therefore blush or falter when we say the same thing. The demons believe there is one God, and tremble; but we are not therefore in trepidation and fear, when we declare our faith in Jehovah. Just so, if this view of man's nature be true, we who believe in truth should maintain it notwithstanding its sceptical history."

I could admire such a speech, as I admire the revolutionary patriots who adopted and honored as a national air the "Yankee Doodle" which was invented for their reproach. I like to see persons boldly espousing a forlorn cause when they have evidently and fairly counted the cost. But let us compare the cost in the present instance, with the examples suggested. These patriots did not think of adopting that doggerel, until they had gained a signal victory. Fife and drum could easily honor the tune, when the cause was already triumphant. It costs nothing to believe that two and two make four; this has ever been rather a popular and respected truth, notwithstanding the devil's assent.

Again, if the demons believed there is one God and did not tremble, I think the case would be altered. The unity of God would then seem to be a favorite truth with them; or, at least a matter of indifference. But their trembling really does it great honor. We are very glad to believe and rejoice in what demons are afraid of.

Thus in the examples suggested the cost is nothing, or less than nothing, or was paid beforehand. But in respect to materialism, the cost is confessedly a serious item. This has been the favorite philosophy not of Sadducees only, but of infidels and atheists, for three thousand years. It has been held by a few individual christians, and once or twice by whole classes of christians; but the most famous instance is in the "sect of Arabians" who are known only by Origen's refutation of them. Now if Satan had for so many centuries been noisily saying that two and two make four, and this had been uttered by christian lips rarely, and their voices soon hushed, it would be a very unpopular truth. He who lisped it would be suspected as belonging to the devil's party.

But it is really very much so with the materialist view. Tell a man that his soul dies with his body, and he takes you at once for an infidel. This idea has borne infidel company for nearly a hundred generations. And you may explain yourself as much as you will, and quote Scripture as freely as you please, still you must work against suspicions which you have excited. Your christian name and manner may conciliate his attention. Yet if he be an intelligent man, who knows the history of your view of human nature, he will probably, in kindness, forget all that as fast as he hears it, and put any gospel which you may offer into what he thinks is better philosophic connection and company. But in very many cases he will not hear you at all, or will hear only your Democritic philosophy, and report you accordingly when he has heard you through.

I say these things not to create any prejudice whatever, but simply to state the facts which exist. And we thus shall come, soon, to the biblical question—Will Moses, and the prophets, and the apostles, sustain you in the materialist view, and help you to redeem it from the reproach it has so long suffered, and to honor it among intelligent and candid christians?

But I have not yet counted all the cost,—all the expense which this view incurs in the minds of many. I will reckon this up in another chapter, and we will then look in the Bible to see if we are able to pay it. C. F. H.

Helps and Hindrances to Faith.

God has made faith the condition of salvation. "By grace are ye saved, through faith." Whatever, then, has a tendency to obstruct the operation of faith, or to help its exercise, is no small matter. Originally, faith was a law—an element of our nature; sin only has crippled and destroyed it. Behold the little child, how confiding its spirit. The parent, it may be, takes it through scenes of danger and death, by sea and by land. There is no fear in that little heart. Just so the holy soul; like a little child, it depends and trusts in the love and power of Jesus to save and preserve from all sin, and to direct and sustain in the performance of every duty.

But previous to the attainment of a perfect, child-like faith, the mind passes through many conflicts with sin and unbelief. We have exclaimed, "O how shall I believe? it seems the hardest thing in the world to believe, and to receive the righteousness which is by faith." Why is it thus? We answer; there are hindrances which must be removed; they are not with God, however. No! God is inviting, commanding, encouraging us to acts of faith. Yea, we might add, he is tempting us to their exercise by offering all the treasures of his grace and glory, saying, "Only believe," "all is yours," "all things are possible to him that believeth."

But the hindrances are in us. "If I regard iniquity in my heart," says the Psalmist, in his address to God, "thou wilt not hear me." Again. Says another inspired writer, "Ye ask and receive not because ye ask amiss, to consume it upon your lusts." We might quote other passages of similar import to show there are with us hindrances to the exercise of that faith which brings divine blessing to our souls, but these must suffice.

What is to be done in this case? We feel as though we were powerless. In a sense we are, but in another we are not. God does not require us to do what he has not given us power to perform. Without Christ we "can do nothing;" but through him strengthening us, we can do all things.

Let us, then, with God's help, search out and abandon the hindrances to our believing—to our taking God at his word; let us fully and forever renounce the world, the flesh, and the devil, so that we will not follow or be led by them; let us lay aside every weight that cumbereth, as well as every sin that doth beset us; let us deny ourselves of all ungodliness, and every worldly lust, and mortify our members which are of earth; let us take up our daily cross and move forward in the performance of our whole duty; let us form an eternal alliance with all that is good, and thus go on from victory to victory—from conquering to conquer. By so doing, we shall find that each step is becoming more pleasant and natural; each act of faith makes the succeeding one more easy; and by holding on in this way, faith at length becomes the law and element of our moral, regenerated nature.

God grant that both reader and writer may cherish the helps, and avoid the hindrances to true christian faith.

"I know that my Redeemer lives;
He lives, to bless me with his love;
He lives, to plead for me above;
He lives, my hungry soul to feed;
He lives, to help in time of need."

The Stumbling of Israel.

BRO. GRANT:—What Mr. Helper calls the "coming crisis of the South," and what Mr. Seward calls the "Irrepressible conflict," in regard to slavery, or politics, may affect our whole country, and probably will convulse and shake our whole body politic. But what are all these turmoils and a thousand like them, in comparison, to the one your paper contemplates; yet how few there are, who seem to understand the nature of the coming crisis, and the preparation necessary to meet it. To meet it in all its important developments and bearings—a "crisis" that will not only affect our own nation, but the whole world; every nation, kingdom and people under the whole heavens; and will revolutionize in its time our globe; and things that have been wrong for centuries, will then be made right. For Christ will come; he will reign triumphant; and Eden's bloom will visit and rest upon nature's tomb—before, Jesus has finished his work.

I have no set time for this glorious event; I never did have; but I think I see signs which cannot be mistaken, proclaiming "Messiah near;" and I write to urge the importance of a preparation on our part to meet Him and the solemn events of that day. It would seem that but little more can be given to, or done for, the world of mankind. They have had their call; their cup is nearly full; they are nearly ripe for the great harvest. Soon He that was seen sitting on the cloud will thrust in his sickle and reap. Sinners, no doubt, will continue to proceed in their own chosen way, just as they did in the days of Lot, or Noah, till the solemn period arrives—the event contemplated comes—the world's crisis is upon them, and they are hurried to the judgment of the Great Day wholly unprepared.

But I wish particularly to call the attention of a class that we may suppose are not in darkness that that day should overtake them as a thief, but are the children of the light, and of the day; that are not stumbling and falling like others. O! how many are stumbling and falling over Jesus Christ—this stone of stumbling to both houses of Israel. The former house—or literal Israel—stumbled over Christ's humiliation. They rejected the Babe of Bethlehem. They could never see their expected Messiah in the "Man of sorrows," in one so solitary and humble—so well acquainted with grief. Their expected Messiah would never be seen weeping upon the earth, even in view of the doom awaiting them; neither can they as a people see him during this his Spirit dispensation; they are still looking to the visible; therefore not interested or in union with his Spirit work—a work of Christ in taking out from among us Gentiles a peculiar people, and fitting them up for himself, for his own glory.

Here is where the first house of Israel fell, and through their fall salvation is come to us Gentiles. They were broken off by unbelief; and we were grafted in by faith. But they too shall be grafted in, if they abide not still in unbelief. "For God is able (and as willing as he is able) to graft them in again." And how blessed the thought that he will yet do it. They are enemies indeed for our sakes, yet beloved for the fathers' sake; and when the fullness of the Gentiles shall have come in, salvation shall flow to that people.

I was speaking in view of the stumbling of the house of Israel as a whole. God had his witnesses, perhaps seven thousand in Israel. There can be no doubt, there were others beside good old Simeon and Anna who were waiting, after the temple, for the consolation of Israel; and when Christ was presented, they saw in the infant Jesus, the fulfillment of Jewish prophecies. They saw indeed, a light to lighten the Gentiles; but the peculiar glory of that people Israel. For salvation is of the Jews.—John 4: 22. And through this medium there is a light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world, or that stands on probation for himself. And under the guidance and influence of this light, bestowed even upon us Gentiles; and by the faith of God in Christ which Abraham had before his peculiar call and circumcision, many, even amongst us, claim not only salvation before

Preludes by the Way.

What scenes of glory meet my view
As onward I my course pursue;
Bright visions of celestial joy
Beyond the reach of earth's alloy.
Such sounds of rapture strike my sense
As call my waiting spirit hence,
And bids me join the angel throng,
And mingle in their holy song.
O! if to humble faith is given
Such rapturous views of God and heaven,
What will the bright effulgence be,
When I within the veil shall see
All, that while below on earth
Gave to my joys their only worth?
Dazzling forth amid the throne,
There sits the High and Holy One,
Who in his majesty approves
The chosen objects of his love.
If while I travel here below,
Mingling with earth's scenes of wo,
Such joy and peace, such love, may rest
Within my care-worn pilgrim breast,
Leading me onward with delight
Through this dark world of moral night,
Unhurt, unharm'd, 'mid all the way,
My God my sure and only stay;—
What will it be when feeble sight
Shall be exchanged for glory bright;
When sin and doubt, and toil and care,
And e'en the joys of holy prayer,
Shall be exchanged for perfect bliss,
Supreme delight where Jesus is?
In this blest path of onward love
O! may my willing footsteps move;
Just like my Savior may I live
To labor, suffer, cheerful give
My substance, time, and talents all,
In sweet obedience to his call.
Thus would I live, and waiting still,
Rejoice to know and do his will;
And consecrated to my Lord,
Would know no impulse but his word.
This be my lot while here I stay,
And when I close my pilgrim way,
May I with all the ransom'd race
Unite to sing redeeming grace,
And with my Savior ever be
Throughout a long eternity.

A Sermon.

LIFE TO COME.

"Behold, I set before you the way of life and the way of death."—Jer. 21: 8.

These words were uttered more than two thousand years ago. They were full of meaning and interest then to God's chosen people, Israel; to-day, they are interesting to all the intelligences God has made; and every moral being the Creator has made must heed them in order to acceptance with their Author.

The words of the text were spoken by the mouth of Jeremiah, under the inspiration of the Most High; and for this, if for no other reason, demand solemn attention and reflection.

Jeremiah is one of the four greater prophets of the Old Testament—these are Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel and Daniel. Jeremiah became a prophet under the reign of Josiah, king of Judah; for we read, "To whom the word of the Lord came in the days of Josiah, king of Judah, in the thirteenth year of his reign."—Jer. 1 : 2. He continued to prophesy under the reigns of Shallum, Jehoiakim, Jeconiah and Zedekiah, to the taking of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans. It is thought that he died two years after in Egypt.

This prophet is outspoken and clear in his language; he denounces the heinous sins of his age, in plain, unequivocal statements direct from the inspiration of the Almighty; he delineates the dispersion of Israel and Judah, the demolition of their kingdom, and great metropolitan city, Jerusalem, by Gentile power and authority; but finally turns the subject, evidently with great pride, joy and buoyant hope, to the time of the ingathering of the whole house of Israel into their own borders, into the land flowing with milk and honey, as in days of old, when they served and worshiped the true and living God.

But this glorious and final return of Israel and Judah, is not to be until Gentile rule is rebuked, dethroned and demolished by the power of Him who rules the nations in equity and righteousness. For He, whose "goings forth are from everlasting," has announced to the world the startling fact, that he will hold an awful controversy with the nations because of their high-handed crimes against God and man, and to deliver his chosen people from their iron rule.—Jer. 25 : 13—33.

At this deliverance all heaven and earth will rejoice, and shout "Amen!" "The Lord Almighty reigneth" in heaven and earth. The angelic hosts of heaven will strike their harps of gold,—saints just waking from the long sleep 'neath the ground, will echo back to heaven the loud anthem of thanksgiving and praise to Him whose right it is to reign, and all nature will unite to repeat—

"Waft, waft, ye winds His story,
And all ye billows roll,
Till like a sea of glory,
It spreads from pole to pole."

Shall we be there? Shall we raise our voices with that happy band, that shining, heaven-like army? Or shall our hearts be filled with lamentations and wo? Shall we utter cries of horror, and finally sink down, down into that dark abyss of death—no more beyond it—no day to light up the eternal reign of silence,—

"Without one single star of hope,
Or spark of glimmering day!"

Heaven forbid! O Jesus, forbid! Sinners, fly, oh! fly now! to that Jesus—to his atoning blood. He will receive and pardon you, if you will but repent. Why longer delay?

This brings me more fully to the subject matter of the text. "Behold"—reflect, look, see. He commences the subject as though something all-important was about to be uttered. That is true. Hence the phraseology of the first word of the text. It is the announcement of an universal truth in the moral universe, that, "I," the Creator, the great "I AM," the only God, "set," fairly place, "before you," particularly Israel and Judah, and all men, "the way of life and the way of death;"—for all men, all moral beings, are traveling in one or the other of those ways.

I purpose to direct my thoughts to the main points in the text. Those points are, as I conceive, "Life and Death" in their broadest sense; and "the way"—means or course—"of life," and "the way,"—dark and broad way—"of death."

That the Creator has explicitly pointed out to us life, must be clear to every reflecting mind; and unless we seek diligently for life we are threatened with death. We are in the way to death, if we are not in the way to life. Hence, men are naturally in the way of death: for naturally all men are sinners, and "the wages of sin is death."

Where there is no law, there is no sin; consequently, there could be no moral beings in the universe, but for law. In that case man would not—could not—be an accountable being. He would be a law unto himself, and answerable to no higher tribunal. The apostle Paul argues this point clearly and forcibly, in the seventh of Romans. At the eighth verse the apostle inquires, "What shall we say then? Is the law sin? God forbid. Nay, I had not known sin, but by the law; for I had not known lust, except the law had said, "Thou shalt not covet." "Where no law is, there is no transgression"; "Sin is not imputed where there is no law"; "For sin is the transgression of the law."—Rom. 4 : 15; 5 13; 1 John 3 : 4.

The point is then clearly settled,—there must be law in the world before men can be held morally accountable. We now ask, has the Creator announced a law to the world? He has. Let us, then, "to the law and the testimony." "Come, let us reason together."

At the very commencement of man's career, the Creator announced to him, "Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." This was a law. This was the law of God; and from the moment that law was proclaimed, man became a moral being—became accountable to his sovereign Lord, the Creator. It is a settled point in the moral world, that a law must have a penalty attached, or else it is no law. In the above law you will notice the penalty attached to its violation is death; plainly stated in the words, "Thou shalt surely die"—if thou violate my righteous law. But man violated this law of God and the penalty threatened has been, and still is being executed, even upon those who have not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression. "Death is passed upon all men, for all have sinned." Or, to state it in other words, Adam's sin, in the garden, subjects us all to death, in consequence of being his by the great law of generation. As he was mortal and dying in his nature, so are we; for we cannot transcend those natural laws the Creator fixed over the universe, "When the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy." It is a law of nature that like begets like. Adam being mortal, corruptible, dying, his posterity partake fully of the same nature. Hence, we are by nature literally dying men and women.

Thus the words of the prophet come to us with power and force, "O turn ye! turn ye! oh, house of Israel, for why will ye die"? Sinners, it is equally addressed to you, for you are dying: "O why will ye die"? Christ has died that you might live, and live forever.

I come now to treat more directly of the terms "life" and "death." What is life? Webster defines it to be, "A state of being animated, or living, energy, spirit." Cruden terms it—"Power to move and do the actions of life." Hence, in man, I call it sentient existence. Need I ask, What is death? It is just the opposite of life. What is the opposite of heat? What is the opposite of being? What the antithesis of sentient existence? But one answer can be given. Webster defines death, "Not life, or the extinction of life." The Divine penman defined death to king Hezekiah to be, "Die, and not live"; and we have no account up to this date, that it has ever been changed. It is not, to-day, susceptible of a different definition. The experience of the world for nearly six thousand years, defines it (death) not life. Every living being is marked "die and not live." Millions upon the back of millions of human beings have experienced the force and power of, "Thou shalt surely die." Where are all the generations of the earth? That's the question now before the public mind of the nineteenth century. It is an important one. How shall we settle the point, "What is truth?"

We ask Orthodoxy, Where are the generations of the past? The theological reply is, In heaven and hell. Part of them are in happiness, and part in unending woe.

We ask the Spiritualist, Where are the generations of the past? The serpentine reply is, "Not dead," but in the spheres, progressing somewhere between spheres "one" and "seven." They are pushing on to a higher life.

We inquire of the Bible, Where are the generations of the past? and what answer do we get? Hear David, "Put not your trust in princes nor in the son of man." Why? Because "his breath goeth forth, he (the man) returneth to his earth." And what is the result? "In that very day his thoughts perish." Where is the man? In the grave—sheol—where there is "no work, device, nor knowledge."—Eccl. 9 : 10.

Job remarks, "Man dieth, and wasteth away: yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?" He then answers the question by way of comparison, thus: "As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down and riseth not: till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep." That is Job's theology of death.

Where did David go at death? To the land of forgetfulness. He declares in another place, "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence.—Ps. 115 : 17. Where did Peter say he was?—"The patriarch David is both dead and buried and his sepulchre is with us unto this day." He was not in heaven then, nor any of the spheres, for Peter adds, "David is not ascended into the heavens."—Acts 2 : 29, 34.

I might follow this point on still further, but my limits will not allow. However, let me remark, before I pass, that reason and facts join with the Bible answer in proclaiming the generations of the dead to be, not in heaven, hell nor the spheres, but in death and in silence!

But is there no future existence? Is there no life to come? I answer unreservedly, there is. This reverts my thoughts to the way or means of eternal life.

I here observe that Jesus is the way of life. "I am the way," saith he, "and the life."—John 14 : 6. This is tantamount to saying, "I am the true way to life." "There is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved.—Acts 4 : 12.

Once more. Our Lord declares himself to be "the resurrection and the life."—John 11 : 25. "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Rom. 6 : 23. But, dear reader, our course of life in this world must accord with the spirit and letter of "the gospel of the grace of God," in order to obtain the unending life of which God, through Jesus, is the only source. Hence we are exhorted to "strive to enter in at the strait gate." "If thou wilt have life," remarked Jesus to the young man, "do the commandments." Amen!

That is it, young man, young woman—young and old, that is the point; that is the test. Will you do Jesus' commandments? If you will, you may have eternal life. Where are you? Are you in the dark road and broad way of death? If so, turn your course. Turn now; do not delay. O! I pray you, do not wait another hour. May God bless these thoughts to your good, is the prayer of your servant in Christ.

J. A. SOBER.

For the Crisis.

Counting the Cost.

In a late number of the Crisis I showed how the materialist philosophy is in its history more or less connected with scepticism. It was the system of Epicurus, and those who know his system, know that by it he fortified himself and his followers against the preaching of Plato about an after life, which, poor as it was, was the best the Gentiles then had. Materialism is now also the boasted system of Feuerbach, of which it is claimed that he has given the most powerful demonstration, and in which fortress he hopes to shelter himself and his school against the duty of seeking a better life than the present. And I might show, and shall do so if need be, that the history of infidelity has been mainly, and by a large preponderance, a history of materialism.

On the other hand, I showed that christian materialists have not all held life in Christ only. Some of them have asserted the immortality of all men, and the eternal torment of bad men. A fact doubly instructive, as showing that materialism is no infallible guide to the christian, and no impenetrable shield to the infidel against the fear of a judgment beyond the grave.

I also showed that the doctrine of all substance existing in a certain form and shape is not peculiar to us poor heretics; but heretics with whom we have no dealings, the Swedenborgians who are so respectable that we despise them, hold it in common with us. Heresy makes strange bedfellows.

The whole state of facts presents a few considerations of prudence and duty, and a few suggestions of possible truth, which I wish to treat as I find leisure.

The first is, that in all our presentations of gospel truth, we would make that most prominent which is most essential and important—so plain a truth, that all honest inquirers will be pretty sure to see it; or so plain a duty, that all earnest workers will be pretty apt to do it. The distinction between things fundamental and not fundamental in doctrine is commonly admitted. But the same distinction holds in matters of argument. We would lead men to Christ by the plainest and surest road. If we try to bridge the chasm between unbelief and faith, by reasonings that are very open to criticism, we may jeopard the interests we would secure. On this subject Dr. Whately has said some things so pertinent, that I will use his own words. He says:

"The genuine and fundamental doctrines of christianity may become liable to the scoffs of some, and to the dread and disregard of others, from their supposed connection with such as are, in fact, no part of the gospel revelation. It then becomes a matter of importance to rectify even the mistakes which are not in themselves of any moment; since we thus (to use an expression of Dr. Paley) 'relieve christianity of a weight that sinks it.'" (Difficulties of the Writings of St. Paul, Essay VI.)

And we dissenters are specially bound to regard this advice. We have raised our protest against a very prevalent doctrine of endless woe. Why have we done this? Not simply because we regard it as false, though we are bound by our convictions of truth in all things; but we deem it such a false doctrine as has driven, and does drive, fair minded men away from christianity. Many christians hold the awful doctrine, yet it makes infidels. It is not incompatible with faith in Christ, as we see in thousands of instances; yet it is such a burden, not only to the faith of those who hold it, but to christianity itself, that we cry out, "However true you may think the doctrine, do not insist upon it as an essential part of christianity. You know that thousands cannot believe it. One of your own godly bishops has told you of eternal suffering, 'Imagine it you may, but you can never seriously believe it, nor reconcile it to God and goodness.' You may believe it, or think you believe it, and be a good christian. But you must allow others to be good christians without believing it. You know there have been and now are many such. Let there be more, if God will. Hast thou faith to bear the burden of believing eternal woe? Have it to thyself. Destroy not thy brother for whom Christ died, by saying he must bear that heavy burden, or be an unbeliever."

On this ground, then, we have protested. The gloomy doctrine is not only untrue, but if it were true, it would not be essential. Thrown in the path of one seeking Christ, it is a stumbling block that must be removed. If he shall ever believe it, he may do so not as a babe in Christ, but as one that can be fed with very strong meat.

Wisdom is meet for them that are perfect; or for those proficient, well advanced, and initiated in the mysteries, the deep things of God; and the doctrine of eternal evil is certainly very deep.

Now we say all this about a doctrine very prevalent and even popular. Regarding it as false, we offer instead what we think is true. A very unpopular truth, held by a very unpopular minority. And how shall we advocate and advance this precious truth, so it shall save the greatest number from infidelity, and bring most men to love Jesus?

Very clearly, we ought not to repeat the evil against which we protest. When we offer the glorious truth, let us not burden it with any unsafe, uncertain, or even suspicious company of argument. Let the apple of gold be in a picture of silver. Let us clear away every obstacle and remove every stumbling block which does not lie in the proper depravity and malignity of human nature. The cross itself is heavy enough; and to confess that one has been in error on the main difference is humiliating enough.

Let us, then, when we invite men to rest their hope of immortal life in Christ alone, present the doctrine free of incumbrances, and with no connections or surroundings save those which clearly belong to it. Whatever is essential to its argument and demonstration, let that be advanced plainly, boldly, and without faltering or disguise. And all opinions that may seem helpful but not essential to it, let them be mentioned accordingly. And if any have methods of proof which have pleased themselves but which are distrusted by others and disliked by many of those yet to be convinced, then let them not be pressed unless they are absolutely required; and even then let us show that we understand and appreciate the difficulties they involve.

Those who hold the materialist view, then, should never appear to be ignorant of its history. The appearance of such ignorance will be of itself prejudicial, quite as much as the fact that one holds such a view. When, therefore, a christian who denies the separate existence of the human soul would commend his view to other christians, he should frankly say:

"I am well aware, dear friends, that this view of man's nature and constitution has been held by sceptics generally, from Democritus and Epicurus to Comte and Feuerbach. And I can easily understand how you would look with suspicion upon it for this reason. I can sympathize with the difficulties you must feel on account of it. It is, certainly, a very disparaging fact, if taken alone. But if my view of man's nature be the truth of God's word, it is to be accepted and firmly held, nevertheless. Nay, if infidels have dishonored it with their assertion of it and their deductions from it, the more is the reason why christians should redeem it, and honor it by their courageous assent and avowal of it, with the just inferences from it. We do not disown the truths of mathematics because Satan holds them. He believes that two and two make four; but we do not therefore blush or falter when we say the same thing. The demons believe there is one God, and tremble; but we are not therefore in trepidation and fear, when we declare our faith in Jehovah. Just so, if this view of man's nature be true, we who believe in truth should maintain it notwithstanding its sceptical history."

I could admire such a speech, as I admire the revolutionary patriots who adopted and honored as a national air the "Yankee Doodle" which was invented for their reproach. I like to see persons boldly espousing a forlorn cause when they have evidently and fairly counted the cost. But let us compare the cost in the present instance, with the examples suggested. These patriots did not think of adopting that doggerel, until they had gained a signal victory. Fife and drum could easily honor the tune, when the cause was already triumphant. It costs nothing to believe that two and two make four; this has ever been rather a popular and respected truth, notwithstanding the devil's assent.

Again, if the demons believed there is one God and did not tremble, I think the case would be altered. The unity of God would then seem to be a favorite truth with them; or, at least a matter of indifference. But their trembling really does it great honor. We are very glad to believe and rejoice in what demons are afraid of.

Thus in the examples suggested the cost is nothing, or less than nothing, or was paid beforehand. But in respect to materialism, the cost is confessedly a serious item. This has been the favorite philosophy not of Sadducees only, but of infidels and atheists, for three thousand years. It has been held by a few individual christians, and once or twice by whole classes of christians; but the most famous instance is in the "sect of Arabians" who are known only by Origen's refutation of them. Now if Satan had for so many centuries been noisily saying that two and two make four, and this had been uttered by christian lips rarely, and their voices soon hushed, it would be a very unpopular truth. He who lisped it would be suspected as belonging to the devil's party.

But it is really very much so with the materialist view. Tell a man that his soul dies with his body, and he takes you at once for an infidel. This idea has borne infidel company for nearly a hundred generations. And you may explain yourself as much as you will, and quote Scripture as freely as you please, still you must work against suspicions which you have excited. Your christian name and manner may conciliate his attention. Yet if he be an intelligent man, who knows the history of your view of human nature, he will probably, in kindness, forget all that as fast as he hears it, and put any gospel which you may offer into what he thinks is better philosophic connection and company. But in very many cases he will not hear you at all, or will hear only your Democritic philosophy, and report you accordingly when he has heard you through.

I say these things not to create any prejudice whatever, but simply to state the facts which exist. And we thus shall come, soon, to the biblical question—Will Moses, and the prophets, and the apostles, sustain you in the materialist view, and help you to redeem it from the reproach it has so long suffered, and to honor it among intelligent and candid christians?

But I have not yet counted all the cost,—all the expense which this view incurs in the minds of many. I will reckon this up in another chapter, and we will then look in the Bible to see if we are able to pay it.

Helps and Hindrances to Faith.

God has made faith the condition of salvation. "By grace are ye saved, through faith." Whatever, then, has a tendency to obstruct the operation of faith, or to help its exercise, is no small matter. Originally, faith was a law—an element of our nature; sin only has crippled and destroyed it. Behold the little child, how confiding its spirit. The parent, it may be, takes it through scenes of danger and death, by sea and by land. There is no fear in that little heart. Just so the holy soul; like a little child, it depends and trusts in the love and power of Jesus to save and preserve from all sin, and to direct and sustain in the performance of every duty.

But previous to the attainment of a perfect, child-like faith, the mind passes through many conflicts with sin and unbelief. We have exclaimed, "O how shall I believe? it seems the hardest thing in the world to believe, and to receive the righteousness which is by faith." Why is it thus? We answer; there are hindrances which must be removed; they are not with God, however. No! God is inviting, commanding, encouraging us to acts of faith. Yes, we might add, he is tempting us to their exercise by offering all the treasures of his grace and glory, saying, "Only believe," "all is yours," "all things are possible to him that believeth."

But the hindrances are in us. "If I regard iniquity in my heart," says the Psalmist, in his address to God, "thou wilt not hear me." Again. Says another inspired writer, "Ye ask and receive not because ye ask amiss, to consume it upon your lusts." We might quote other passages of similar import to show there are with us hindrances to the exercise of that faith which brings divine blessing to our souls, but these must suffice.

What is to be done in this case? We feel as though we were powerless. In a sense we are, but in another we are not. God does not require us to do what he has not given us power to perform. Without Christ we "can do nothing;" but through him strengthening us, we can do all things.

Let us, then, with God's help, search out and abandon the hindrances to our believing—to our taking God at his word; let us fully and forever renounce the world, the flesh, and the devil, so that we will not follow or be led by them; let us lay aside every weight that cumbereth, as well as every sin that doth beset us; let us deny ourselves of all ungodliness, and every worldly lust, and mortify our members which are of earth; let us take up our daily cross and move forward in the performance of our whole duty; let us form an eternal alliance with all that is good, and thus go on from victory to victory—from conquering to conquer. By so doing, we shall find that each step is becoming more pleasant and natural; each act of faith makes the succeeding one more easy; and by holding on in this way, faith at length becomes the law and element of our moral, regenerated nature.

God grant that both reader and writer may cherish the helps, and avoid the hindrances to true christian faith.

"I know that my Redeemer lives;
He lives, to bless me with his love;
He lives, to plead for me above;
He lives, my hungry soul to feed;
He lives, to help in time of need."

For the Crisis.

The Stumbling of Israel.

BRO. GRANT:—What Mr. Helper calls the "coming crisis of the South," and what Mr. Seward calls the "Irrepressible conflict," in regard to slavery, or politics, may affect our whole country, and probably will convulse and shake our whole body politic. But what are all these turmoils, and a thousand like them, in comparison, to the one your paper contemplates; yet how few there are, who seem to understand the nature of the coming crisis, and the preparation necessary to meet it. To meet it in all its important developments and bearings—a "crisis" that will not only affect our own nation, but the whole world; every nation, kingdom and people under the whole heavens; and will revolutionize in its time our globe; and things that have been wrong for centuries, will then be made right. For Christ will come; he will reign triumphant; and Eden's bloom will visit and rest upon nature's tomb—before Jesus has finished his work.

I have no set time for this glorious event; I never did have; but I think I see signs which cannot be mistaken, proclaiming "Messiah near;" and I write to urge the importance of a preparation on our part to meet Him and the solemn events of that day. It would seem that but little more can be given to, or done for, the world of mankind. They have had their call; their cup is nearly full; they are nearly ripe for the great harvest. Soon He that was seen sitting on the cloud will thrust in his sickle and reap. Sinners, no doubt, will continue to proceed in their own chosen way, just as they did in the days of Lot, or Noah, till the solemn period arrives—the event contemplated comes—the world's crisis is upon them, and they are hurried to the judgment of the Great Day wholly unprepared.

But I wish particularly to call the attention of a class that we may suppose are not in darkness that that day should overtake them as a thief, but are the children of the light, and of the day; that are not stumbling and falling like others. O! how many are stumbling and falling over Jesus Christ—this stone of stumbling to both houses of Israel. The former house—or literal Israel—stumbled over Christ's humiliation. They rejected the Babe of Bethlehem. They could never see their expected Messiah in the "Man of sorrows," in one so solitary and humble—so well acquainted with grief. Their expected Messiah would never be seen weeping upon the earth, even in view of the doom awaiting them; neither can they as a people see him during this his Spirit dispensation; they are still looking to the visible; therefore not interested or in union with his Spirit work—a work of Christ in taking out from among us Gentiles a peculiar people, and fitting them up for himself, for his own glory.

Here is where the first house of Israel fell, and through their fall salvation is come to us Gentiles. They were broken off by unbelief; and we were grafted in by faith. But they too shall be grafted in, if they abide not still in unbelief. "For God is able (and as willing as he is able) to graft them in again." And how blessed the thought that he will yet do it. They are enemies indeed for our sakes, yet beloved for the fathers' sake; and when the fullness of the Gentiles shall have come in, salvation shall flow to that people.

I was speaking in view of the stumbling of the house of Israel as a whole. God had his witnesses, perhaps seven thousand in Israel. There can be no doubt there were others beside good old Simeon and Anna who were waiting, after the temple, for the consolation of Israel; and when Christ was presented, they saw in the infant Jesus, the fulfillment of Jewish prophecies. They saw indeed, a light to lighten the Gentiles; but the peculiar glory of that people Israel. For salvation is of the Jews.—John 4 : 22. And through this medium there is a light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world, or that stands as [illegible] for himself. And under the guidance and influence of this light, bestowed upon us Gentiles; and by the faith of God in Christ which Abraham had before his peculiar call and circumcision, many, even amongst us, claim not only salvation but an lationship to Abraham; and having the circumcision of the heart, they claim to be his seed also, heirs to the same promise, and as constituting another house of Israel, in a spiritual sense. Because Jacob, or Israel as an overcomer, having power with God and man, and prevailing, stood on the same gospel platform with Abraham and Isaac, his father, before him.

I have no objections to this view of the subject; it may be correct, for aught I know; and this people, thus selected from among the Gentiles, constituting the other house of Israel, who are now in their turn stumbling over the same stumbling stone and rock of offense as the former house before them. And to this point I wish to call attention particularly, for I fear that we, the Gentile church, are stumbling over the work or reign of Christ, where the Jew, or former house of Israel, will be sure to rise;—"For God is able to graft them in again." How beautifully Paul treats this subject in the eleventh of Romans. Faith in God's testimony sees them gathered, and knows there "shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, who shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob."

Most of your readers believe "The Crisis" refers directly to the second advent of Christ, the personal, literal, coming again to this earth of the "Son of man;" and those who believe the Bible must believe that he comes to take to his embrace, a people fitted for himself, and for none other; a people redeemed by his precious blood—subdued by his powerful grace, and brought into the most perfect union with himself by his blessed Spirit. The people themselves are called "The Bride, the Lamb's wife; the work of uniting them to Christ is called marriage; and the celebration of this work, the Marriage Supper. I would refer the reader to Matt. 22, and Rev. 19th and 21st chaps.

Now if we will turn to Paul's testimony in 1 Cor. 15: 51, 53, and 1 Thess. 4: 14—18, we shall find, great as the mystery may be, there is to be a class of human beings that will not follow the rest of mankind, who, with the exception of two, viz: Enoch and Elijah, have all slept before them. These two individuals were properly their representatives. The class I now allude to, cannot die,—they claim a victory over death, in and through Christ Jesus their Lord. They demand the right of living, because Christ their life, their living head, still lives; and this claim will be granted. But are they to abide in the mortal forever? No! They "will be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump." "For the trumpet shall sound, and we (this class) shall be changed." Enoch, the seventh from Adam, was one of this number. He saw the Lord coming to execute judgment, etc. The Bible testimony concerning him is, "He walked with God, and was not; for God took him"; and can any one doubt Enoch knew of his translation long beforehand?

Elijah represented this class on the Mount of Transfiguration, where earth's coming Monarch appeared in his beauty and glory; and the kingdom in miniature was presented to Peter and James and John; these were the three that were not to taste death until they had seen the kingdom of God.—Luke 9: 27. Elijah was taken up into heaven in a whirlwind, thus receiving his change, or translation, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye. But he must have known of it, and felt the power of translation, before the work itself took place; and I have no doubt he carried with him the evidence of it; or how could he have spoken of it to Elisha as he did?

What class of mankind, think you, will be so likely to meet with this change, as the class before alluded to, viz: "The Bride, the Lamb's Wife?" Does not her soul twine around her heavenly Bridegroom? Is there no affection, no bond of union, here? Has she denied, mortified, crucified, yea, slain herself in vain, to make herself fully ready for her Lord, and for none other? Has her Lord shed his most precious blood to redeem her; and does he lack power sufficient to carry his work through, and fully save her whom he so ardently loves? And cannot this bond of union, and the blessed effects of it, be known and enjoyed even here? And cannot the resurrection power diffuse itself through this whole Body? Who, think you, would Christ delight more to redeem and save, even from the power of the "last enemy," than those who love him thus, and where this love is mutual? Can the relation alluded to in the natural be felt and enjoyed among mankind, and can nothing be known of this relation, which is the closest, the sweetest, the purest of all unions, because it is purely spiritual and alone in God?

I do not ask these questions, entertaining a doubt in my own mind, for I believe this is the class that Jesus takes to himself in the manner above described, when he comes to earth; and they live in the spirit of translation or restitution, being all ready, and waiting for it to take place. They wait their Lord from heaven; and when he comes, as the long expected Bridegroom, they will exclaim, "Lo! this is our God, we have waited for him; he will save us." In this class the "love of God" is perfected. They wear the garment of salvation, the robe of Christ's righteousness, the fine linen, clean and white.—Rev. 19: Is this ... the oneness to be found embraced in the last prayer of Christ to his Father for his disciples, and for all those who should believe on him through their word.

I do most unequivocally affirm, that the bride is one and not many; and it is God's work alone that can bring together, and make but ONE out of such a mass of mind, variety of sentiment, selfish interests, affections, etc. Yet God's grace is sufficient, and Christ's power is adequate to the mighty task. His prayer was—"That they all may be one"; and one they shall be. For the same love, which is the only bond of union here, that binds each individual member to Christ their Head, runs through the whole body and binds each to the other in indissoluble bonds; for selfishness is not known in this work; and when this work takes place, the world will be convinced of the religion of Christ, and know that the Father sent Christ on his errand of mercy; and that his grace and power are sufficient to save to the uttermost all that come to God by him.—John 17: 23.

If the contemplated Crisis is so near; if coming events thus cast their shadows before; if there must be a preparation on our part to meet those events, and if God in Christ can fit up a people for himself; may we not expect that this work is now going on among us? And will not each one of us look within, and watch for himself the internal work of the Spirit? for within us is where we are to find this preparation to meet the Lord. If we cannot find it within, it is not to be found by us at all. We look in vain; and I fear many are stumbling and falling upon this one point. They are gazing too much at the outward,—watching the signs of the times and the events affecting our world, without at once looking for God's more important work (to them at least) in fitting up a people for himself; for Jesus never will come until the work I now allude to is completed. "His wife hath made herself ready."—Rev. 19: 7, and unless we are careful, and watch in the Spirit, and keep up with God's work; the wife may be ready, and changed in a moment at the coming and call of her Lord, and we left behind to mourn, with not even a part in the first resurrection. O! I fear many are stumbling at this stumbling stone, and falling at this rock of offence to rise no more forever!

(To be concluded.)

For the Crisis.

Journey West.

It was my purpose to have spoken of my visit to several places; but a class of circumstances existed to fill my time and exhaust my strength—thinking I could do both by delaying a little. Now the occasion seems to have passed away, and I content myself with naming my pleasant and profitable meeting in Meadville, Blooming Valley, and Edinboro, Penn. The brethren there became very much more endeared to me than ever before. They seem to be growing christians.

Blooming Valley has a new, good place of worship—have a large congregation, and a flourishing little church, in connection with Bro. J. T. Ongley. He was appointed an Evangelist, having labored with success in all that region. The Lord bless them.

Gladly would I name the labors of Bro. McClure, of Meadville, and Bro. Whittaker of Edinboro, and others, whose record is, I trust, on high. But, the Lord return all their kindness, and that of all with whom I associated in the precious cause of gospel truth, in Ohio. The Lord reward them, and bring us to his heavenly kingdom through grace abounding by Jesus to the chief of sinners. Amen.

Notes by the Way.

March 15th. Myself and family started for Springville, Wis., where we arrived the 22d. Preached seven times; found the brethren united as one man; think our visit was not in vain. Sunday evening we surrounded the table to commemorate the Lord's death.

While at this place I was warmly invited to preach in Viroqua. I did so. Many came out to hear. Preached five times. Sunday, April 1st, spoke on Spiritualism, and the Court House was so full that not all could be seated. Think many there were satisfied if the foundation of that ism, immortal-soulism, was removed, the effect would cease, and its true character would be developed. This is a great enemy to the truth; we need to be united, and thus better fight the battles of the Lord.

I left the brethren and friends in tears. May the Lord bless them for their kindness, and we soon meet in the kingdom. Arrived home April 6th.

This closes my winter's work. I must work now with my hands awhile. Since last Oct. 15th, I have traveled seven hundred and fifty miles by horse and buggy, preached one hundred and three sermons and baptized twenty-three; organized one church. This is but little done when I look at the field; but I have done all I could. I am a pioneer, and must endure hardness as a good soldier—do the work of an Evangelist.

On our way home from Wisconsin, we stopped by the side of the Monument rock, fed my horse and took the preacher's dinner by the wayside; and while there, climbed up the side of the rock and carved my name. I thought of good old Job, who wanted his words written with an iron pen; and I thought of having my name written in the Lamb's Book of Life, with all the blood-washed throng, more indelibly than in the rock of Badaxe Co., Wis., and be numbered with all those dear children that I have formed acquaintances with this winter. Pray for me, that I may be faithful while on the battle field.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MAY 2, 1860.

Relief for the Distressed; or, How we got out of "Doubting Castle."

No. 19.

We have examined twenty-seven Divisions and sixty-two sections of "Doubting Castle" for proof of man's consciousness in death, and thus far find the whole Bible opposed to the theology of those who sustain the "Castle." We have no expectation of finding any thing in the few remaining Divisions that will harmonize with the Scriptures; but we will give the Faculty a fair chance to state their positions.

When Bro. Burnham entered the twenty-eighth Division, he was presented with an exposition of a portion of Scripture, for the purpose of getting him around a passage which has exceedingly troubled the managers of "Doubting Castle" for about eight hundred years. It was the following:

"'If the dead rise not, then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished.' If the dead never are to rise, then the germ—the spirit—is, as well as the body, perished; but the dead will rise, and therefore the germ—the spirit—is not perished with the body. (63) If the whole man becomes extinct at death, then the whole man has perished; and there must be a re-creating, instead of a resurrection, for a future life. Is that it?" (64)

63. The effort of the "Doubting Castle" Faculty to get over this passage of Scripture, and harmonize it with their theology, is as successful as the attempt of a man to step over his own shadow. Paul does not say, "if the germ—the spirit"—is not alive, they "which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished," but, "if the dead rise not." It is not keeping a part of man alive that prevents the perishing, but the raising up of what is DEAD. As we have before remarked, the conscious or unconscious state of the spirit, has no bearing upon the resurrection, unless the spirit of man is the agent which raises the dead; in that case, Christ is not our Life-giver, as the Scriptures affirm, but man raises himself. This we know is not true.

We have before shown that the "germ" in the grain dies, in the process of germination, as affirmed by Christ and Paul. It will be noticed that the "Castle" Faculty admit that the "germ—the spirit" is perished as well as the body, "if the dead never are to rise." How is this declaration of theirs true, if the spirit is immortal, and is "the real man," who can exist just as well, and indeed better, without a body than with one? Why does not Paul tell us that the resurrection of the dead depends on the continued conscious existence of the spirit in man? He says, "I kept back nothing that was profitable unto you," but he has kept back every thing about an immortal, or conscious spirit, in man, that lives on when he is dead, consequently, it is not profitable. But he does say, "If the dead rise not then . . . they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are PERISHED." This is profitable.

Apollumi, the word here rendered "perished," is defined, "to destroy TOTALLY." There is not the slightest intimation that any part of man is alive when he is dead; and in case he does not rise from the sleep of death, he can have no future conscious existence.

The pronoun "they" in the passage under consideration does not stand for conscious spirits, that live after men are dead; but for the christians, the beings to be saved, that loved and served Christ, who are now asleep in death, and who are perished, if they rise not. "They" are not asleep in death, and awake in hades, paradise, or heaven, at the same time. Such an idea is absurd. If there was not another passage in the Bible that spoke of death and the resurrection, besides 1 Cor. 15: 12–18, the whole matter would be forever settled that our only hope of a future conscious existence, if we die, is in the resurrection of the dead.

64. In the sixty-fourth section, we find the same point that we found in another apartment (48th) of the "Castle," and hence it needs but a passing remark. It is not a "re-creation," but a resurrection of the DEAD. That is it.

We will now pass to the twenty-ninth Division. Here Bro. B. found the following:—

"How can Christ 'judge the quick and the dead, at his appearing,' unless all the dead rise at one time, or a part are judged, in spirit, out of the body? (65) Is it sensible to say, he will judge the dead while they are dead?" (66)

65. The Bible says nothing about judging the spirit out of the body; but it does say that "every man" is to be judged. If the body is only a "house" for the spirit to live in, then the spirit is the accountable part, and the one to be judged. Then the spirit must be dead; for he is to "judge the quick and the dead." Thus we see the "Castle" Faculty in the snare which they set for others. They say the spirit never dies; then affirm they are judged in spirit, while at the same time that which is judged is dead!!

66. It is not sensible to say, "He will judge the dead while they are dead," neither do the Scriptures affirm any such doctrine. All are to be judged after Christ comes into his kingdom; but we do not find proof that it is all done in a moment. We read, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power." The righteous are raised when the Lord comes, "but the rest of the dead lived not AGAIN until the thousand years were finished" (Rev. 20: 5); consequently, are not judged. Hence we read, in Rev. 20: 13, where events are described which transpire at the end of the thousand years, "The sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and (hades) hell (margin, grave) delivered up the DEAD which were in them; and they were JUDGED, every man according to their works." Here the point is made very plain, that they are not "judged in spirit, out of the body," but are first raised from the DEAD, and then judged. When death and hades deliver up the dead, they come to life; thus showing that while they are in hades they are dead; instead of being alive, as taught by the heathen and "Doubting Castle" theology.

As we find no proof yet that the spirit is conscious between death and the resurrection, we pass to the thirtieth and last Division of "Doubting Castle," into which our dear Bro. Burnham was taken. Thank the Lord we are so near through. We have now spent about five months in the old "Castle," rummaging over its musty tomes of error; and we think all will be glad to bid this famous institution, set up in opposition to our King, an eternal farewell. Let us now look into the last Division. Here Bro. B. was presented with the following:—

"Why is it said, 'Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints,' if there is nothing more of them till the judgment? Why not it be rather said, precious in the sight of the Lord is the future existence of his saints? (67)

67. The very fact that they are to have a future existence, is a reason why their death should be precious. It is not a matter of indifference to our kind Savior. He, like a dear friend, administers sweet comfort, even to the expiring breath. Observe it reads, "the death of his saints." What is death? "The extinction of life." When will they get it again? Paul answers, "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear."—Col. 3: 4. Says Jesus, "Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming, in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation."—John 5: 28–29. That which is in the grave is the part which has done "good" or "evil." That is the part to be rewarded or punished. This shows that if there is a spirit that leaves man at death, it is not the accountable part, the moral agent, for the latter is in the grave, of whom Jesus says, "I will raise him up at the last day." In this passage, we again see that the saints are not raised till "the last day." Then the angels are to be sent to gather them, which shows that they have not been previously gathered to Christ.

Precious in the sight of the mother is the death of her child; precious in the sight of the bridegroom is the death of the bride. Is Jesus less interested in the death of his saints who are to become his bride when he returns? The bride for whom he laid down his life? Nay, verily, but "precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." We leave them to "sleep in Jesus" till "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven," when "the dead in Christ shall rise first." Then we shall have more wonderful manifestations of his love for his saints.

In this last Division, we find no shade of proof in favor of the doctrine, that man has a spirit which is conscious when he is dead. We have found, as we expected, that the Bible is not yea and nay, both affirmative and negative, teaching opposites, but presents complete harmony with the view that the whole man sleeps in the grave between death and the resurrection.

Notwithstanding we have examined the last Division of "Doubting Castle," we are not quite through with it yet. The managers have made a tremendous effort to keep our brother from escaping; and we hope earnest prayers from all the faithful will be offered for his speedy deliverance.

Castleton.

The good work of the Lord is still onward in this place, although the ministerial opposition is strong and continued; and in addition to this, cold-hearted professors, like the Pharisees of old, are continually spreading their slanderous reports to hedge up and circumscribe the doings of the Most High; but their puny arms are too short to cope with our great Redeemer. No effort has been spared to hedge up our influence, and bring the glorious truths of the Bible into disrepute. Some try to make people believe it is all mesmerism; others say it is only the common people that go to hear; while at the same time, some of those who have taken a bold stand in defense of our "blessed hope" were considered of the very first and highest class in society, a few weeks since, and their favor was courted by the very ones, who now cry—"common people." We really think consistency is still a jewel.

Last Lord's day, eight more were buried with Christ in baptism, making fifty-three in all. Several more intend to be baptized when the next opportunity offers. The opposition is so strong and bitter, that it has caused several prominent members to withdraw from their former church associations and go with the "common people," who, when Jesus was on earth, "heard him gladly." We can sing with a hearty good will.

"We're a christian pilgrim band,
Guided by our Savior's hand;
Soon we'll reach our Father-land,
No more to roam."

Revival in Hydeville.

Hydeville is a flourishing village about three miles from Castleton, on the Saratoga and Whitehall R. R., noted for its marble and slate works.

Our first two meetings in that place were held in the Baptist church, which was well filled with very attentive congregations. The minister and most of the church refused to co-operate with us, and were unwilling that we should continue to meet in their house; accordingly, a large school room was kindly offered us, where we have since held four meetings to this date, April 25th, and the Lord has awakened a deep interest. Several have been converted and spoken of the joy and peace they have found in Jesus. Some fourteen or fifteen were forward for prayers last evening, and many others are almost persuaded to be christians. Praise the Lord for what he is doing.

Those who think the doctrine of the sleep of the dead and destruction of the wicked detrimental to the work of God, if properly presented, would do well to attend some of our social meetings and hear the happy testimonies. One young man, a medical student, said, when he came to the place, he did not believe the Bible; but in consequence of hearing on these subjects, he had been led to believe the word of the Lord and embrace Christ who had forgiven his sins. Others, who have been among the most active in the churches, when they see these truths, love God and the Bible better, enjoy a sweeter peace of mind, and are more earnest laborers in the vineyard of the Lord than ever before; while those who oppose, are continually losing ground in divine life. We see similar results wherever we are called to labor. Why all this? Is Christ divided?

Given Up.

We learn that Eld. W. W. Clayton, with whom we had a discussion at Seneca Falls, on the punishment of the wicked, has renounced the doctrine of eternal misery, and says he is sorry the discussion was printed; if he was able, he would buy them all and burn them.

We would say, let them be scattered and read. Come, brethren, help spread them. Eld. Clayton gave Bro. Newman, the publisher, to understand that he should want two thousand copies, but has taken only about one hundred, which were given him by Bro. N.; consequently, Bro. Newman has a heavy load on him.

Important Discussion.

We have arranged to hold a discussion with J. S. Loveland, formerly a Methodist preacher, now a noted Spiritualist, to whom we referred in the Crisis a short time since, as saying that Napoleon III. is represented by the last head of the beast in Rev. 17th chapter; and that Spiritualism is symbolized by the stone that is to break in pieces all the kingdoms of this world and fill the whole earth.

Our discussion is to be continued four evenings, and be held at the Meionaon, Tremont Temple, Boston.

1st. Question. "Is human immortality taught by the Bible, science, and philosophy, or proved by Spiritualism?"

2nd. "Is immortality a gift of God dependent upon the character of the receiver?"

Discussion at Bridgeport, Ct.

We are to have a discussion on the subject of Spiritualism, in Bridgeport, Ct., with Dr. Lyon, of New York, formerly a Baptist preacher, commencing May 8th, and continuing four evenings.

Question. "Is it possible, probable, and absolutely certain, that departed human spirits can and do communicate with mortals in the form, or earth life?"

Dying Words of John Randolph.

"He suddenly roused up and exclaimed—'Remorse! remorse!' It was thrice repeated—the last time, at the top of his voice, with great agitation. He cried out—'let me see the word.' 'There is none in the room, sir.' 'Write it down then—let me see the word.' The doctor picked up one of his cards, 'Randolph of Roanoke'—'shall I write it on the cards?' 'Yes, nothing more proper.' The word remorse was then written in pencil. He took the card in a hurried manner, and fastened his eyes on it with great intensity. 'Write it on the back,' he exclaimed it was so done and handed him again. He was extremely agitated—'Remorse! you have no idea what it is; you can form no idea of it whatever.'"—Life of John Randolph of Roanoke. pp. 373–4.

Such were the feelings of a distinguished politician when the whole was summed up in one word—"REMORSE!! How different the christian's dying language, who sums up all his feelings in one word, and says—"GLORY." Let us all be CHRISTIANS instead of POLITICIANS.

For the Crisis.

Notice.

To the Readers of the Crisis:—For several years past, I have written "Familiar Letters," illustrative of christian experience, and the "blessed hope," for several periodicals; some of them you have read, and some of them have been read by other denominations. The favor with which they have been received, and the good effects which have followed their perusal, not only among Adventists, but other churches, has induced me to make the attempt to publish a book of "Familiar Letters," which shall treat upon christian experience, and the hope of the gospel. Among us there is a lack of books touching the first—among the several churches there is a sad lack of the latter. We have publications of any quantity, plainly elucidating our doctrine; would it not be well to have one at least devoted almost exclusively to the heart experience, the stirring up to living faith, the enjoyment of an indwelling Christ, the pointing out of Satan's snares, and giving encouraging words to the sad and doubting soul? And would it not be well, in connection with this, to show the nature of the christian's hope; to bring to view the inheritance promised, the returning of Jesus, the resurrection and glorious reward, for the benefit of those who have not the Bible hope, in simple language, not so much to feed the intellect as to touch the heart?

We know we have not the talent and education that many have to qualify us for the work; but we do know, from the warm hearted testimonies which are ever and anon greeting us, that the simple productions of our pen, touched as we trust with holy fire, have lifted many souls from the bondage and darkness of unbelief into the freedom and light of faith. In this way, a door is open for us to send to many a dwelling, beyond the reach of Advent publications, a volume that shall, in a different form, present before them the "blessed hope" which to us is so very precious. O could they but be led to see that the resurrection, and not death, is the door to immortality and the kingdom, methinks they would more ardently desire the coming King.

What will you do to aid in this undertaking? If I can obtain a sufficient number of pledges from those who will take books, at one third per cent discount, to encourage me, I will have it published. The book will be of a size to sell for $2.00 probably. Your sister in Christ,

Mary D. Wellcome.

☞ Remember it is dangerous to yield to the least sin, in order to be rid of the greatest temptation. The least sin set home upon the conscience, will more wound, vex and oppress the soul, than all the temptations in the world can do.

For the Crisis.

Acknowledgment.

Bro. Grant:—It is with pleasure that I acknowledge the receipt of a bundle of tracts which purport to have come from Bro. Hastings' Depository, but whether he is the donator or not, I am left to conjecture. Be that as it may, they came to hand timely; and in a few days after they arrived here a goodly portion of them were on their way to Pike's Peak, in the hands of a brother who will scatter the truth as he goes. The last we heard from him he was in St. Joseph in a Bible class, scattering the seeds of truth. May the Lord bless his labors to many along the plains and in the mountains, is my prayer.

Permit me here to acknowledge also the receipt of tracts from Brn. Chandler and Pratt, which have been distributed without money and without price.

The people have a mind to hear the word, and after hearing our feeble preaching, we tell them we have a few tracts treating upon the coming of the Lord, the judgment, man in death, and the resurrection, and they are without price to those that wish to read; and in almost every instance our whole supply of tracts is entirely taken. So the truth is borne in the hands of many, and may the Lord prosper it.

Were it in my power to remunerate those who have sent me tracts, I would gladly do it; but as yet I can only say to you, God bless you, and give you an abundant admittance into his everlasting kingdom. Amen.

Correspondence.

From M. Mathews.

My Brethren and Sisters:—To-night, here in my little room, where have passed the varied dreams of life, I feel just like writing a good long letter to you. Some of you perhaps may not be at all interested, but it encourages me much to know there are those who would gladly hear a word from the like of me. With many of you I could exchange places gladly. Canada is a deathly place for anything but those men that never die,—to these it gives life, through the agency of death. In regard to myself I must confess that my path has been crooked, and if I have "cut a dash," it has been sorrowfully curved. I find the saying too true, "Flesh is weak." At times it seems that God had given me over to the enemy; but I know this cannot be if I cling to Jesus.

O! pilgrims, it is want of faith that kills thousands. God will take good care of us if we ask it; by believing this we may pass along much more happy. Many of your names are written on my mind. I have noticed the out-gushings of your saintly hearts, as they have appeared in the Crisis, and how I have sighed for the day to come when I can greet you at home. My mind is bent on meeting many of you; no matter about the names. I may miss it, but it will be my own fault.

I wish more of the church would write for the Crisis. Let your light shine. I want to know how large a party I am connected with. Will you write?

And, by the way, I had made up my mind to have a treat from D. T. T., in reading his history of Adventists, together with a list of all our preachers. How interesting it would be to know more of ourselves. I not only want to know myself, but two or three things about my neighbors.

My mind has been following Bro. Spaulding in his rounds. He makes me think of the fathers. God prosper the seed sown on those islands, and grant that the waves of prejudice may not engulph it. Again I am thinking of Bro. and Sr. Mansfield, "off West." Let no one insinuate that they leave friends and comfort for anything less than obedience to God. Would that others would go and do likewise.

But what I think most of, and what creates envy, are those Wilbraham Jubilees. O that I could meet there once! How my eyes would wonder to see so many souls from East, West, North and South, and could I believe them to be all brethren! Sometimes, when reading our editorial accounts of these meetings, I lay down the paper and think I am in a literal wilderness; then I think of places like New Glasgow, where I had tight work to get more than two to sit with me at the feet of Jesus, and I think at such times that Danville is a little star if she cannot be sun nor moon.

Well, we will soon be at home. The weary ones of earth will rest ere long. The dead will live, and the living with them be immortalized. Let us be patient a little longer. And I pray God that we may be more actively employed in the promotion of his cause than ever. Let us live and work for God. "Stand up for Jesus" means something. Let us love one another, pray God for and with each other. If we cannot love one another, and forgive one another, will the world?

It cannot be that we are sailing in a wrong line. Most assuredly our vessel is homeward bound. Then let us cling to her. Never mind those little leaky boats that fly off without the Captain's commands. Stick to the ship.

Finally, be of good cheer. We are nearing the harbor. Sing away, seamen, while the storm rages and the thunders mutter; join your voices and sound out God's praise in tones higher than all. I hope to leave the beach with you in the King's chariot, and reign with you where we shall see Jesus. Let us get our voices in tune here, so that we can sing

"We're home at last, home at last!"

Pray for me.

West Danville, C. E.

From Benj. Spaulding.

Bro. Grant:—I stopped several days at Holden, having meetings most every evening. Brethren were kind. I enjoyed my visit. Returned to Bangor, took another bundle of tracts, and started for Hermon, six miles, on foot. Found the brethren depressed, discouraged; had had no meetings for a good while; stopped one evening and gave them a lecture, then returned to Bangor, where I met Bro. Corliss. Was heartily glad to see him. I needed a companion in my travels; trust he will be a true yoke-fellow. We propose to travel together for the present. When two go together, it makes a meeting in every family; we exhort, comfort, instruct, pray and sing. This stirs them up, and they will come out to meeting.

Spent our first Sabbath together in Bangor. Gave three lectures—good attention—interesting congregation. The brethren in Bangor are awake and engaged, firm in the faith, coming up well.

Monday morning, bright and early, you might have seen Bro. Corliss and myself, with carpet bag and a large bundle of tracts in our hands, walking along, talking by the way, something as the disciples did as they went to Emmaus, though not sad as were they. We had eight miles before us. Bro. C. blistered his feet,—did not stand the journey so well as his old companion, who has got used to it. Thank the Lord, though I am sixty years old, I can walk with the young men.

We found the brethren at Orrington disheartened,—had had no meetings for a long time. We proposed a meeting; they looked sad at the proposal, doubted our getting enough together to make a meeting, and seemed to tremble in view of a failure; but we felt like making an effort, and did, visiting most all the advent families, found them firm in the faith, but discouraged. At the first meeting there were about fifteen. Bro. Corliss addressed them on a very appropriate subject.—Heb. 11: 27,—"For he endured, as seeing Him who is invisible."

We continued meetings every evening through the week, and soon the little cloud as large as a man's hand was seen; yes, and it grew larger every meeting. Sunday we gave three lectures, and had out most every one of that tried, firm, well disciplined company of believers in Bible doctrine; the old fires began to kindle. Some begun to confess, and there was a general resolution to arise from this lethargy. In the evening Bro. Corliss addressed them on the "Reason of my Hope." It was a very seasonable, and well-timed discourse, adapted to the state of that people.

We feel that God has blessed our visits in Orrington, and are encouraged to believe that the brethren there will arise to renewed activity.

To-day, with hearts overflowing with gratitude to God for his blessings, and to our friends for their hospitality, we have started on our way to Newburgh, leaning upon the Almighty arm, trusting in Him, feeling our weakness, yet willing to labor, and suffer, if need be, willing to spend and be spent for the cause. We have begun in good earnest to distribute our pile of tracts; they are well received. We enjoy the work. Praise the Lord, oh my soul! Bless him! Praise him! and let the whole earth be filled with his glory!

Orrington, Me., Apr. 22d.

From L. P. Judson.

Bro. Grant:—I have been spending a short time in northern Illinois, and would like to say a few things with reference to the good cause, as far as matters have come under my observation.

As to the country, it is splendid. It very far surpasses all my expectations concerning it. Compared with many other portions, it is calculated to remind one of the beauties and excellencies of the New Earth. May its fertile and broad acres, inspire generosity and activity in aspirations for the redemption of our inheritance.

I have been very kindly received and entertained by the friends where I have been. Though it is a busy time with farmers, and the evenings quite short, yet the attendance has been good. The general interest manifested has been a pleasant sight. Here is an interesting field of labor. Enough to employ several devoted and truth-loving men.

In Lindenwood I found friends in the persons of Franklin Blackman, Lewis Stocking, S. Miller and others, whose hospitality and kindness I enjoyed. I tarried here some four or five days including one Sabbath. We held meetings every evening except one. Judicious labors faithfully bestowed here, I have no doubt, would result in great good. May the Lord send them a shepherd.

At Jefferson Grove, I spent three days including a Sabbath. Bro. Rice, a Christian minister, preaches here occasionally, and is a warm supporter of our views of life, as coming only through Christ, and that by faith in him. This brother is of an excellent spirit, and seems to have a soul much larger than his denomination. He wishes to include all of the household of faith in his love and fellowship. I was kindly entertained by friends here also, and had a good hearing. I preached only on the Sabbath. Here, also, is a pleasant field of labor. Indeed, I have found few regions where I think a devoted man could find himself more usefully employed than in this vicinity. Within a circle of from twenty to thirty miles around, as many preaching places could be found as a man or two men could conveniently visit in from two to four weeks.

In days gone by, churches of our faith existed in a flourishing condition. But the desolating touch of the hand of sectarianism is seen and felt extensively. I mean Advent sectarianism. This, of all kinds, I think is the worst. The more steam you have in an engine, the worse work it will make when it gets off the track. The more truth a man has, the worse work he will make with an error when he imbibes one.

Brethren have been here and taken up points on which there is a difference of opinion among us, and urged them to the exclusion, to a great extent, of other, and, as some thought, more important matters, and have urged them with great zeal and spirit,—cutting off and sending to death and destruction all that did not receive their peculiar views. The result was, that some were frightened and troubled, not knowing what to do, but, wishing to be right, trembled lest they should be wrong. Some were baptized twice and some for the third time, that "they might be baptized into the doctrines of the kingdom." Others were disaffected and turned away. Others were disheartened. And the general work of the spirit of sectarianism is seen in the extensive desolations that prevail. May the Lord save the churches from any more such scourges.

But the remedy is not to prevent these preachers from preaching. They will preach and in their peculiar way. But, brethren, "be at peace among yourselves." Search the Scriptures and see if these things be so. If they agree not with the Word, let them and their sentiments pass. Better be silent than to distract the church with contentions.

But adieu. The Lord preserve you blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

Aurora, Ill., April.

From W. W. Boyden.

Will not the brethren who appoint through the Crisis to preach at Blackstone, Mass., please to inform us when they cannot meet their appointments, as the brethren here live three miles from the Blackstone depot, and we have been disappointed several times and have disappointed the people? We will always meet the brethren at the depot. We like to hear the blessed truth as it is found in the Holy Oracles—life and immortality through Jesus. We want preaching here occasionally. There are but few; but they are in a thriving condition. Bless the Lord. There is a considerable interest among the people. It is a rural district, and yet we sometimes have fifty persons to our prayer meetings. May God grant that more may see the truth and live.

Wisconsin Grove Meetings.

Dear Brn:—These meetings are appointed with a view to advance the cause of Christ in the West—not merely in a theoretical point of view, but practically. Let every praying saint come to these feasts, prepared to labor for the salvation of sinners, and the upbuilding of the Master's holy cause. Come filled with the Holy Spirit, and we will find homes for you. Be sure to come at the commencement of the meetings. W. Sheldon.

From E. R. Southwick.

Bro. Grant:—The Crisis still proves itself worthy of its patrons, and I am rejoiced to hear of its flourishing condition. I hope it may continue its faithful sound until the trump of God and the voice of the archangel shall awake them that sleep to a blessed immortality on the plains of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, then it will be needed no more; but now, while the war whoop is sounding, and the nations are rife in battle, its presence is greeted with a welcome untold.

I am glad that I can testify with others that the true light is gaining ground in Ohio, though the Bible is met with human wisdom and the doctrines of devils, yet truth finds a recipient here and there wherever it goes. Much of the former prejudice is giving away, and we may hope that ere long, unless our hope is realized before, in the coming of our blessed Lord, to see the truth prevalent throughout our land; the seed scattered long since, may now be seen springing up,—here and there a stock ripening into the fruits of the kingdom.

"What a man soweth that shall he also reap." How important then that we sow to the Spirit, that the end may be everlasting life. How can we hope to be heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ, except we do those things which will ultimately secure to us an heirship with Christ in his kingdom?

Towawa, Ohio, Apr.

Obituary Notices.

Fell asleep in Jesus, calmly and sweetly, on the evening of March 30th, in Worcester, Mass., Sister Lucy Parker, aged 41 years, after a short sickness of one week.

The disease that terminated her existence was lung fever combined with typhoid. Having been intimately acquainted with Sister Parker for about three years last past, I can assure all who care for her future welfare, that by a life of spotless purity, an ardent love for all the truth, and a humble devotedness in the discharge of all her duties to God, and to the church, and to her fellow men, she has through the great atonement secured to herself another, and a better, and far more glorious existence, which is peculiar to those who shall be accounted worthy to "obtain the resurrection from the dead." She closed her eyes in death in the firm expectation of gaining the long looked for pilgrim's home this present year.

For a few years previous, and at the time of her death, Sister P. lived in the family of our beloved brother in Christ, Elder J. Hemenway, who, together with the church of God worshiping at Warren Hall, of which she was a most worthy member, deeply mourn the loss they have sustained; but as they know that she will sleep but a few days, they do not mourn without hope. Her naturally amiable disposition, made most heavenly serene by the religion of Christ, shone like a star of light in the circle of her intimate friends, who alone could know her real worth, and carried conviction to all hearts that she had the mind of Christ. She made no noisy protestations, but in a meek and quiet manner she honored God in all her deportment. Her faith depended upon no change of circumstances, but she believed God, and it was imputed to her for righteousness, and was a steady burning light to cheer her in every dark hour of her pilgrimage, and it has secured to her the life that is to come, for though she sleeps, she nevertheless is in the life giving plan of God, and when that plan shall bring up its children in immortal life, Lucy will stand among them fully redeemed, to die no more. A discourse was preached at her funeral by Elder A. Ross, from Ps. 17: 15. S. W. Bishop.

Died, in Pittsford, Butler Co., Iowa, Jan 20th, 1860, of inflammation of the lungs and liver, Homer Eugene, only son of Henry H and Mary Janes, aged six years and eight months.

Thus we are called, with three daughters, in sadness and deep lamentation to mourn the loss of our beloved child and brother, but, thank God, we sorrow not as others which have no hope, for we verily believe that he is safely resting in the care and keeping of the great Head of the church, and although he now sleeps in death, he soon will come forth again as a special treasure of our blessed Master to a glorious immortality, to groan, suffer, and die no more.

In the midst of severe affliction we feel ourselves doubly sustained by the hope of the gospel, which is indeed as an anchor of the soul. Still we mourn, for—

Our home is drear at break of day,
And drear at set of sun:
For lo! the grave enwraps the clay
Of our departed one.
And vainly do our spirits sigh,
With yearnings deep and wild,
To clasp once more within our arms
Our dear, our darling child.
Cold death has snatched our lovely flower;
But lo! the day draws near
When even death shall lose his power,
And our sweet child appear,
All glorious with immortal life,
In Eden's garden fair.
O kindred dear! shall we all meet
Our dearly loved one there?

H. H. Janes.

William Wiltson fell asleep April 10th.

William professed the faith generally entertained by Advent people, but did not embrace it in the love thereof until prostrated on his death bed by consumption. He then seemed to love the truth as it is in Jesus, and a few days before his death told me his mind was at peace, that all doubts were gone. He loved the coming of Christ. His hopes of life hereafter were fixed on the resurrection.

His funeral sermon was preached by S. B. Munn, from Job 14: 14; "If a man die shall he live again?" Stephen Duvell.

Died, in Fair Haven, Ct., on the 20th inst., of disease of the heart, Wallace D. Tuller, aged fifty-two years.

Bro. Tuller's death was sudden. The circumstances of his death were as follows:

He came to my house about three days previous to his death, quite feeble, yet able to walk out a little each day. On the eve of his death he started for New Jersey to fulfill an appointment, and engaged me to carry his carpet bag down to the boat for him. We had only proceeded about half a mile, when he became much distressed in breathing. I saw he was failing fast, and ought not to go to New York that night. I persuaded him to return back to my house, and after he had rested himself a few moments, he started to return with me. After proceeding some twenty rods, he gave out. I assisted him into a house near by, and he only lived about fifteen minutes.

Some nineteen years ago our brother embraced the blessed hope of the second appearing of our Savior, and his house in Berlin became the pilgrim's home. He was kind to the poor, and sympathized with the distressed. Most of his time has been spent in the preaching of the gospel as he believed it. He made the Bible his study, and aimed to live as he professed. He was ever interested in presenting the prophecies of Daniel and of the Revelations, and urged the people to newness of life. He was opposed to sin in all its forms, and rebuked it wherever he went, presenting the narrow way to life. He leaves a wife and two children, and a large circle of acquaintances to mourn his loss; yet we have need to rejoice that he fell asleep in Jesus, and that he will one day awake out of sleep and sing the song of victory with all God's people.

Thus has fallen another pilgrim by the cruel hand of an enemy. O when will our Lord appear, and destroy the cruel foe? His funeral was attended by Bro. Mathewson. Discourse from Job 14: 14. His remains were taken to Middlebury, Ct., for interment.

J. E. Clark.

Died, in Blanford, Mass., April 5th, after a short illness of five days, Sister Delia Tyler, wife of Bro. Artemas Tyler, aged sixty-five years and ten months.

Her disease was typhoid fever, combined with erysipelas, which, causing mental aberration, rendered her incapable of conversing intelligibly with her friends; but she whose life was spent in the service of her Redeemer, could but be prepared to fall asleep in peace, and leave to the surviving friends the blest assurance that she sleeps in Jesus.

Sister Tyler has been a christian for nearly forty years. She was formerly a member of the Methodist church, but when Bro. Mathewson and the writer of this notice went into Salisbury to preach the gospel of the kingdom, Sr. Tyler was one who saw the light and embraced the blessed hope.

A husband and seven children are thus by the ruthless hand of the fell Destroyer bereaved of a faithful wife and affectionate mother; the church of a devoted follower of Christ; and though the ties thus rudely severed have left the hearts of the afflicted ones sad and lonely, yet are they comforted by the assurance that God doth not willingly grieve nor afflict his children, and that but a little in the distance, at the coming of Jesus, they shall meet her again who now quietly sleeps in him.

The funeral of our sister was attended by the Rev. Mr. Hinsdale, who spoke from Eccl. 9: 12; "For man also knoweth not his time," etc.

Thus another has been laid away in the dust to await the time when that which was sown in weakness shall be raised in power, when the mortal shall put on immortality, and sing the song of triumph and victory over death and the grave. May the grace of God which cheered our sister through life's pilgrimage comfort and sustain our brother, with the children and other surviving friends, and enable them to anticipate with joy and triumphant faith the morning of the glorious resurrection, when friends shall meet again who have loved. Ira Morgan.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[From Liverpool the 14th.]

There are conflicting accounts relative to the insurrection in Sicily. The government dispatches assert that all is tranquil, while other authorities report the insurrectionary movements as spreading, and a great agitation at Naples, where a temporary panic prevailed.

Palermo was in a state of seige. The combat there was very bloody.

The disturbances continued at Messina at the last dates.

At Palermo the monks fought like lions. Several were killed, and many were arrested. The whole nation is disgusted and desperate.

About two hundred men are working on board the Great Eastern, to get her ready for sea. It is expected she will be ready for her first Atlantic voyage about the 1st of June next.

PRUSSIA.

Berlin, April 12. The Kreuz Zeitung of this evening says: "In well-informed circles it is believed that a union will be effected between Prussia, England and Austria, in reference to the threatened interests of Switzerland, but it is expressly stated that no hopes are entertained that Russia will join this alliance."

THE KINGDOM OF THE TWO SICILIES.

Marseilles, April 17. The direct steamer from Naples arrived this evening, and brings advices from that city to the 14th inst.

It is asserted that on Thursday last a large bomb was thrown before the palace. The explosion shattered all the windows. No person was injured.

The revolutionary attempt of the 8th at Messina, commenced by the killing of two sentinels.

The movement was less serious than reported by the passengers of the Meandre, which remained at a great distance from the spot where the combat took place.

Flying columns were pursuing the bands of insurgents, who had taken refuge in the mountains.

It is certain that no preparation had been made to pass the Roman frontier, unless an attack were made against Rome by Piedmont.

Intelligence from Rome adds that the Pope had resolved to take no initiative in a war in the Romagna, and that Gen. Lamoriciere would only concentrate a corps in Umbria, between Rome and Ancona.

Marseilles, April 17. The official Neapolitan journals from the 10th to the 13th inst., inclusive, say nothing of the popular movement at Messina. Private letters merely state that the attempt to surprise the military posts at Messina had been repelled, and that the agitation was less at that place than at Palermo.

10,000 men were pursuing the insurgent bands.

Since the insurrection commenced, the government has sent into Sicily four battalions of infantry, two battalions of artillery, and a regiment of lancers. The Governor of Sicily had written that no more reinforcements need be sent, his forces being sufficient.

Naples, April 14. The insurrection has spread to Trapani, where the Provisional government and the National Guard have joined the insurgents. The Royal troops still occupy Palermo, which is destitute of everything. Great activity prevails in the arsenal at Naples. The embarkation of troops for the provinces continues. The agitation is increasing. The corps d'armee in the Abruzzi has been recalled.

For the Crisis.

In looking over some old newspapers recently, I found the following in the "American Patriot" of Dec. 1855; a native American, and political paper, formerly published in Boston, but now discontinued.

J. N. B.

The Voice of the Church on the Coming and Kingdom of the Redeemer: or, A History of the Doctrine of the Reign of Christ on Earth. By D. T. Taylor, Boston: W. Vezzie, 62 and 64 Cornhill.

This is an elaborate and critical production. The general subject discussed—the Millennium—is one of thrilling interest to the religious community. The author opposes the absurd view of some distinguished theologians, that the world is to be converted—the Millennium to come—before the second coming of Christ. He gives us the voice of the church on that subject; and has collected together an overwhelming mass of testimony to prove his positions. We have in concise form the entire history of the subject. The volume, besides, treats of correlative topics—such as the Coming of Christ, the Signs of the Times, etc. The whole treatise is deeply interesting, and is conducted, throughout, in a candid and devout spirit.

Grove Meetings in Wisconsin.

A grove meeting will be held at Springville, Badaxe Co., Wis., commencing Friday, at 2 P. M., June 1st. Call on Bro. Wm. A. Morse for further information. Several ministers are expected.

Also one at Ironton, Sauk Co., Wis., commencing Friday, June 7th, at 2 P. M. A number of preachers will attend. Call on Eld. G. W. Turner for particulars.

Also one at Fairfield, Sauk Co., Wis., commencing Friday, June 14th, at 2 P. M. Inquire for Eld. G. W. Barnes.

Also one at West Point, Columbia Co., Wis., commencing at 2 P. M., Friday, June 21st. Call on Bro. Ira Polley.

Also one at Kingston, Sauk Co., Wis., commencing June 28th, at 2 P. M. Inquire for Bro. Parsey Bush.

All these meetings will continue over the Lord's day. Several ministers will be present. Wm. Sheldon.

Conference at Burlington, Mich.

Providence permitting, there will be a conference at Burlington, Calhoun Co., Mich., commencing Friday, June 1st, 1860, and continue over Lord's day following. Bro. and Sr. Seymour, Brn. E. Miller, Jr., and Cheesbrough will be present to preach the word. We also extend a cordial invitation to Bro. and Sr. Mansfield to meet with us and assist in preaching the word of life. We expect brethren and sisters from the surrounding country will meet with us. Come! Brn., lay by your work and meet us at Burlington. What we do must be done quickly, for the Lord is nigh at hand. For the church,

J. A. Sonek.

Maine State Conference for 1860.

Where shall it be held? Brethren who desire it in their vicinity should make it known to me soon. It is thought by several that June is the most proper time to hold it. We do not know the best place to meet, nor could we say it will be in any particular place, without the wish of brethren there located. Let us rally anew to the work, and prepare to do what we can the little time which remains. The Lord is at hand.

I. C. Wellcome, Secretary.

Richmond, Me., April 27th, 1860.

☞ Bro. George Morgan has removed from Cheshire Street to Plainville, Ct., where he hopes the preaching brethren will call as they pass that way, and find a home as usual.

Notice.

A conference of those who believe in the immediate coming of Christ, is to be holden in New York city, No. 24 Cooper's Institute, to commence May 9th and continue to the 11th day and evening. There will be lectures tending to give light on the near coming of Christ, with conference and prayer meetings, to promote a better preparation of heart for our work, and for the coming kingdom. All interested are cordially invited to attend.

J. V. Himes.

Notice.

Bro. Wallace D. Fuller, deceased, has several trunks, carpet bags and other things scattered over the country, among his Advent friends. Said trunks and carpet bags may be of great use to the administrator of the estate; and all who have them in their possession will please give immediate notice to me. Direct to J. E. Clark, Fair Haven, Ct.

Notice.

There will be a meeting of Shell Rock Quarterly Christian Conference holden in Marble Rock, Floyd Co., Iowa, commencing May 11th, in the evening, and continue over the Lord's day. Ministers and churches wishing to unite, will be there prepared by letters and delegates to do so. There will be grove meetings held in other places, if desired.

Peter S. W. Devo, Evangelist.

A Proposition.

To any one who will send us a new subscriber for one year, we will forward, post paid, a copy of our late discussion with Eld. W. W. Clayton, on the conscious state of the spirit after death, and the destruction of the wicked. And for a new subscriber for six months, we will send a copy of the pamphlets on "Soul" and "Spirit." With a little effort, a thousand names may be added to our list. Let every reader try to aid in scattering the light and truth. Now is the time to work.

Original Contributions.

For the Crisis.

"All in All!"

I am nothing, less than nothing, I am weak, but God is strong,
And the joys of his salvation well demand a triumphant song;
And in the gladness of my spirit, notes of praises [illegible]
Rejoice, for God is our salvation! great Jehovah, All in All!

New blessings every morn, and evening well deserve my songs of praise;
With loving kindness, tender mercy, has Jehovah crowned my days;
Wonder at his matchless goodness holds my heart in willing thrall,
I praise him for unceasing mercies, gracious Father, "All in All!"

No, not a grief can bow my spirit, for my treasure's placed above,
'Tis in the Lord, the Lord Jehovah, he whose sweetest name is "Love."
And when life's restless fever's over, changed for crape-hung bier and pall,
There still is left unfading glory, chiefest treasure, "All in All!"

I own for mercies never ceasing there's a fountain [illegible] above,
God leads me by the quiet waters, to "green pastures" of his love;
O God! I thank thee for thy kindness, when thy blessings I recall,
From thee alone come all my pleasures, thou, thyself, art "All in All!"

And I can thank thee for the chast'ning that thy love awards to me;
I know thou takest all things from me but to draw me nearer thee;
I thank thee that I know the reason why the gloomy shadows fall,—
To show me where alone is shelter,—bless thee, Father, "All in All!"

And oh! when sunlight's brightly shining, and its gladness beams on me,
O might I to the Psalmist echo that "my springs are all in thee!"
For joy would not be joy without thee, pleasure's cup would turn to gall,—
I've chosen thee my chiefest treasure, thou my portion, "All in All!"

For all the way that thou hast led me, in the step my fathers trod,
I thank thee for thy loving kindness, bless thee for thy chast'ning rod;
And songs of praises, songs of triumph, from my lips in joy shall fall,—
I thank thee, praise thee, bless thee, love thee,—thou, oh Lord, art "All in All!"

And when I've crossed the stormy Jordan, anchored safe beyond the foam,
I'll thank thee that thy love has brought me safely to the pilgrim's home.
The golden pavements of the city, pearly gates and jasper wall,
Are lighted with unfading glory,—God himself is "All in All!"

For the Crisis

The Great High-Priest.

"Seeing then that we have a great High Priest that is passed into the heavens, Jesus, the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession. For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin."—Heb 4: 14, 15.

We have here presented before us a very important, deeply interesting, and highly encouraging subject.

The first point which we will consider is, the person referred to,—"Jesus, the Son of God." We cannot rightly understand the great plan of redemption, without having a correct view of the character of Jesus Christ. It will not do to exalt him too high, nor abase him too low. If we magnify him to the position of the eternal God, the great self-existent and infinite Spirit, we place him above the position assigned in the Scriptures; and if we regard him merely as a wise and holy teacher and inspired prophet, we place him below it.

The text gives him his proper relation—the Son of God. Now it is evident that a son must of necessity have a father, and the father must have priority of existence. It may therefore not be unprofitable to inquire,—When did Jesus become the Son of God? Was it before his advent into this world, or at that time?

There are very many who believe and teach that it was not until he was born of the virgin Mary he possessed a distinct personality, and became the Son of God. That prior to this event there existed but one Divine Being, whose existence was from eternity, who never had a beginning, and never will have an end. That this Being became flesh, and dwelt among us and died on the cross, and then ascended to heaven. There are very great difficulties in this position; for, if true, when God came down from heaven, he was no longer in heaven; but Jesus Christ prayed to his Father in heaven, hence there were two. And we cannot see how a being can take upon himself a body, exist in a different form, and yet be the son of the one whom he is—the son of himself!

We take our stand-point here—Jesus was the Son of God prior to his advent to earth, yes, prior to the creation of the world. We believe that we can fully sustain this position by scripture evidence. It is not to popular theology we are to look for proof of any doctrine, but what saith the Bible? "God so loved the world, that he gave (not himself but) his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him, might have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved."—John 3: 16, 17. God could not send his Son unless he had a Son to send. He had a Son in heaven, and to save men he sent him into the world.

Heb. 1.—"God who at sundry times, and in divers manners, spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds. Who, being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high: being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they. For unto which of the angels saith he at any time, Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee? And again, I will be to him a Father, and he shall be to me a Son? And again, when he bringeth in the first-begotten into the world, he saith, And let all the angels of God worship him." There is a good deal of evidence confirmatory of our position contained in the above quotation. We will look it over again.

God hath spoken unto us by his Son. Here are two persons—the one who sends a message, and the one by whom it is sent. They sustain to each other the relation of Father and Son. This Son made the worlds (not world, but plural, worlds). The Father appointed him the heir of all things. He was made better than the angels, and by inheritance obtained a more excellent name. To none of the angels had God said, "Thou art my Son." The apostle describes his appearance: The brightness of his Father's glory—the express image of his Father's person. Can there be an image of a person, unless the person, of whom the image is the resemblance, has, or has had an existence? Can a man be the image of himself? We often hear it remarked, "That boy is the very image of his father." What do they mean? Why, that his form and features are like his father's.

In Col. 1, we find similar testimony in regard to Christ. "Who is the image of the invisible God." Was he the image of the invisible God when on earth? Was he the brightness of his Father's glory when clothed with humanity? It is very evident that the apostle contrasts his former exalted and glorious position, with his humiliation. He who was the creator, upholder and heir of all things, humbled himself. He who was in the form of God, took upon himself the form of a servant;—he who was the image of God, was made in the likeness of men;—he who was rich became poor for our sake. How wide the contrast between the two conditions. He was "the first-begotten," when sent into the world. He was divine, for all the angels are commanded to worship him. These truths are clearly taught in the langurge of the inspired apostle.

Turn now to Col. 1, and read the description of Christ there given, and see how perfectly it harmonizes with what we have already quoted. "Who is the image of the invisible God, the first-born of every creature: for by him were all things created that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones, or dominions, or principalities, or powers: all things were created by him, and for him; and he is before all things, and by him all things consist—who is the beginning, the first-born from the dead, that in all things he might have the pre-eminence. For it pleased the Father that in him should all fullness dwell."

Let us now make a brief application of this scripture, which, to our mind, conveys the most positive proof of the pre-existence of the Son of God. Here is one who has a distinct personality, prior to the creation of all things. He stands forth before us bearing the image of the invisible God. He stands at the head of all created beings, for he is the first-born; he is before all created things—for he is their author. Can you say that the great self-existent Spirit, who is from eternity, was born? Nay, verily! He never had a birth—he never was created; therefore the language—"first-born of every creature"—is wholly inapplicable to him. Christ is the "beginning of the creation of God," therefore may be properly denominated the first-born of every creature. He was the first created, is the idea.

Do you shrink back from the idea that Christ was a created being? Why so? Was he not the creation of a God—the Son of the eternal, the wise, the holy, composed of the same essence, possessing the same nature, the radiance of his glory, the image of his person? The Bible places him in this position; shall we "be wise above that which is written?"

I am a little surprised that a learned commentator should adduce as an argument against this view, that the apostle contradicts himself, if he meant any such thing; for he says that Christ was before all things, consequently could not himself be created! Such is the Dr.'s reasoning, but I have yet to learn the propriety of calling beings, "things." There are a certain class, I know, who label intelligent, human beings, "chattels and goods;" but the learned definer of words will not sustain the great linguist in his application of the sentence.

The word "for," in the passage under consideration, teaches us where to make the application of the term "first-born;" it shows clearly that it was prior to the creation of all things. Christ was the first-born of every creature, because he created all things. He must have an existence, in order to be their creator. "Who is the beginning?" Christ is "the beginning of the creation of God." He stands first in order. Did the Father have a beginning? "The first-born from the dead, that in all things he might have the pre-eminence." He stands at the head of the first creation, and at the head of the second; over those who have their birth into this life and this world, he has the pre-eminence, and of those who have their resurrection-birth to eternal life, and "the world to come," he is the antecedent. He stands at the head of the old and the new creation.

How strangely reads the closing paragraph, if all this language applied to the eternal God: "For it pleased the Father, that in him (Christ) should all fullness dwell." The expression contained in Heb. 1, "Being made so much better than the angels," shows his creation. He was made better than the angels; he occupied a higher relation than the angelic host. They occupy a middle rank; Christ the highest, man the lowest. When Christ was born of Mary, he was made "a little lower than the angels," so that by becoming a partaker of flesh and blood, he might understand the sufferings of humanity, and suffer death for man.

For the Crisis.

Good Tidings!

Bro. Grant:—It is a day of good tidings and I cannot hold my peace—three lovely sisters, in the prime of opening womanhood, "born" into the family at once. Two of them were neices of ours, who had been in the family a year, and the other was a young lady of our own vicinity who, some four years since boarded with us during one term of school, and became interested in the study of the Scriptures, and would gladly at that time have confessed Christ, but for her dear parents who were of the "Friends" persuasion, who do not see the efficacy of outward ordinances; she consequently, after the example of her young Lord and Savior, submitted to her parents until now, when they, still seeing the steadfastness of her desire after having attained her twentieth year, freely gave their consent—and indeed her only sister, a little older than herself, would have accompanied her, had not sickness of her father and her filial love kept her at home. We hope ere long to have the privilege of waiting upon her into the family.

And now, as in the natural world sickness attends such scenes, so it is at times in the spiritual. Over anxiety, unusual fatigue and exertion overcome these frail tenements of ours and we are prostrated. Thus it was with me at this time. The long-looked-for first day morning found me sick, having been wakened about twelve the previous night with a severe chill and fever. I gave up all hope that I could attend the meeting, and sent for my Ruths, as I call those dear young sisters, who have chosen my God to be their God, and who are ever ready to work for Jesus; and we made all our arrangements to get along without me, but blessed be God, it was not so to be. I was not to lose this "feast of fat things, this feast of wines on the lees; of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined," as the exercises of this entire day proved to me. It was one of the blessed days of my life—it was "better than a thousand;" let me rather be "a door-keeper in the house of my God" and hear the beauties of God's plan set forth as I heard them last Lord's day, "than to dwell in the tents of wickedness."

And now for the encouragement of the young, I will be simple enough to relate this matter as it was; and as I verily believe that the church is dying for want of this very "simplicity that is in Christ Jesus," may I be pardoned. Just before the bell rang, one of my most faithful Ruths came to my bed and said, "O! dear sister, I am so sorry you are sick, but we must make you well," at the same time taking my hand. Knowing her as I did I immediately apprehended her meaning and replied, "My dear child, do you feel as if you could pray with me?" She immediately knelt and offered up her heart's desire that the Lord would alleviate my sufferings, and give me strength to rise and enjoy the day with them. I at once felt a disposition to rise and use what strength I had, and trust my constipated lungs and aching head to my God.

With her help I was soon dressed and down stairs eating a bit of toast prepared by her hand, and before the second bell rang we were both comfortably seated in a well filled meeting-house, where all was ready to commence the services. O! I was so glad to be there, and it was so unexpected to me that it seemed like a dream. My heart immediately went up for God's servant that he would fill and clothe him for the occasion; and I had an evidence from his opening prayer, that he had an unction from the Holy One and was fitted up for the work before him. The very reading of the text caused a thrill of triumph in my soul. It was this, "And I say unto thee that thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church and the gates of hell (hades, or the grave) shall not prevail against it." Most glorious declaration of the Son of God, and so soon of fulfillment in a ransomed people from the power of the grave—their redemption from death. "O death, I will be thy plagues. O grave, I will be thy destruction." "Hath he said and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?" Yes, verily, it is as sure of fulfillment as if it were already done.

My interest rose with the subject, until at its close, in reply to a friend for my health, said, "I am well." O the simplicity and beauty of God's plan to save men, when it is presented as it is, by a workman that has skill enough to see its simplicity, and to hold it up before the people until they can see it. And the man that can do this the best, is the best workman, and needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. And I tell you if ever a man needeth not to be ashamed, it is when he is doing this very work; and, as our brother said a few weeks ago, when speaking of the holy warfare of the ministry, that it is the most glorious warfare ever waged by mortal man, and was sure of the most triumphant victory ever won. Therefore, let the servants of the Most High thank him and take courage, for great will be their reward in heaven.

But to return. God's plan in calling out a people dead to sin, to be buried with Christ in baptism before the world, and in this act to have the blood of Christ applied by faith in the full remission of all their past sins, to rise to a new life by faith on the Son of God, with daily access to him as a Mediator, should they fall into sin in the future, was set forth in its simple beauty; and never did the ordinance appear so significant to me as in the light of that discourse.

There was a great concourse at the water, which is a beautiful lake in our village—and it was a calm, lovely day, and everything conspired to give it interest. One of our wealthy citizens, who makes no profession, heard the sermon, and while witnessing the baptism was seen in tears; and another, known only to the one in whom he confided, sent Bro. C. $5.

In the P. M., we had equally as good a discourse from these words—"I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable to God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world;" but let your new mind transform your whole being, etc. He rose with these words,—"My life has been a failure," the dying words of a rich merchant, who had sacrificed his whole life to mammon. He very truthfully said, that man would sacrifice himself to something, and what more reasonable altar than that of his God. That this was a life-long work "How preposterous," he said, "for a man to sacrifice himself to the devil through his whole life, and then, in his dying moments, offer himself all unholy to God. It was a living sacrifice, not a dying sacrifice, that God required."

In the evening we met at our house for the breaking of bread, and at its close gave those who never had enjoyed it, the privilege of following the example of their Lord and Master, as recorded in the 13th of John. And when it was all over, we felt like returning and giving thanks to God, as did the "stranger," when he saw what God had wrought for him. Bless his holy name! Pray for these lambs, that they may honor God in their profession which they have made before many witnesses; and for us, that we with them may be found without spot with all the sanctified at his coming. Amen and amen.

Jerusalem by Moonlight.

The broad steep of Zion, crowned with the tower of David; nearer still, Mount Moriah, with the gorgeous temple of the God of Abraham, but alas! by the child of Hagar, and not by Sarah's chosen one; close to its cedars and its cypresses, its lofty spires and airy arches, the moonlight falls upon Bethesda's pool; further on, entered by the gate of St. Stephen, the eye, though it is the noon of night, traces with ease the street of Grief, a long winding ascent to a vast cupolated pile that now covers Calvary, called the street of Grief, because the most illustrious of the human as well as the Hebrew race, the descendant of King David, and the Divine Son of the most favored of women, twice sank under that burden of suffering and shame which is now throughout Christendom the emblem of triumph and honor. Passing over groups and masses of houses built of stone, with terraced roofs or surmounted with small domes, we reach the hill of Salem, where Melchisedec built his mystic citadel; and still remains the Hill Scopas, where Titus gazed upon Jerusalem on the eve of his final assault. Titus destroyed the temple. The religion of Judea, has in turn subverted the fanes which were raised to his father and to himself in the imperial capital, and the God of Abraham, Isaac and of Jacob, is worshiped before every altar in Rome.

Jerusalem by moonlight! 'Tis a fine spectacle, apart from all its indissoluble associations of awe and beauty. The mitigating hour softens the austerity of a mountain landscape, magnificent in outline, however harsh and severe in detail; and, while it retains all its sublimity, removes much of the savage sternness of the strange and unrivaled scene. A fortified city, almost surrounded by ravines, and rising in the centre of chains of far-off spreading hills, occasionally offering, through their rocky glens, the gleams of a distant and richer land!

The moon has sunk behind the Mount of Olives, and the stars in the darker sky shine doubly bright on the sacred city. The all-pervading stillness is broken by a breeze, that seems to have traveled over the plain of Sharon from the sea. It wails among the tombs, and sighs among the cypress groves. The palm tree trembles as it passes, as if it were a spirit of woe. Is it the breeze that has traveled over the plain of Sharon from the sea?

The last light is extinguished in the village of Bethany. The wafting breeze has become a moaning wind; a white film spreads over the purple sky; the sky is dark, the stars are hid; all become as dark as the waters of Kedron and the valley of Jehoshaphat. The tower of David merges into obscurity; no longer glitter the minarets of the mosque of Omar. Bethesda's angelic waters, the gate of Stephen, the street of Sorrow, the hill of Salem, and the height of Scopas, can no longer be discerned. Alone in the increasing darkness, while the very line of the walls gradually eludes the eye, the church of the Holy Sepulchre is a beacon of light.

A Hymn.

Father! I am weary hearted,
Lonely 'mid the world's unrest;
From earth trust my soul hath parted,
Troubled thoughts are in my breast.
I am longing for the shelter
Which my spirit knew of yore,
To thy fold again receive me,
Let me wander never more.

When I hear thy Spirit calling,
I can part from all below;
And these bitter tears now falling,
In that hour shall cease to flow.
Earthly fame and pride of fortune
Humbly at thy feet I'll lay,
Knowing that thy hand will lead me
Surely in thine own best way.

What are earth's most prized possessions
To the soul that loveth thee?
Thou shalt pardon my transgressions,
Thou canst make me strong and free!
Let me love and labor ever
With a trusting heart and pure,
Thinking how the blest Redeemer
Came to comfort and endure!

Never blindly turning from thee
'Neath the chastening of thy rod—
Looking, when the sky is darkest,
To the faith star—Oh! my God,
Thou alone canst see how deeply
Human hearts may strive and weep;
And the harp whose strings Thou knowest,
Let thy hand from discord keep.

By and by, when all the conflict,
All the feverish toil is o'er,
Then the true and earnest hearted
Shall rejoice forevermore.
There shall come no sad remembrance,
There shall be no dark distrust—
When thy morning light arises
On the pathway of the just

Wesley and his Preachers.

He prescribed the minutest rules of life for them, even such as concerned their physical habits. He found that some became "nervous" more probably by too much work than by too little, though he thought otherwise. He gave them advice on the subject. "Touch no drink, tobacco, or snuff. Eat very light, if any, supper. Breakfast on nettle or orange-peel tea. Lie down before ten; rise before five. Every day use as much exercise as you can bear; or murder yourself by inches." "These rules," he adds, "are as necessary for the people as the preachers." He allowed his itinerants, however, to drink a glass of ale at night after preaching. He interrogated them closely in his printed Minutes about their habits. "Do you," he asked, "deny yourselves every useless pleasure of sense, imagination, honor? Are you temperate in all things?—to take one for instance, in food: Do you use only that kind, and that degree, which is best both for the body and soul? Do you see the necessity of this? Do you eat no flesh suppers? no late suppers? These naturally tend to destroy bodily health. Do you eat only three meals a day? If four, are you not an excellent pattern to the flock? Do you take no more food than is necessary at each meal? You may know, if you do, by a load at your stomach, by drowsiness or heaviness, and, in a while, by weak or bad nerves. Do you use only that kind and that degree of drink which is best both for your body and soul? Do you drink water? Why not? Did you ever? Why did you leave it off, if not for health? When will you begin again? To-day? How often do you drink wine or ale? Every day? Do you want or waste it?"—Dr. Steven's History of Methodism.

Open the Pew Door.

It is told of an individual, now advanced in life, and distinguished both in the political and religious world, that when he first came up to London, to study for the bar, he casually (as men speak) entered St. John's chapel one Sunday evening. After standing for a long while in the aisle, and failing to get a seat, he felt vexed and chafed, and was retiring. One of the settled congregation, however, saw him going, followed him to the outer door, brought him back, and made room for him in his pew. The sermon that he then heard was instrumental to his conversion, and he walked from henceforth in the way that leadeth to everlasting life. The incident is not only encouraging to ministers, but instructive to pew-holders; the opening of a door may lead to the salvation of a soul!—Bateman's Life of Rev. Daniel Wilson.

[From the New York Observer.]

The London Christian Merchant.

BY REV. HUBBARD WINSLOW, D. D.

Instead of immuring herself in cloisters, and wasting tears in solitary and selfish lamentations over human sins and frailties, christianity is to go forth in obedience to her high mission into the very citadels of worldliness, making them at once her strongholds of defence and salient points of attack in subduing the world to God. Our Savior called his early disciples in the midst of their worldly avocations; nor did he, except in some special cases, require them to leave or relax their pursuits, but to consecrate all to his service. This primitive and divine method must be resumed and carried fully out. The most intense worldliness, the very focus of business must become the most intense christianity, the central home of the Cross.

When last in London, I witnessed a striking illustration of this in the mercantile house of Messrs. George Hitchcock & Co., near St. Paul's Cathedral. This is one of the largest mercantile houses in the great British metropolis. It was about 12 o'clock, the busiest part of the day, when a friend of mine and neighbor of Mr. Hitchcock called with me upon him at his store. I designed then only a moment's call, merely for an introduction—knowing the value of a merchant's time in hours of business. But he insisted on our stopping, and with a most cordial welcome, begged us to be seated. In a few moments he finished some business in which he was engaged with gentlemen at his side, and then seated himself by us. Seeing several persons waiting for an interview with him, I proposed to leave and call again. He replied, "I may not see you again, and I have learned to seize present opportunities. I have learned, too, that 'godliness is profitable unto all things,' and that a few moments spent in christian fellowship and communion with God, even in the midst of business, is time neither lost nor misapplied." He then read a few verses from the Bible, and proceeded to unite in two brief prayers.

By this time some fifteen or twenty persons were waiting for him in and around his office, but the remarks and devotions were in such good taste, so simple, earnest, devout, that they all seemed to be most favorably impressed. No time was really lost to them, even in a business view, for the ten minutes thus spent composed their thoughts and prepared them to do business with fewer words and with more directness and assurance. I was informed by my friend that Mr. H. often had similar seasons of devotions in his counting room, especially when strangers were introduced to him. After a few kind words, he appointed a time to see me more at leisure. At the appointed time I found him alone, and learned from him the following interesting facts:

It was then about ten years since he first obtained hope in the grace of Christ. He had previously pursued business on mere worldly principles. One of his numerous clerks, a very devoted and earnest christian, pursuaded a few of his companions to join with himself a season of daily prayer, making the conversion of their employer their prominent object. Mr. H. heard of it, and sent for the clerk to come and see him. The clerk confessed the whole to him, and made to him a respectful and earnest appeal in behalf of christianity. Mr. H. was deeply affected, and soon after became a c ristian. He then united with those young men in their prayers and labors, and soon a very precious work of grace extended over his whole establishment. He appropriated and furnished a large room for his clerks, providing a library and all conveniences for reading and study in the evenings. In this room all of them were required to assemble every morning and evening, for devotions. He also adopted the plan of closing his store at an earlier hour than before, to afford his clerks more time for self-improvement. This plan has since been adopted by several others of the leading merchants in London.

Some time subsequent to the conversion of Mr. H., the clerk who had been the chief instrument of it had married his only child, and had also become a partner in his business. A happier man I never saw. He had no desire to augment his capital, and gave all his earnings to benevolent objects. With what tenderness and significance did he repeat those words of Paul: "What things were gain to me, those I counted lost for Christ: Yea, doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellence of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord." "Never," said he "may I forget the debt of love I owe to Christ."

"All that I have and all I am
Shall be forever thine;
Whate'er my duty bids me give,
I cheerfully resign.
Yet if I might make some reserve,
And duty did not call,
I love my God with zeal so great,
That I would give him all."

* * * * *

After inviting me to visit him at his residence at West End, he directed a clerk to serve me in any way I might desire. At my request the clerk conducted me over the establishment. It was a magnificent model for all to imitate. The order, stillness and despatch with which business was done I have never seen equalled. Here in various rooms were over two hundred clerks filling out bills of sale and despatching goods to all parts of the world—to the United States, California, British America, South America, the Sandwich Islands, Australia, India, China, and in all those various countries were clerks and agents trained in this establishment, and doing business on the principles here taught. The influence of that mercantile house in favor of christianity and of honest dealing, is felt to-day in all parts of the world. What an amount of good accomplished, under God, through that one clerk, and through him by that one mercantile house! "Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth." Let no clerk, let no youth, however obscure his position, ever say he can do nothing for Christ. And let no merchant, pursuing a lawful trade, say that he cannot serve God in his business. He can serve God in the counting room as truly as in the church, and his religion is of little value in the one unless it also obtains equally in the other.

Christian Growth.

You have but just commenced the christian life, but I see in you the germs of all those virtues and graces which you are yet to possess. These small beginnings are to me like faint sounds of music heard in the distance at night. I cannot tell what is playing, only that now and then a waft of melody comes to my ear; but, at length, the sounds grow louder and more distinct, and as one instrument, and then another rises above the rest, I hear the clear tongue of the trumpet, the wild, wailing outcry of the spire-lifted clarionet, and the soft whisper of the flute; and, coming nearer, and increasing in volume, I recognize the air; and then, turning the corner of the street, there bursts upon me the swelling tide of Beethoven's harmonies!—Beecher.

What Emily Did.

"Mother," said Emily one day, "how can I do anything to serve God? I am not a man, and cannot preach. Some day when I grow up, I mean to be a missionary and teach the heathen. Or, if I were rich, I would go out in the city and give clothes and food to all the poor people; but there is nothing such a little girl as I can do now for God."

Emily had a good and judicious mother, who spared no pains to teach her little girl aright.

"You need not wait," said she, "until you are grown up for opportunities to serve God. To those who really wish and strive to serve him, he will show the way. It is not only great things which find favor in his sight. A child may find many ways of serving him, in little self-denials, acts of kindness to others, cheerful obedience, and the suppression of an unkind word and angry acts. Do not be discouraged."

That afternoon Emily's mother called to her, as she was reading Robinson Crusoe in the parlor, and said to her:

"Emily, I want you to go down to Aunt Grace with a message from me."

Emily did not feel much like leaving her interesting book, and it was on her lips to ask if Bridget could not go, when the words of the morning conversation, "your cheerful obedience," flashed into her mind, and laying down her book she ran for her things and hurried off. It was a stormy, snowy day. Aunt Grace saw her from the window, and sent Ann to brush the snow off her when she came into her neat room. How pleasant it looked, that room, with its bright, open wood fire, the pretty pictures on the wall, and the vases and nick-nacks scattered around where the invalid (for Aunt Grace was an invalid, and often suffered great pain) sat day after day, serving God in her patient waiting on his will and her cheerful resignation. Emily gave her the book and message, and then sat down to dry her wet feet.

"This day has seemed unusually long said her aunt; "it is so stormy and dismal out-doors that no one has been in to see me, and your face seems like a sunbeam to me. Will you stay and cheer me a little longer, and take tea with me?"

Emily did not want to, for dearly though she loved Aunt Grace, she was anxious to get back and read Robinson Crusoe "finding the print of the man's foot in the sand." She hesitated, but suddenly thought, "this may be one of the opportunities of serving God of which mother spoke." So taking off her things, she stayed, and soon was at no loss for amusement, for Aunt Grace had a great faculty of adapting herself to little folks. When tea was over, Aunt Grace said:

"How good my supper tastes to me. I think it must be your presence that makes it seem so, Emily—for when I sit down all alone at the table, I do not care to eat."

These words amply repaid Emily for her little self-denial, and as she looked on the pale face of her aunt, always peaceful, now lighted with a glow of pleasure, she was glad that she had not yielded to her first selfish thought of her own gratification.

Little Child's Prayer.

Jesus, tender Savior,
Hast thou died for me?
Make me very thankful
In my heart to thee.

When the sad, sad story
Of thy grief I read;
Make me very sorry
For my sins indeed.

Now I know thou livest
And dost plead for me;
Make me very thankful
In my prayers to thee.

Soon I hope in glory
At thy side to stand;
Make me fit to meet thee
In that happy land.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	[illegible]

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. Miles Grant, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

☞ Canada Subscribers have to prepay the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above: i. e., $1 will pay for [illegible] numbers, or $2.26 a year. The same for all the Provinces.

Praise to God Acceptable.

"Whoso offereth praise glorifieth me."

The christian's heart breathes grateful love,
At morn, and noon, and even
Its hallowed incense goeth forth,
Ascending up to Heaven;
And He who doth all gifts bestow,
Accepts this humble meed,
Praise from the fervent worshiper
Doth honor him indeed.

Though clouds may gather, and around
Are many shadows drear,
Yet on those clouds and 'mid the gloom
The rays of hope appear;
And songs of praise burst from that heart,
He cannot but rejoice—
In all he sees a Father's hand,
And hears His gracious voice.

O praise him! saith the humble soul,
His word is ever sure,
And through eternal ages still
His mercy doth endure:
Let sea and sky, and sun and air,
All things below, above,
Resound His praise who reigns o'er all,
The God of truth and love.

'T is thus that he proclaims abroad
The honor of his King,
And daily from a gushing heart
Doth these thank-offerings bring—
Better, far better in His sight
Than gilded domes that rear
Their stately spires, where Fashion's throng
Of worshipers appear.

Prayer.

It does seem as though this great privilege as well as duty was undervalued by many professed followers of Christ, and among those, too, who are looking for the return of the Savior. Some there are, though I trust the number is small, who repudiate the idea of prayer, either public or social, and indeed secret prayer, excepting those mental supplications that take no form.

"Prayer," say such," is the soul's sincere desire," and we are commanded to "pray without ceasing," therefore all form is superfluous. Then there are those who, although they may not oppose prayer in the sanctuary, or even social outpourings of the heart to God, wholly ignore the practice of family worship. I have heard such advocating very zealously the prominent doctrines of gospel truth, giving expositions of the prophecies that are soon to be fulfilled, and "contending earnestly" for these things, who yet never bow the knee at a family altar, nor even at the family table make an acknowledgment of mercies received, or give God thanks.

Now they may say in justification of this neglect, that these are mere forms, and as such are of no special use. But, where the heart is right, such worship will not be form alone. God will be honored, the family impressed, and a precious privilege enjoyed.

Again, there are some who advocate practically as well as theoretically the idea of public, social, family, and secret prayer; those who know what it is to draw near to God, and have communion with him, and who are conscious of a holy, peaceful influence after such interviews with the Eternal One, that is wholly undefinable to them "that are without." These "ask and receive" the very blessings sought,—often to their own amazement,—and then are truly ashamed at the littleness of their faith. To such I wish to suggest a few thoughts. To that brother in Christ who is sick and afflicted, and it may be pressed with want for the family who are looking to him for support;—to that lone widowed sister, upon whom falls the care of little ones, who scarce knows how to guide their feet through this thorny wilderness;—to the companion of him who is preaching the unpopular doctrines of a soon coming Savior, and life only through Him;—to the praying ones scattered abroad I would inquire, is there any reason why conquests in prayer may not be made at the present, as well as in former days? If Elijah's God is our God, may we not have like faith, and be as signally blessed in answer to prayer?

It is written,—"All things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer believing, ye shall receive." Now was that spoken to the disciples merely, or to all christians to the end of the age? I should like to have this subject examined and discussed, and the extent of our privilege in this matter made known from the word of God. If the faith of patriarchs and prophets may be ours in the matter of asking and receiving, why not avail ourselves of it? And if we may move Omnipotence by the power of prayer, how infinitely exalted our privilege, and how softly should our walk be from day to day, lest we interrupt the chain of communion between us and the Invisible.

Dunning for Credit.

DEAR CRISIS:—In addition to last week's "Counting the cost," I have made out a bill of "Further Expenses." But this kind of work has made me very cautious and calculating generally. I am afraid of running up too large a bill, lest it should be repudiated. And just now I have thought of a claim for services rendered in the common warfare, which I do not wish to have paid to-day, but simply set down to the credit of parties concerned.

I have stated my strong opinion that in defending the doctrine of life in Christ only, the materialist view is more a burden than a weapon. Before I further show how heavy it is, I will name a few facts concerning the literature of our argument; which I think will show that those writers who are not materialists, have been not only valiant, but successful combatants for the battle we hold so dear.

The works that have been written on our side will fall into three classes.

1. Those which manifestly dissent from, or oppose, the materialist view; or, the writers of which explicitly affirm the separate existence of the soul, though they may still hold the "sleep of the dead."

2. Books written by those who doubt or deny the separate existence of the soul, but who either say nothing about this view, or make no use of it as an argument.

3 Those works which rely upon the materialist view, and employ it in argument.

Beginning with the third class, I may name the writings and discussions of the respected Editor, the later works of the veteran pioneer, Geo. Storrs, the writings of Thomas Read, Z. Campbell, J. Turner, J. Blain, H. Grew, and in general all who oppose that which they call a "dual nature in man." Most, if not all who have thus served in the ranks, are American writers.

Of our English writers, I do not know one who may be ranked in my third class. The only one of whom I am uncertain is J. P. Ham, who I think is not materialist, though he denies the consciousness of the soul in death.

To the second class belong the "Six Sermons" of Geo. Storrs, the writings of W. G. Moncrieff, and the "Tracts" and other labors of H. L. Hastings. The two last named do not affirm the separate existence of the soul; and I do not know that they explicitly deny it. They may be materialists; but I do not know that they are.

To the remaining class, of those who hold the separate existence of the soul, belong H. H. Dobney, Edward White, Abp. Whately, Sir James Stephen, and the English writers generally. Also, Dr. Bancroft, Dr. McCullock, C. F. Hudson, and, in Germany, Dr. Rothe. My name, I see, stands nearly alone. Out of England I find little company except with the D. D.'s, and Edwin Burnham. Dear Bro. Burnham! how do you do? And I have just received a letter from a member of the bar, who has a work containing our view ready for the press. Which reminds me of a Congregational minister who is preparing another similar work. These gentlemen both hold the separate existence of the soul.

Well, I am not going to count the chickens which these three species of heretics have respectively hatched. When the great pay-day comes, each person will be found successful, and will be honored, I suspect, more for the christian love and christian temper with which he has argued, than for any other qualification. If we have not charity, we may solve all the mysteries, speak in all the tongues, and employ all the modes of the syllogism,—and yet be nothing, and do nothing.

But without attempting to assign our places in the triumph before the victory is won, I may say a word or two respecting past work, and the present position of the battle.

A glance at the literature of our argument, I think, shows that the "immaterialists," if I may so call them, have not lacked industry, zeal, or success. And if I were to speak of their number, I should show that for fifteen hundred years they visibly outnumbered the materialists. And Maimonides, "the Eagle of the Jewish Doctors," who was bitterly persecuted for this heresy, and was in point of ability, head and shoulders above all other advocates thereof—Dr. Rothe excepted—Maimonides was so far from being a materialist that we should differ widely from his views of the resurrection.

Of the second class of books that I have named, I may inquire whether the "Six Sermons," the "Pauline," and the "Old Paths," have not been very effective weapons in the warfare? Yet in these books the materialist argument is not employed.

Again, reading as I do all the replies made to our arguments, I may say one thing. Our opponents direct their blows most constantly and most confidently against the materialism that some of our friends rely upon. Two-thirds of Mr. Landis' book is argument not so much against life in Christ as against materialism. The Tract Society's stone cast at "Sadduceeism," is nothing else. The Presbyterian Quarterly for April gives an article of the same kind. And I might name other facts showing how the question of immortality is being merged in the question, What is man made of?—a question less important, and the answer to which decides nothing in the main issue.

Finally, I may state that I know some of the best preachers in the cause, who do not adopt the materialist view, and some of whom decidedly reject it. I have taken no special counsel with them that should account for my present writing. But they have observed the same things in general that I have mentioned; and while they would give the materialist view all that it can prove, they deprecate the prominence it holds in this country, as a burden to the general argument for life in Christ only.

The "credit," then, which I ask for in my "dunning" letter, is this: that in the Crisis the fact should plainly appear, that many earnest, if not able advocates of our faith have been not materialists; that the readers of our family paper should not look upon "immaterialism" with suspicion, as if it were a subtle enemy coming in to betray the fortress of truth. Let the "immaterialists" who are known and read of all men as defenders of our dear faith in Christ, have free share in the fire-side talk, without being disliked for their special heresies.

We have our own honest ways of reading the Bible; we have our own habits and laws of thought. We try to understand the views of others. Let ours be also understood. Let the different views I have named be talked over and settled or allowed, among ourselves, at our leisure. But let not one of these views, which costs more than half the stones that are thrown at us, and which is not held by our best friends across the water and in the past centuries, —let not this view appear as the main argument for our peculiar faith in Christ, to the disparagement of that which has done so much service.

The Kindred of Christ.

Matt. 12: 49, 50. In these verses, we are taught who is brother, sister and mother to Jesus. Those who do the will of his Father which is in heaven; the same is his brother, and sister, and mother.

In the present life it is much thought of to be related to any of high birth, such as queens, kings, or even men of wealth. But what is this in comparison with being related to the King of kings—one who has all power and authority in heaven and earth bestowed on him—even all the power of God his Father forever? High as is his station, even his Father's throne, he declares himself to be our Brother, but on condition that we do the will of his Father, which will the Scriptures record.

Christ was subject to that will. How often his precious words in the following passage are brought to our mind,—"Suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfill all righteousness."

There are different things to be learned from those words, worthy of particular notice. Obedience to God's ordinances is the fulfilling of righteousness. And the words—"becometh us"—speak of more than himself; even of all who would follow with him in God's commands. This is worthy of great consideration. If it became him, the Son of the Most High God, who was without sin; how much more us, poor, unworthy, sinful worms of the dust!

How often have we been grieved in hearing fellow sinners endeavor to fight against the precious ordinance of baptism; and when hard pushed exclaim, "O! that is only an outward ceremony; to have the Spirit is the main point." Consider the difference of that language from His who had all the fullness of the Spirit. Did he ever think of reasoning so? No, no; but bowed that sacred head, and went into the watery grave, doing the will of his Father.

It becometh all the lovers of the meek and holy Jesus to prove what is the will of his Heavenly Father, and to earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints. In short, contending for anything contrary to it, is to contend for the wisdom of men, which must be displeasing in his sight. By doing so, we shall prove ourselves brother, sister, to the Son of the Highest forever. Amen.

The Prayer of the Church.

Lord Jesus, come! the scoffer walks in pride,
Nor heeds the signs that speak earth's hastening doom,
And proudly asks the weeping, lonely Bride,
"Where is the promise that your Lord will come?"

Lord Jesus, come! as once from Egypt's land
Thy people came, then all thy works forgot;
So those whom thou hast led with mighty hand,
Are murmuring now, and say thou did'st it not.

Lord Jesus, come! for darkness shrouds the earth,
And lamps that once burned bright are waning now;
A few still count thy truth of priceless worth,
And on their dangerous path its bright beams glow.

Lord Jesus, come! thy weary Bride still sighs,
Still mourns in loneliness thy long delay;
And every breeze is burdened with her cries
For thee to come and bring her nuptial-day.

Lord Jesus, come! for thee the captive groans;
O break the chains that bind thy people down,
And to thy throne exalt those lowly ones
That tremble now beneath the tyrant's frown.

Lord Jesus, come! bid Death before thee bow;
O stir the lone depths of the silent tomb,
And clothe in beauty those dear forms that now
Lie mouldering there in darkness and in gloom.

Lord Jesus, come! with all our hearts we pray;
We long to rest where tears shall never come;
O hasten on the long expected day,
When all thy saints shall meet in one blest home.

For the Crisis.

The Stumbling of Israel.

(Concluded.)

In the work I now allude to, the forming of the mystic body of Christ, the making members one of another, there is something that will try the "old man" even to this complete crucifixion; for self must die before Christ can live in us, or we in him. Our position in this union of life with life cannot be chosen by us; it is the Lord's work alone; and we must yield obedience to it. In this finishing work of God, we shall find that there is neither male nor female, barbarian, Scythian, bond or free, black or white, or any other outward circumstance. But in this relation we are all ONE in Christ Jesus; and in this work we shall prove that if we are ashamed of Christ, his word, or his work, he will be ashamed of us before his Father and the holy angels; and unless we enter while there is room, the door may be shut, and we compelled to stand without knocking, but finding no entrance. It is the willing and obedient that eat the good of the land, but the disobedient and rebellious shall be devoured, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.

There is another point of truth in the work of God, over which I fear the so-called christian church is stumbling to their final fall, viz: the personal coming, the work and reign of Christ; which is the particular crisis now at hand. I rejoice, however, that the plan and work of God in relation to all these glorious events cannot be affected in the least by the belief or unbelief of man. Christ comes not by the wish or vote of the church or world; but he comes by divine right; he comes because he will; and he reigns by the same divine right, his own almighty power; and my whole soul says, "Amen, even so, come Lord Jesus!" O come quickly!

Those who believe in nothing more than a spiritual coming, which, when viewed in the grandeur and glory of that solemn event is, to my mind, at least, no coming at all, will, no doubt, be greatly surprised, if not confounded, to see their Judge descend and the dead arise at his call,—even should they be among them, should they have part in the first resurrection, should the second death on them have no power, should they live and reign with Christ a thousand years. God knows how much their unbelief in these glorious events will affect them. I do not. Therefore I will not adjudicate, but leave them with my Lord.

O! that men could see how tangible and real the coming of the Lord will be! The Bible testimony is, "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."—Acts 1: 11. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout," etc.—1 Thess. 4: 16. "For our conversation (or citizenship) is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ."—Phil 3: 20. "And they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory."—Matt. 24: 30; Matt. 26: 64; Mark 13: 26; 14: 62. "Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him."—Rev. 1: 7. "And behold I come quickly."—Rev. 22. This is plain language, certainly; and it would seem that none could mistake it, or pervert it, making it mean something less, or even nothing.

And it is just so in regard to the resurrection of the dead. Job declares, "Yet in my flesh shall I see God."—Job 19: 26. "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise," etc.—Isa. 26: 10. "Though he were dead yet shall he live."—John 11: 25. "Waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body."—Rom. 8: 23. Paul's testimony in regard to the body is—It is sown in dishonor and corruption, it is raised in incorruption and glory. It is sown in weakness, it is raised in power. It is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. Paul adds—"There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body," and affirms, "For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"—1 Cor. 15. I ask, can any one mistake this point? Can they stumble here? It would seem impossible. For if human language can convey ideas, then certainly we should think, that the 15th of 1 Cor. had made the doctrine of the resurrection of the human body as plain as language could possibly make it.

There is one other point of truth to which I wish to call particular attention. It is a point in which we all have an eternal interest, whether we are ready to acknowledge it now or not; many are rejecting it, and no doubt are stumbling over it. How very few admit the truth in regard to the work and reign of Christ after he comes! It would seem that they take it for granted that his whole work during his blessed reign must be done up in a moment, and never stop to look at Bible testimony in regard to it. If they did, could they fail to see that the whole weight of Bible testimony in regard to this glorious event, either implies or expresses time, or duration. Who can fail to see that "the stone which was cut out without hands," when it smites the metalic image, in the dream of the Babylonish king on its feet, doing its work with the clay, the iron, the brass, the silver, and the gold,—denoting the overthrow of all human governments,—was not at that time a "great mountain," but in its important and victorious work it became such, and filled the whole earth? And can any except those who believe in a temporal millennium, believe that the very first work, even the smiting of the image, will take place till Jesus comes?—Dan. 2: 34, 35. And do not kings and rulers set themselves against Christ, and have to do with him after God hath set his King on his holy hill of Zion? and will not the heathen be given into his hand? and will he not break them with a rod of iron, and dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel? Are not all the saints associated with Christ in this glorious work, according to the 149th Psalm? and is there no part promised to all overcomers in this blessed and glorious work, in unison with Christ Jesus their Lord?—Rev 2: 26, 28.

What else can we see but time implied while Jesus reigns, according to Paul's testimony, putting down all rule, and all authority and power, putting all enemies under his feet, even destroying the "last enemy, death, reigning like David his father and type, destroying and subduing all enemies, he delivers up the kingdom to God, even the Father, that God henceforth might be all in all.—1 Cor. 15: 24, 28.

Whenever Christ's blessed work is referred to in the resurrection of the dead, the event of the resurrection of the righteous dead always stands foremost in the order of time, however near some passages of scripture may seem to unite or blend them. —Rev. 20: 4—6; Dan. 12: 2, etc.

I affirm that the heavens never received Christ for the purpose of retaining him any longer than "until the times of the restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began."—Acts 3: 21. And when these times arrive, in the order and economy of God, then the heavens will again reveal him, to accomplish the work testified of by the prophets concerning him. The word "times" in Acts 3, means years, just as it does in Dan. 4: 16, 32; 7: 25, and also in Rev. 12: 14, and elsewhere in the Book of God. For certainly, the work which the prophets saw as the work of Christ, during his glorious reign, could never be accomplished short of many years; for they saw him not barely in his humiliation, as the babe of Bethlehem, the "man of sorrows," in a word—

"The silent Lamb to slaughter led,
The bruised, the mangled and the dead;"

but they saw him, also, in his exaltation, coming in his glory, sitting on his throne, and reigning, showing to earth who it is that has a right to reign; who is the only true and blessed Potentate, King of kings, and Lord of lords; reigning from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth, and who will give the kingdom, and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom, under the whole heavens, to the people of the saints of the Most High. And they saw also that all dominions should yet serve and obey Him.

Enoch, the seventh from Adam, saw the Lord coming with ten thousand of his saints, executing judgment and reigning. Abraham rejoiced to see this exalted day of Christ; he saw it and was glad. And why should he not be? for many promises that the Father gave him hang on the second coming and reign of Christ.

The apostle Paul saw this subject in the same glorious light, and uses the same words of the prophets before him, viz: "times," "that day," etc.; he knew that his own crown was reserved until "that day," and that none could be crowned until Jesus came wearing his own, and with his own hand bestowing the crown upon others. When Paul wrote to his Ephesian brethren, he had this mighty gathering work of Christ in his prophetic eye, and knew it would be done: "In the dispensation of the fullness of times." Note; he does not say time, but times; i. e., when the years had fully come for such a work. For Jesus had power, not only in this world or age, but also in that which is to come. Look at verse 21st. And when the apostle wrote to his son Timothy, he uses these words, "Which in his times he shall show who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords."—1 Tim. 6: 15. Did not Paul see the reign and work of Christ after he comes? and did he not write about it? and have we not sufficient reason to believe that his whole soul rejoiced in it?

It appears evident to my mind that both prophets and apostles, and all who had the light of God shining in upon them, not only saw the sufferings of Christ, but the glory that should follow. They saw him, not only bowing his wounded head and giving up the ghost, but they saw him lifting it in victory and triumph; and they knew that the lifting of his own head would be the signal for us to lift ours in victory also, being in union with our Lord; for death itself loses its power when the Prince of Life comes to earth to reign.

Much more might be said on the coming CRISIS, and the preparation necessary to meet the glorious One. For the Word of God is plain, the Bible is full of this glorious subject,—a subject to me above all others; and I am sorry to have any one stumble over these blessed truths,—stumble at the very threshhold of God's everlasting kingdom. I would not feel like pressing these truths on the minds of any, did I not know that there is no sanctifying power only through the truth of God. The Savior prayed his Father to "sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth," and until the children of God are sanctified through the truth of God, there can never be that union in sentiment and spirit, that oneness the Savior prayed for, and that God the Father so much desires. May he guide us into all truth. Amen.

Links of Truth.

BRO. GRANT:—There would seem to be a great deal of positiveness in many quarters about many things, where there well may be many doubts. Among the questions that arise we find that of "mind and matter." One says matter can do nothing; another, mind can do every thing. Matter cannot produce mind. Mind can produce matter. Therefore mind can act independent of matter.

I once thought I knew something; but when I learned "the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus," I learned that I knew nothing. So taking up the Bible, I sat down at the feet of the "great Teacher," and said, O my Master, I am a fool—teach me the first principles, the rudiments. And he answered me—Be child-like. So I began to study children. How simple they are —ready to believe and eager to learn; but then as they grow up, how wise they do get! even above what is written. And then I hear the Apostle of the Gentiles calling after them, as he did to the Corinthians (2 Cor. 11: 3), "But I fear lest your minds should be corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ." And then he cries out to the Colossians [illegible] losophy and vain deceit after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ." [illegible] fools gladly [illegible]

Why do, then, [illegible] the applies, [illegible] matter—go to the opposite [illegible] this ground [illegible] principles [illegible] ing or any other manifestation of [illegible] law, or principle, will there be? Do we not go to extremes? May it not be that that spirit can do nothing of itself, and matter can do nothing of itself; but by a happy combination of life and matter, subject to given laws by an all-wise Creator, the living organism produces the results intended by the designer.

Now there are things in the material world, which, if contemplated, will be found just as puzzling as the phenomena of mind. Who can tell why one plant will produce bread—life—and another poison—death? Both have the same soil, the same sun, and both have the same life, yet how different the result. Again, One vine will twine to the right and the other to the left. Is there any volition in the case? Yet matter here does do something.

But I shall be told these are the legitimate results of the laws of vegetable organization. True. Why, then, may we not study man as we study plants? For instance. There are the voluntary and the involuntary nerves of sense and motion. Now the organs dependent on the involuntary nerves perform their functions without volition, much of the time without our consciousness. The heart is demonstrated to have for its motive power that portion of the brain called the medulla oblongata. All, above, may be pared away, and so long as the centre of the medulla is left intact, the heart continues to beat, though sense has long since ceased. Again. Cut off the nerves of seeing, smelling, hearing, tasting and feeling, from their connection with the brain, and how are you going to get an idea into or out of that "living entity?"

When we do see in the vegetable world and in the animal (case of the heart and lungs,) that matter does something when imbued with life and subjected to a given law, without volition, who shall positively say that God has not so organized man from the dust that the other portions of the brain do not produce all the phenomena termed mind?

Let us hear E. L. Youmans on this subject in the closing part of a lecture delivered at the Cooper Institute, as reported by the New York Weekly Tribune of Feb. 25th. He thus comes to the aid of the Bible account of man's creation. His subject—The Linkings of the Realms of Matter and Mind. The italics are my own. D.

"And thus we emerge from this realm of physical discussions into the realm of mind. They should be [illegible] tion; they cannot be divorced without damage to both. Science carries us up by natural transition to the consideration of the laws and phenomena of mind. I would dwell with emphasis on this crowning aspect of my subject, for it is absolutely, in my opinion, one of the grandest and most prolific truths that has yet dawned upon human thought, the living unity of the mental and material universe. The heresy of humanity has been that of the separateness and independence of the mental and material worlds, and, as an easy inference, the idea of their disagreement, discord, and antagonism. They have been held as diverse existences, as alien entities, connected, or rather separated, by an unfathomable and impassable gulf of eternal mystery.

But in studying the human mind, we are not to take leave of the physical universe. There is no impassable gulf of mystery between the mental and material worlds. There are [illegible] in the universe. That universe is a [illegible] bound into a living unit, pulsating with life, an embodiment of eternal wisdom. There are no yawning gaps, no chasms of disorder—solutions of continuity in the universal plan—black blanks of [illegible] domains of atheism, where the [illegible] and orderly hand of God [illegible] reached. There remains [illegible] known and unexplored, [illegible] shutting in or paralyzing [illegible] it offers a boundless [illegible] the intellectual activity of the human race through infinite ages.

It [illegible]

domes, and battlements, among the clouds, and working by the balloonery of ethereal speculation—and with what result? After three thousand years of aerial exploring, not even one castle in the air where a crazy, sky-larking witch could get a night's entertainment.

Science has overthrown this false method. She has shown that we must begin with matter. She demands first a broad and deep foundation, rock-sealed, upon which all men can abide. What is it that most shocks and appals us in the past history and present aspect of humanity, and which weighs down the sensitive spirit with the heaviest burden of grief and gloom? It is the contentions, strifes, struggles, and hatreds of mankind; the conflicts, collisions, and wars, of sect and party, country and race. And what is it for which the earnest and the good of all ages have yearned, and the devout have prayed, and which the inspired have predicted in exultant rapture? It is that man might be at one; that the time of harmony and peace might come.

Now this has been a discord not of preference or desire, or innate tendency, or inevitable interference of passion. No! The motors of passion work with power, but not with necessary disaster. That depends upon how they are directed. For the deadly railroad crash, censure not steam, though it was that which did it. And though human passions have swept with desolating fury down the track of time, blame them not. It is the directing and guiding intellect that stands responsible, and the world's conflicts of measures and chaos of practice spring from conflict and chaos of ideas. But where has there been chance of agreement? Where any basis of possible union in politics? in philosophy? in theology? We blush to our very bones at the mockery of the question. Let them pass with their endless wranglings and petty schemes.

Science engages men with laws that never change, with principles that are universal, and which may be everywhere tested and verified. A scientific discovery is made, a new scientific principle is demonstrated, and all men, no matter what their country, government, race, faith, or language, promptly recognize, welcome and accept it. Here is a bond of union that shall strengthen with time. A platform upon which the world may be gathered. Never doubt that we are entering a new era." G. W. Stetson.

The Voice of the Church, by D. T. Taylor.

Edwin Burnham says:—"It is the BEST book in the WHOLE ADVENT LIBRARY, and the most interesting TO ME. It is and always will be good till the Lord comes."

Dr. John Cumming of London says:—"I think it eminently fitted to disarm prejudice, and show there is no novelty in doctrines some think very new."

Dr. Horatio Bonar of Scotland says:—"I like it and think it fitted to be useful. . . . I again express my approbation of the book."

Edward Winthrop, M. A., says, "The Voice of the Church embodies a vast amount of important information, and is fitted to be exceedingly useful."

David N. Lord, J. R. Graves, Moses Cummings, and various other editors, have commended the book most fully.

H. L. Hastings wonders why every reader of this paper does not send and get a copy.

Between three and four thousand have been printed, and there are a few left on hand. Who will send $1.00 and receive a copy by return mail? Who will send $9.00, and receive twelve copies? Address orders to H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I.

Correspondence.

From Sr. Caroline Tuller.

Bro. Grant:—Will you permit me through the medium of your paper to address a few words to brethren and sisters scattered abroad? With many of them I have taken sweet counsel in former days. They have wept with me as I wept, and rejoiced when I rejoiced. Their instructions and prayers have ever been a sweet remembrance. Often have I been moved to write them words of cheer, and as often have weariness, care, and home efforts prevented me.

Now, I wish to tell them, my precious mother, of whom they have often heard me speak, sleeps in Jesus. Since last July it has been my privilege to watch over and minister to her comfort. Intense suffering marked her descent to the grave, till the closing scene, when she rested in an easy sleep, as we supposed, but soon found it to be the sleep that knows no waking, till Jesus bids the dead arise.

My mother, quite a number of years since, became interested in the doctrines we love, by reading our papers and publications. She took them to her Bible and there tried them. The restitution of all things, the glorious reign of Christ, and life immortal only through him, she there found revealed. They became beautiful, living truths to her, and though much opposed, she embraced them with her whole heart, and has never since wavered. Papers and publications occasionally sent us, were read with avidity.

She ever had a great tenacity for life. Everything in nature wore a pleasant aspect. Her painfully wakeful nights have for years often been made cheerful by watching the stars from out her window, and sweet has been her contemplation of the power and wisdom of God in their formation, as she has often told us. The thought of closing the eyes upon all that was animated and beautiful, and lie down in the grave, was rather gloomy, but the hope of reanimation cheered her. There was beauty and glory in the hope of living again.

Several times during the day she died she told me she was not afraid to die. Jesus, she trusted, would give her life where would be no more pain, no more night. A few hours before she slept, I heard her, with clasped hands, praying—"Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly! Why are thy chariot wheels so long delayed?"

Precious mother! a life of suffering has been thine, but it is past, and soon a morning of endless glory will dawn for thee! Desolate is home without thee, mother; but may we remember thy instructions and live so as to meet thee where pain and sorrow never come.

Dear brethren and sisters, remember me in your prayers; and, could you spare time, thankfully would words of instruction and comfort be received. In hope of life through Christ.

East Townsend, Huron Co., O.

From H. H. Janes.

A word of encouragement to the friends generally. The Lord truly is with his people, and is blessing his truth abundantly in this western land, to the awakening and salvation of many precious souls, the reclaiming of backsliders, and the quickening of the brethren and sisters in the divine life; causing them to rejoice in hope of a speedy redemption at the coming of our glorious, immortal King, to give us eternal life in the everlasting kingdom, where sickness, sorrow, pain and death shall be felt and feared no more. O Lord, hasten the glad day, and gather thy mourning exiles home, is our humble prayer.

We commenced a meeting in the vicinity of Bro C. Churchill's, who lives in the south part of the Co., about the first of Jan. last, and as the result had the pleasure of baptizing nineteen and receiving twenty-one individuals into the bosom of the church. Bro. C. rendered us much aid in our meetings. After we closed our labors there, we immediately commenced a protracted effort in our own vicinity, which also resulted in great good, twenty-one were baptized and twenty-three added to the church. We expect soon to have a Sabbath school started among us.

Other ministering brethren in different parts of the land are also having similar success. Thus light and truth are spreading, and calls for labor are multiplying. May the Lord of the harvest send forth more laborers into his vineyard.

Pittsford, Iowa, Apr.

From Jno. McKee.

Bro. Grant.—When I receive the welcome visits of the Crisis, I am encouraged by reading the letters from the brethren scattered abroad, hearing that the work of the Lord is prospering, and the truth advancing. I am thankful that the scales of superstition have fallen from my bewildered vision, and that I have been led to embrace the truth.

I am almost alone in the belief of the speedy advent of Christ and the literal destruction of the wicked. I have deprived myself of the luxurious weed, that I might invest what I paid for it in books and tracts to circulate among my friends and neighbors.

Bro. H. L. Hastings has supplied me out of the Tract Fund for the West. I assure you his name is a household word with us, notwithstanding he is called an infidel by some of our modern theologians. One of our members of the M. E. Society said publicly in the class-room, that those tracts were got up in hell and the devil was the father of them. Such is the spirit of persecution against truth. Some have compared them with scripture and are throwing their tradition to the winds.

Had we a good brother to dispense to us a portion of meat in due season, we think much good might be done in the name of Christ. Truly the harvest is great and the laborers are few.

Those of us who have embraced the doctrine of the speedy coming of Christ, unconscious state of the dead, and literal destruction of the ungodly, are called by those professing godliness, infidels and many other unchristian names; but, thanks be to God who giveth us the victory, truth is mighty and will prevail.

I trust the brethren will remember us at a throne of grace, that we may be kept blameless until the coming of our Savior, fighting the good fight of faith, and so lay hold on eternal life.

Should any of the traveling brethren come this way, call and see us.

Hesper, Winneshiek Co., Iowa.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MAY 9, 1860.

Relief for the Distressed; or, How we got out of "Doubting Castle."

No. 20.

In our last article on "Doubting Castle," we remarked that its "managers have made a tremendous effort to keep our brother Burnham from escaping." They appear to be making more than an ordinary exertion to throw every possible obstacle in his way that might blind his eyes to the glorious sunlight of truth, and keep him immured in the dungeons of "Doubting Castle," illumined only by the cold, pallid light of error.

After searching in the most careful manner every nook and corner of the old dismal "Castle," for proof that the spirit of man is a conscious entity between death and the resurrection, and finding none; and after hearing patiently all the arguments and questions of the Faculty, and not finding them sustained by a single passage of Scripture; we did hope that our dear Bro. would not listen to any more of their mere assertions, but bid them an eternal farewell, lending all his powerful energies to keep pilgrims from falling into the hands of these enemies of our Great King. Judge of our surprise when we ascertained that our first articles had fallen into the hands of the President of "Doubting Castle," who, with his specious wiles, and bold and false assertions, again arrested and gained the attention of our dear brother B. with the following:

"If the nations of the world, from the beginning of their history, have not held the consciousness of the spirit in death, why have they, from the beginning of their history, ever deified their departed great men and heroes—a mythological fact too well known to need proof in this place? Dr. Mason Good's opinion weighs nothing with me against the history of the world. Facts are stiff!"

As it has been shown in our first article on "Doubting Castle," not from "mythological [fabulous] facts," but real, substantial, historical data, quoted by Dr. Good and others, not as his "opinions," but as FACTS, sustained by all true history, that the nations which lived during the first three thousand years did not believe in "the consciousness of the spirit in death;" and that none of the Lord's children believed it till they learned it from the heathen, subsequent to the Babylonian captivity, more than thirty-six hundred years from creation. "Facts are stiff."

It will be noticed that the Faculty of "Doubting Castle" have brought no rebutting testimony—not a single fact—only their mere ASSERTION, which is the best they could do.

We are astonished at the success of the Directors in "Doubting Castle," for, as strange as it may seem, we find they have also succeeded in persuading our dear Bro. to go and examine again the eighth section in the third Division. After they had laid great stress on the belief of Josephus and Philo, saying that "the doctrine of the conscious being of the human spirit after death . . . is abundantly declared by Josephus, Philo, the Jewish writers generally, and the Bible;" hear what they now say to our brother, on persuading him to visit the same apartment again:

"No matter what Josephus, or Philo, or the Jewish writers generally believed—they all testify that at the period of our Lord's appearance on earth, the Jews, as a nation, held the doctrine of the consciousness of man after death. Now why did not our Lord preach against this notion if untrue and important?"

True, it is "no matter" what Josephus and Philo say, when the Bible contradicts them, as shown in Sec 8 We are not to follow the teachings of those who rejected Christ, and adopted heathen mythology. If any of our readers think "Our Lord" and the prophets have not spoken plainly against the notion of Josephus, Philo, and the Jewish writers who taught the same doctrine, let them read again No. 4, Div. II., Sec. 9, of the articles on "Doubting Castle," and they will there see that the Savior said, when speaking of the doctrine of the Pharisees, who held to the consciousness of the soul after death, "Beware!"—Matt. 16: 11–12. Let it echo—"BEWARE"!!!

Having apparently gained the attention of our Bro. B. again, the "Doubting Castle" D. D.'s conduct him at once into a private room, and say to him as follows:

"If the doctrine of the unconsciousness of man in death is true, why do the advocates of that doctrine disagree so among themselves in bringing it out? Why do they flatly contradict each other, and why do they resort to that which is sophistical, foolish and ridiculous, to prove it?"

We are somewhat astonished at these last questions; and yet, when we consider that they come from "Doubting Castle," perhaps it is no more than might be expected, judging from what we have already found; but we are surprised that such a declaration should ever have had any influence on Bro. B.

This is one of the great arguments of the Papists against Protestants. The Papists say, "We all think alike, while the Protestants have a variety of conflicting views on the same subjects;" and these, to the united Catholics, are "sophistical, foolish, and ridiculous." We are now, more than ever, satisfied that "Doubting Castle" is under the control of the "mother of harlots," or her daughters, and that she is deeply interested in having it sustained.

The Faculty of "Doubting Castle" might ask with as much propriety, if the Bible is true, why do its advocates "disagree so among themselves in bringing it out? Why do they flatly contradict each other?"

It is said when one attacks the character of an opponent, it is sure evidence that his arguments are used up, and that he feels unable to meet his opponent in an honorable manner. We trust this fact will open our brother's eyes to see that while he remains in "Doubting Castle," he is among the enemies of the glorious cause of our Great King; and may he be led at once to find the key of truth, that will unlock, and throw open to public view, every room in the old "Castle," and assist us in rescuing the sad and lonely ones confined within its murky walls.

Having shown our brother every thing they have in "Doubting Castle" that is calculated to create doubts and fears, the learned and dignified Faculty, in company with the President, make one more effort to blind him from the sunlight of truth, and to keep him forever in the dark labyrinths of error, by taking him again to Div. III, Sec. 10. See Art. No. 5. They vary the phraseology a little, and the President addresses him as follows:

"If the doctrine of the unconsciousness of man in death is true, why have the most pious, and the most deeply learned in the Bible, in all the christian ages, ever repelled the idea from their theology? Indeed, the church of God, as a mass, have ever rejected it. Why? O tell me why?"

This is just the way they talked to Martin Luther; and by this very proposition, they came near getting him back into the old "Castle" after he had made his escape. If he had not at that time fixed his eye upon the Scriptures, and cried out, The Bible, the BIBLE, and nothing but the BIBLE; in all probability they would have succeeded in binding him forever with the chains of error. Let us inquire of Luther if he found any thing in the Bible that taught the consciousness of man in death. In an able English work, published in London in 1772, entitled "A Historical view of the Intermediate State," on page 348, we read that Luther taught, "That they (souls) lay in a profound sleep, in which opinion he followed MANY fathers of the ancient church."

"Luther died in the faith." Said he, "ALL souls lie and sleep till doom's day." In his defence in 1530, Prop. 27th, he says:—"I permit the Pope to make articles of faith for himself and his faithful; such as, that he is Emperor of the world, king of heaven and God upon earth—that the soul is immortal, with all those monstrous opinions to be found in the Roman dunghill of decretals."

William Tyndale, who published the first printed English edition of the Bible, for which he was martyred, says:—"And ye in putting them, (departed souls) in heaven, hell, and purgatory, destroy the arguments wherewith Christ and Paul prove the resurrection. . . . The heathen philosophers did put that the souls did even live." John Milton, author of "Paradise Lost," says:—"It is evident that the saints and believers of old, the patriarchs, prophets and APOSTLES, WITHOUT EXCEPTION, held this doctrine;" i. e., that the whole man is unconscious between death and the resurrection.

When Luther referred to Eccl. 9: 10, which declares that "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave (sheol) whither thou goest;" he says: "Another proof that the dead are INSENSIBLE. Solomon thinks, therefore, that the dead are altogether ASLEEP and think of NOTHING. They lie, not reckoning days and years, but when awakened, will seem to themselves to have slept scarcely a moment."

Thus wrote the great Reformer, as the result of adhering to the Bible, instead of Papal traditions, and "Doubting Castle" theology. If all his followers had imitated his example, the old "Castle" would have been in ruins long since.

If the faith of good men were to be the standard, instead of inspired men, then we should not need to appeal to the BIBLE. Bro. Burnham is told that "the most pious" have rejected the idea that man sleeps in death. Were they any more pious in the dark ages and since the time of the Reformation, than were the Apostles and the apostolical Fathers, with their churches? In No. 5 it was shown that they gave no countenance to the doctrine that there are conscious, disembodied human spirits. The fact that many pious men were made to believe "Doubting Castle" theology, is not proof of its truth, when it is found to be opposed to the word of the Lord.

Many of the "most pious" have believed there were "infants in hell not a span long," that would be tormented eternally; and, after a long period of time, would suffer more in one moment than all the world ever suffered, and yet this would be only the beginning of their torment. Does the belief of pious men make this true, when Jesus says, referring to the little children, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven?" Which shall we believe? the patriarchs, prophets, Jesus, the apostles, and apostolical Fathers? or those who lived after the false doctrines and fables crept into the churches? Shall we believe the Bible which positively affirms, "The dead know not any thing?" or the theology of "Doubting Castle" which declares the opposite? Shall we believe God, or men?

We trust that the false assertions, vain flatteries, dark threats, liberal promises, and hypocritical courtesies of "Doubting Castle" Faculty, will be to our dear Bro. B. as Sampson's withs—utterly powerless—only arousing into action his latent energies, causing him to escape the deceitful snares and wily efforts made to bind him forever with the galling chains of error in the gloomy labyrinths of the old "Castle." The Lord forbid that he should die in "Doubting Castle," or like Sampson, perish among the King's enemies, when his eyes are put out in darkness.

Dear Brother, come out at once, lest a worst thing happen to thee. Haste! That old "Castle" of error, that has so long worried and bewildered the Zion-bound pilgrims, will soon be "given to the burning flame." It is the stronghold of "the mother of harlots" and "the man of Sin." For centuries, its lurid light has been as the pirates' false beacon to misguide the mariner upon the wrecking shore. Since our escape, we have felt like having a perpetual jubilee of thanksgiving to the Lord for our great deliverance from a place into which so many have entered to return no more.

We are filled with sadness when we consider the millions who have been allured from the simple and plain way of truth, into the mystic windings of heathen mythology and satanic theology, in consequence of the doubts issued from this College of Error. Come, dear brother, flee from it, as did the good man from Sodom. "Remember Lot's wife."

Note.—[As we have reason to suspect there has been foul play among the managers of "Doubting Castle," and that the worst has not yet been brought to light; we have concluded to devote another week to its examination. Things look dark about the old "Castle!"]

The Boston Discussion.

Our discussion with Mr J. S. Loveland last week was one of deep interest, and attended by a large and intelligent audience. Mr. Loveland is a noted Spiritualist, and an interesting speaker, who did well for that side; but it was found very difficult to make error stand against the truth of the BIBLE. The truth triumphed gloriously. As Bro. Cotton was present and took notes, which will be published in the Crisis, giving our readers a synopsis of the debate, we will not say more of it at this time. A verbatim report was also taken, and the entire discussion will soon be published in pamphlet form.

☞ A word relative to Bro. Munger's fishing notice, some misunderstood it. He has been advised to buy a small, cheap tenement to locate his family while he is out in the highways and hedges. He only asked the question, whether he should quit the field and go fishing, or to work. A little help at this time would keep him out, and aid him to meet his payments.

Castleton and Hydeville.

The work of the Lord is still gloriously onward in these places. Several more were converted during the last week in April, and many others are seeking the way of life. Lord's day, April 29th, we met as usual at 9 1-2 o'clock for a love-feast, and enjoyed a heavenly season, during the hour allotted to this exercise, in which time over sixty brought in their glad testimonies in favor of Jesus and the holy christian religion. It was truly heart-cheering to hear them speak of their joy in the Lord; several of whom, a few weeks since, were very familiar with the tobacco box, and the bottle, cursing and swearing, steeped in sin and misery; but who have now abandoned all these, and have become new creatures in Christ, loving his glorious appearing.

One old man, who had been a faithful servant of Satan all his days, having used tobacco from the time he was six years old, and was far from being a stranger to that which "biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder;" arose and said, referring to the fact that he had reformed from these and other bad habits, "I have nothing else to do now, but to serve the Lord, and take care of my family." He was that day buried with Christ in baptism, in company with fourteen others, making sixty-eight in all that have been baptized at Castleton. Others are waiting for the next opportunity. Several were baptized who had been consistent and active members of the Methodist and Congregational churches for a number of years, but after baptism, said they never felt such peace before, and joy in the Holy Spirit. The change in their feelings on receiving the great truth of life only through Christ, and the final end of sin, resulting from the death of the sinner, in connection with their baptism, was equal to what they experienced when they were first converted. They really felt and talked like new creatures; while those who are opposing seem to be losing what little comfort they had before the light came. Some honest ones, who opposed for awhile and by the loss of their peace became satisfied they were fighting the work of God, have ventured to come and hear; have received the truth and been greatly blessed. We hope to see others follow their noble example, and receive the same rich benefit from the Savior.

In the evening, some seventy or eighty sat down to the table of the Lord, and enjoyed a heavenly season in commemorating the death and sufferings of Christ. We parted with bright hopes of soon meeting in the everlasting kingdom, where partings are forever unknown.

Italy.

A terrible storm is evidently about to burst upon the inhabitants of Italy, especially upon the "the mother of harlots," whose seat is at Rome. Every week brings additional evidence that the time is at hand for her to commence drinking her judgment cup. Her burning day is rapidly approaching. All things are converging to the great crisis. It is no wonder that "an audible wail comes up from the seven-hilled city." Only think of seeing Christ's vicegerent going to church "escorted thither by a thousand soldiers," besides hundreds of others who were stationed on the way to St. Peter's, to prevent any outbreak among the people. Says a correspondent from Rome, under date of March 31st, "The paternal government is really crazy." The Pope has just excommunicated and anathematized Victor Emanuel, the king of Sardinia and all his associates. This of course will only add fuel to the anti-papal fires, and hasten the terrible onset. The Pope is gathering and drilling his troops, and the French army, that has protected him for the last eleven years, is ordered to be ready to leave Rome at short notice. The Roman correspondent says:—

A proclamation from Garibaldi is privately going the rounds, exhorting the people of Southern Italy to be ready, and promising speedy supplies of arms and ammunition. The patriots of Rome are organizing and secretly drilling, in companies, and have already accumulated a store of arms in the city. If the Southern Powers give the least pretext for hostilities, though they only so much as stick up a bayonet as an electric conductor, the storm will burst upon them."

"Lovest thou Me?"

"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Our attachment and faithfulness to Christ are known by the works of love which we bestow upon his brethren, with whom, as branches, we are united to him the vine. Does one suffer? all are alike suffering. A true member of the body needs but to be reminded of his brother's distress, and his generous sympathies and efforts are warmly enlisted.

Friends of Jesus, you have only to read a brief letter in another column of this paper, in which the affliction and burden of one of the "beloved of the Lord" is laid before you, and which will open your hearts more than all we might say,—and you have an opportunity to demonstrate your fidelity and loyalty to the King of saints, by blessing others even as he has blessed you.

"Do good unto all men, especially unto them who are of the household of faith." What a privilege to minister to Christ! Let us not forfeit it, by neglecting to bear one another's burdens. We commend to your love and care, our beloved Bro. Burnham. He is an intense sufferer. We had the sorrowful pleasure of speaking a few words with him to-day, on his way to his home in Newburyport. How long he shall be called to endure this wasting pain, our Father only knows. He must have help. Ceasing to preach, his income ceases. His friends have only to understand the matter, and they will act accordingly. Let the prayers of the righteous go up for him continually.

"Are all Men Immortal?"

The Spiritualists of Boston have been discussing the above question several evenings, and intend to pursue it further. During one of their discussions on this question, Dr. M. G. Smith made the following remarks, as reported in the Banner of Light, a Spiritualist paper in this city. We do not know whether the Dr. claims to be a Spiritualist or not. If he is one, we think he is in a fair way to get out of it. He says:—

"Immortality must be predicated upon something mental, moral, or material. There are sixty-four primates or simples which compose the world of which man is a microcosm, having, although in a minute degree, all the elements which make the world.

Particles of matter array themselves globularly in cells, within which is evolved the future man, and by which the future of everything may be known at birth. To form a vegetable cell, ten primates are used: for an animal, seventeen; and for man, sixty-four. For this numerical arrangement, I am indebted to my good friend Dr. Child, of Philadelphia. Here organically all humanity possess these primates. The brains of some idiots have no phosphorus. Some idiots have imperfect brains; some merely deranged. An imperfect brain without this phosphorus, never progresses—the deranged do improve. In the one class without immortality?

Again, mentally, where there is no aspiration, there can be no progression. Are not some men, like some animals that live only for the gratification of the physical? Can such be immortal? Again, can there be eternal existence without spiritual aspiration? Some men do not desire to live. There is constant struggle between life and death. Life is a gift of man. Eternal life is a gift of God.

But man defeats nature. Instead of living fifty or a hundred years, he may and does sometimes take, by suicide or dissipation, life at twenty. God intended man's happiness on earth; man defeats that happiness in others and in himself. All men are not happy. Are all men immortal? God intended immortality, but no one can be happy who is not virtuous. Can any one be immortal without being good? Life is not forced upon any one. True, its origin with him is involuntary. Is its continuation? If he deprive himself unrighteously of temporal life, may he not, by his own wicked choice, deprive himself of eternal life? Is immortality thrust upon man? If, when life is given, its continuance is contingent, may not immortality be contingent?

Most men desire life; men live. Some men do not desire life; can they die physically, and may they not morally? Some men grow worse, and if they continue in wickedness, may they not die? 'What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?' 'My Spirit shall not always strive.' 'The wicked shall be punished with everlasting destruction.' 'The wicked are to be consumed as tares; they are to be cut off as a branch, and be withered.' 'Paul and Barnabas waxed Word of God should be preached; but seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life.' 'He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption.' [Greek, phthora, destruction, ruin, perdition.] 'Enemies of the cross of Christ whose end [apolia] is destruction.' 'Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord.' 'The rich fall into divers lusts which drown men in destruction.' [Says bold, and said it was necessary that the Webster, 'Destruction is the annihilation of the form of anything.] 'The Lord preserveth all those who love him, but the wicked will he destroy.'

Paul preached about thirty years; he wrote many letters, fourteen of which are published by the Bible Society. He speaks here of punishment twenty-five times, and nowhere or at any time do we find that he threatened the wicked with eternal punishment. It was annihilation. Yet he declared he taught the whole truth, and said, 'Woe to him who teaches in any other gospel.' Yet Paul taught every doctrine in the New Testament. How can any man dare to preach eternal suffering, when Paul said, let him be accursed who teaches other doctrine than what he taught!

The Bible history is like man's early life, originating in the morning of creation, and maturing in the gospels. There may be mistakes in it, as there are in man; but who would obliterate his own childhood in consequence of its crudities? The fruit of the Bible is in the New Testament, in the teachings of Christ and Paul, neither of whom speak of the eternal suffering of the wicked, but eternal obliteration. In being burned, he means not with difficulty, like gold, platinaor asbestos which it is impossible to burn, but like withered branches, or stubble.

Anything that may be disintegrated may be corrupted, and must be mortal. Only things which cannot be dissolved or disintegrated must be immortal. Place the poles of a battery in water; decompose, remove the oxygen and hydrogen, and it is no longer water. There is a residuum of earthy matter left; but gases, oxygen and hydrogen, are primates; they cannot be destroyed, they are immortal; but the water is destroyed, it is dead. The soul is the seed, is born with and in all bodies. The spirit enters the body at its birth, and is a part of the great sea of Deific matter. It is from God, and may return to God. Man came from the dust, is represented as a living soul; and the Hebrew word, nephesh, found in Genesis, when applied to Adam, where God breathed in him, and he became a living soul; and the animals and whales, and they became living souls. This word is repeated seven hundred and fifty times in the Old Testament, and in only two instances has it any other meaning. Man was made of the dust, and returneth to the dust; but the Lord formeth the spirit of man within him;" it (ruakh) returneth to God. This is the word which means spirit, and occurs three hundred and eighty-five times in the Old Testament; and the corresponding word in Greek (pneuma,) occurs three hundred and eighty-five times in the New Testament. And if there are any present who believe the Bible, they must accept a doctrine so constantly spoken of in the Old and repeated in the New Testament.

The eternal damnation of modern divinity is what has made all the infidels of the world. They cannot reconcile as justice eternal misery for temporal sins. But who can object to the destruction of the incorrigibly wicked or the preservation of the just?

And there is not a single passage in the original Old or New Testament that teaches otherwise. If there is, where is it? But man translates the Bible under one dynasty, as the Constitution of the United States would be under another. The translators under King James would be as different under Queen Victoria as the "Dred Scott" translation of the Constitution, under Seward, would differ from that of the Supreme Court of Buchanan.

'But the original Old Testament,' says an English bishop, (Warburton) 'nowhere teaches immortality.' It is taught only in the New. . . .

Is there any evidence from the Bible that any person save Jonah ever went to hell, (as understood?) If there is no world God cannot control, is there any "soul" he cannot save? He saves the body conditionally; will he not the spirit? If the wicked do not live out half their days physically, will they spiritually?

'If a man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch; cast into the fire and burned.'—John 1: 5–6. 'Whose end is to be burned.'—Heb. 6: 8. And other passages, such as 'corruption,' 'cut off,' 'cut up by the roots,' 'ground to powder,' 'blotted out,' 'crushed,' 'destroyed.' The same word is used over two hundred times, and applied to Jerusalem, to Nineveh, to Sodom, and to other places whose prophetic destruction astounded the world by their literal fulfillment. Why may not the eternal punishment be everlasting annihilation? If so, are all men immortal? [illegible]

For the Crisis.

Notes by the Way.

After leaving the Boston Conference, I went to Portsmouth. Had a good time. The Spirit of the Lord was present to help. Four young men and two ladies started in good earnest to serve God. From there went to Barnstead. Found a little company, hated and persecuted by a formal church, watching every opportunity to destroy their influence and get their converts away. This made me think of that person who stole a child from its mother and stood a trial before king Solomon, and lost her case. The time is soon coming when justice will be done by our King, and the barren will be robbed of her stolen children. Thanks be to God. This meeting resulted in deepening the work of grace in the hearts of his people. A number started anew. Some came in from other towns and lent a helping hand.

Two men from West Clifton, twenty-six miles, and one from Ossipee Pocket, thirty-eight miles in the mud, came to hear this blessed truth. This shows how they love the gospel of the kingdom who are deprived of hearing it at home. This brother said he had his sack full, and it would last him forty days. He went home rejoicing in the blessed hope.

Although the circumstances were very forbidding, we gained a great victory the last evening, and left for Loudon Ridge. Here things looked still more forbidding—a division of feeling—a small congregation and bad weather, and but few to take a part in meeting. Was most discouraged. Sunday preached on life through Christ. Some were scared, others grew mad, a few took courage, and we concluded to hold a meeting Monday evening at Bro. Batchelder's house. I took up the subject of worldly wisdom in the things of God, as found in 1 Cor. 2d chap. Had a good time. Bro. Leavitt and Batchelder backed it up. The work started a little. Appointed another on Tuesday eve. Spoke on the necessity of confessing from the heart. God sent the word home, and the confession commenced at nine o'clock and lasted until nearly two the next morning. It appears that three young men had covenanted together to brace themselves against any thing that could be said by any one to them, even had an answer prepared for me if I ventured to speak to them on the subject of religion. They had their lesson learned and followed up the meetings, apparently secure, occasionally whispering and laughing. I reproved some of them publicly, not knowing their design. Tuesday evening they came again—that was my last meeting—stubborn and determined to resist everything said. At the close of preaching the brethren and sisters took hold well. God's Spirit was manifest. Confession commenced with them. A backslider confessed, much affected, from ten to fifteen minutes, then desired prayers. This rolled the burden and cry on to the church.

The battle began to wax hot, and all had a spirit of prayer for these three young men, and commenced praying for them, some five or six at a time. God heard. They felt; one ran into the parlor, but it was of no use; when we all got hold together God's power came down and prostrated the whole three of them. The one in the parlor cried the loudest for mercy. They remained on the floor over four hours, pleading for mercy and confessing their sins. One, the ringleader, confessed everything. Said he, "O God! I little thought of this when I came to meeting. I thought I could stand anything; but this is too much for me." Then they would plead for mercy. We all lost our burden when God rolled it on to them. I went to bed about one o'clock leaving them on the floor unable to get up. They were left alone to work out their own salvation, which they did about two o'clock in the morning, by submitting to God. As one of them was Bro. Batchelder's oldest son, where I boarded, he took the other two prisoners of hope into his bed, well satisfied that God was too much for them. They were tame the next morning. All attended prayers, and prayed with us, showing a determination to do their duty, and if they do they will live.

This is the old fashioned work of God. The world don't know anything about it; it is hid from the vain and the proud. One old hoper called it excitement; but the more candid neighbor said it was something more, than excitement that brought those tears and cries. To-day there is a stir in the place, and I have agreed to stop and hold one more meeting with them.

Wednesday the 19th. Another meeting. The people came from miles around. It went in power. Those three converts took hold of the cross, and were blessed, warning their friends with tears to come to Christ. Some were so convicted they left the house; others requested prayers. After meeting, one of these young men felt it duty to start on a mission at ten at night to see the one that left the meeting. He went. The man was in bed but got up and opened the door, but seeing who it was, jumped into bed again. But God had called for him. The young man commenced to pray for him in the dark. God heard prayer, and the man rose again and prayed for himself. So God is doing his own work in his own way.

I left for my next appointment in Portland, ninety-eight miles. There are a few tried friends struggling against the popular current of worldly professors, but they say nothing has hurt them so much as a late thunder-clap from one from whom they should have thought better things.

From there went to Yarmouth, Friday, for a four days' meeting. Found Bro. York at the depot waiting, in good spirits. First meeting, one requested prayers and was blessed. Saturday. Two meetings, with more interest. A teacher of the languages came in to hear the preacher, and to criticise; but it appeared criticism gave way for a powerful conviction which he carried home with him. Sunday he traveled the lots, mourned and sighed, and prayed, but got no relief. He knowing Bro. York, sought an interview with him, told him his feelings—his father a rich sea captain and a professor of religion, and he a teacher in the Academy. It was a great cross to come to the Advent meeting to hear my language,—it was not Greek. But Sunday eve he came, not to criticise on the proper use of language, but to ask for prayers. When I gave the invitation, he was the first that arose, to the astonishment of many present that knew him. Among the others a female teacher in the Academy rose for prayers. After prayers this young man prayed for himself, and spoke of his determination to be faithful, although he was placed in peculiar circumstances, and requested prayers that he might be able to go through the opposition he saw ahead if he should do his duty. He has just been over to see me. This is the first time I have spoken to him. He has come out clear in his mind. Says he took up his cross this morning and prayed with the family for the first time. The family were astonished to see and hear him pray, having been such a hard case. He said he had just told his mother that he had been to the Advent meeting the evening before and asked for prayers, and God had heard and blessed him, and he had started to serve God for life. This was a new thing. He was asked, "Are you going to be an Adventist?" "I am going to be a Bible christian," said he. He asked many questions on experience and doctrine, which I answered. He left to attend his class.

Truly this looks like God's work upon Paul. Imagine my surprise when Bro. York told me he was a teacher of the languages in the Academy; but I thought I knew the language of Canaan, and was willing to instruct him what I could. Afternoon meeting, ten prayers in twenty minutes, fifteen spoke in thirty minutes. This man prayed and spoke, and told what a change had taken place in his mind in two days. One person said her daughter came home saying there was a great change in her teacher, and the whole school noticed it. God is at work in the Academy.

5 o'clock P. M. More good news. The teacher in the Latin school has just been to see me, and wants to know what she must do to be saved. She is under the cross, deeply convicted. The battle waxes hot just now; the old church fighting, sinners crying, and we are praying.

Tuesday. Our meeting last evening resulted in a victory. The two school teachers took up their cross boldly before their associates and scholars, which had a good effect upon the congregation. Some of the scholars wept; the rappers looked serious, and one Universalist said it was an interesting meeting. God's Spirit shook the hearts of all present. The threatening of the pharisees to cast out of the synagogue did not prevent their hungry sheep from leaping over the bars into better feed. Some said they had been feeding on husks long enough, and they would go where God fed his people. After the meeting was out, one sinner broke down, and we tarried to pray. God answered prayer, and she went home happy. I had the pleasure of hearing the school teacher pray this morning. She has just gone to her school. I hope and expect she will live and teach her pupils more than one lesson. She left saying, "Pray for me, that God will direct me"; the tears starting.

But the time of my departure is at hand. I must soon take Nahum's last day chariots and go to my next appointment. O! I am glad there is a gathering day promised to God's children.

Meeting at Biddeford. Found a remnant left after the devastating and withering curse of an influence worse than Mormonism had swept over that region. A wolf with the hydrophobia among sheep is to be dreaded. Bro. Boutell has been trying to nurse them, and has done them much good of late. Next meeting at South Berwick, on the old battle field of last winter. The children generally alive; some had got wounded by the enemy, but mean to fight their way through. A great gathering in the evening. Some felt it duty to be baptized. One of the Selectmen led the way. We had a good time at the water, also in the afternoon; over one hundred were out to meeting. This shows an interest, in a thinly settled place. In the evening over three hundred out; the house full, great interest. The reformation of last fall has spread in various directions. I found Eld. Hall, a brother still ready to work with all that work for the salvation of others. Our brethren need not fear him; he will do no harm.

I must now leave for London Ridge again. On coming back to this place a variation of feeling and circumstances made me think of a soldier's life. After leaving the cars I took a wagon ride over the mountains, passing through a chilly, snowy air; for we see here a plenty of snow-drifts the first of May. But after riding fifteen miles our hearts were cheered to meet again with Bro. Batchelder's kind family, and some ten or twelve converts in the blessed hope, all rejoicing. Ten of them requested baptism—four young men and six young women. This was cheering, but the devil had suffered such a sudden loss the week before, he commenced fortifying by circulating false reports about the work of God. Some said it was Spiritualism, and that I had embraced it; and everything possible was done to head the progress of the work of God. Backsliders united with Universalists and hypocrites in circulating evil reports, but all this served to call the people out. Carriages from all quarters were seen coming. It looked like a training day. Just before meeting a brother told me the cause of such a turnout, which put me on my guard; but God gave me a sudden text, found in Matt. 11:7:—"What went ye out for to see?" It took half an hour to allay the idle curiosity. Conviction began to settle on the congregation, when the devil saw he was losing ground, and after such a rally. He put up a scoffing preacher to throw in an insulting joke, which broke the solemnity of the meeting and fed the goats. I understand he was engaged for that purpose; at any rate he acted the part of Baalam all day. God pity him! He failed at last, and left us to enjoy a blessed season in communion with about forty that show signs of enduring in the work of God. The season at the baptism settled the question with every honest christian, that if this is a spiritual work, or brought about by Rapology, all other reformations in past days were; for the power of God settled on the congregation while Eld. Leavitt prayed for it, and did not leave it until the ordinance was over. The first candidate I led into the water went in crying, and came out shouting. This was one of the young men who was alluded to above, so suddenly taken from the devils ranks the week before. His comrades followed him, and every one of them gave glory to God as soon as they were resurrected from their watery grave. The young ladies did the same, every one came out shouting. Two lost their strength in the water. God gave me strength to help them out, and we had a victory in spite of the devil and his workmen. The children feel well. I must bid them farewell for a short time to go to my next appointments.

Stopped Monday at Dover. Found a few poor sheep left alive after the wolf and his apostles had devoured all they could, as they have in every place where they have been. With the right kind of labor, there might be a reformation in Dover.

Exeter. Found the brethren firm, but some of them in trial on account of the late destructive fire in that place, which took all of the available property that Bro. Haley had.

Portsmouth. Found them well engaged. Four young men were rejoicing in God that started three weeks before, with some others, when I was there last. I was glad to hear them speak of their resolutions, and hear them pray. I learn that two of them agreed, over a bottle of rum, to take that drink and go into meeting and ask for prayers; and they did. But instead of their drinking the rest of their rum when they left the meeting, they agreed to seal up the mouth of their bottle, with the remainder of the rum in it, as a memorial forever against drinking any more rum. This pledge holds good yet, and will as long as they serve God. I was glad to see them on my return, but did not know them until they said they started when I was there one evening, three weeks previous, on my way to Maine. This was good news, and proved true—"By the foolishness of preaching" God saves some.

Salem. Had a very good time with Bro. Berick's people. Found them very quiet. Thence to East Boston, among my peculiar friends. It seemed like getting into port after five weeks hard storm and opposition, as you see by reading this.

Truly I think Paul knew what it was to grow poor while making others rich. In the first three places I preached, there were no collections taken. My expenses had then amounted to $8 or more; but some places did very well, so I have received in all, for five weeks' labor and holding seventy-five meetings, over my expenses, about $14 in collections. I think I have done my part at present going into out places. Am now on my way home to string my net to try fishing through the month of May. Pray that the Lord will send the fish along, so I can go out again and bear my own expenses.

A GLORIOUS PROSPECT.—All nature seems to be exerting itself to its utmost capacity to bring forth an abundant harvest of every description of fruit and grain. Every field, plant, tree, shrub and flower gives abundant evidence that a year of great—of unusual plenty is at hand. The fields which have been sown with grain give an earnest of an abundant harvest. Never have we seen Spring wheat coming up more evenly or looking more healthy and promising than at the present time. With a continuance of such glorious prospects as those of the present time, we may expect a harvest not only of grain, but of all kinds of fruits and roots that will astonish the oldest inhabitant himself.—Davenport (Iowa) Democrat and News, April 23.

For the Crisis.

Letter from Bro. E. Burnham.

BELOVED FRIENDS SCATTERED ABROAD:—It becomes my duty to address a few lines to you under a cloud of uncomfortable circumstances. I have been engaged in the work of preaching the blessed gospel of the grace of God for more than twenty-five years. During all that time, I have exposed myself day and night, ever preaching with all my might as the door has opened. I have seldom known the nature of pain in all that number of years. But my time has come, at last, to know what is meant by the word "suffering."

About six weeks ago my nervous system sank under the burden of my labors. When I was attacked, I fainted in the pulpit, and was only able to finish my sermon lying prostrate on the platform. Since then I have not, to my knowledge, had one single hour of natural sleep. All my sleep has been obtained by narcotics.

My sufferings, both by night and day, I will not attempt to express. But I have kept up, by the grace of God, until now, suffering and preaching, and preaching and suffering. My physician informs me that the suffering of this disease is as great as the human body can be made to endure. But I do not think I have been subjected to the worst type of the disease—Neuralgia.

But I can endure no longer. I hear my Master's voice calling me to "come aside and rest awhile." I must stop laboring at present. Therefore whatever appointments or partial appointments I have on hand will be considered null and void.

Beloved friends, pray for me. I entreat you. Do write to me, all of you; I ask it as a great favor. It diverts my mind, and comforts me. Direct all your letters to me at Newburyport, Mass. Farewell.

For the Crisis.

The Lord Cometh.

"Voice of the Prophets," 4to. 16 pp. No 1. Boston, Mass. J. V. Himes, Editor. Published every three months at 25 cts. per annum.

Such is the title, style and price of a new time paper. Eld. Himes has sent out 4,000 copies of the first issue at an outlay of some $250, omitting his time and trouble. It is assuredly a rich sheet. Cumming, Bonar, Ryle, Shimeall, Lord, etc., here speak out on the advent of Christ. Cumming's and Shimeall's time calculations are here presented, viz: that our Lord will come in 1865–68. The article from T. R. Birks, is worth the price of a whole year's subscription.

At $3 per hundred the paper is cheaper than tracts. None can find fault with the style or price of the paper. But the time]? Can we use the calculations of these men fairly to prove the end at hand and not receive the result of their chronological investigations? If their proof that his coming is near is good for anything, so far as it is obtained from the numbers, must we not accept the limitation of those numbers within a circle?

I cannot say that I am at present prepared to fix or assert a definite year, month, or day, but the circle of 1864–68 is a very interesting and momentous one. I wish to see, read, and examine all the evidence bearing on this epoch, and I shall, if God will, help dig it out. We need not be rash or unnecessarily radical on time, but we may be sure of one thing, viz: that the world hates the event as bad as the time of that event and will never love us whether we fix time or not. I think we had better send our quarter for the paper and read it carefully and prayerfully. Meanwhile, let us watch lest he come prior to 1868.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[From Liverpool the 25th ult.]

The Paris correspondent of the Times says that crime is painfully increasing in Paris, and that a frightful number of murders have been committed during the past few months.

The editor of a satirical journal of Turin has been condemned to two months' imprisonment and a fine for publishing disgraceful articles against the Emperor of the French.

A commission, formed amongst the clergy at Turin, has drawn up an address to the Pope, which, after receiving the signatures of the clergy of the kingdom, is to be sent to the Vatican. This document places before the eyes of his holiness the dangers of the present policy of Rome, and points out that the surest means of warding them off is to accept the propositions contained in the letter of King Victor Emanuel.

The criminal proceedings at Bologna against Father Velletti, an inquisitor of the holy office, for the abduction of the child Mortara, resulted in his acquittal.

The King of Sardinia, following the advice of the Emperor of France, had for the moment abandoned the idea of taking the title of King of Italy.

NAPLES. Accounts from various sources represent the insurrection in Sicily as completely suppressed.

The dispatch announcing concessions to Hungary is now said to have been marked by considerable exaggeration, and the belief was current in some quarters that no real change toward Hungary was contemplated, and that the object was probably to deprive the Hungarians of the sympathy of western Europe.

Prince Czartoryski died on the 23d.

A letter from Pesth says that the new letters patent of the Emperor of Austria are regarded by the Hungarians as of no value whatever. They contain nothing more than a vague promise, and it is felt that Austrian promises to do good are never realized. This is the unanimous opinion of the national party.

The Emperor has decided on two military expeditions, which are to set out, one from Algeria, and the other from Senegal, to proceed to Timbuctoo, where they are to unite. A large sum has been placed to the credit of the Minister of War, to defray the expenses.

WM. SHELDON.

Conference at Burlington, Mich.

Providence permitting, there will be a conference at Burlington, Calhoun Co., Mich., commencing Friday, June 1st, 1860, and continue over Lord's day following. Bro. and Sr. Seymour, Bro. E. Miller, Jr., and Cheesbrough will be present to preach the word. We also extend a cordial invitation to Bro. and Sr. Mansfield to meet with us and assist in preaching the word of life. We expect brethren and sisters from the surrounding country will meet with us. Come! Bro., lay by your work and meet us at Burlington. What we do must be done quickly, for the Lord is nigh at hand. For the church,

J. A. SOBER.

Maine State Conference for 1860.

Where shall it be held? Brethren who desire it in their vicinity should make it known to me soon. It is thought by several that June is the most proper time to hold it. We do not know the best place to meet, nor could we say it will be in any particular place, without the wish of brethren there located. Let us rally anew to the work, and prepare to do what we can the little time which remains. The Lord is at hand.

I. C. WELLCOME, Secretary.

Richmond, Me., April 27th, 1860.

A Proposition.

To any one who will send us a new subscriber for one year, we will forward, post paid, a copy of our late discussion with Eld. W. W. Clayton, on the conscious state of the spirit after death, and the destruction of the wicked. And for a new subscriber for six months, we will send a copy of the pamphlets on "Soul" and "Spirit." With a little effort, a thousand names may be added to our list. Let every reader try to aid in scattering the light and truth. Now is the time to work.

Awake! the King with joy and gladness
The glorious Advent of our Lord;
Nor let one thought of pain nor sadness
Mar thy faith in God's own word.

Chorus.

See where He comes in clouds of glory,
Bringing his reward, poor saint, for thee;
Wait, wait, ye winds the pleasing story—
[illegible] comes to set his children free.

Oh! raise your heads and weep no longer,
Ye weary pilgrims in the way;
Believe, let your faith grow stronger,
For soon will come that blessed day.

The Saviour's voice, in tones of pity,
Once rose for sinners such as we;
[illegible] has there prepared a city,
Where the redeemed shall ever be.

In that bright world, that happy Eden,
Where pain and death can come no more,
All praise will to our King be given,
In anthems loud from shore to shore.

Yes, it is there—the throne surrounding—
Where God will wipe all tears away;
And it is there—all praise resounding—
The saints shall dwell in endless day.

His children, then, he comes to gather,
Within that city from above;
Oh! tell me, sinner, would you rather
Be found outside that place of love?

"No, no," methinks I hear you saying,
"How can I in that city dwell?"
Believe, repent, the Lord obeying;
Then faithful be, and all is well.

Then rise and sing, with joy and gladness,
The glorious Advent of our Lord;
Nor let one thought of pain nor sadness
Mar thy faith in God's own word.

Shimeall's Chronology.

R. C. Shimeall, member of the Presbytery of New York, has recently issued a very able work on Bible Chronology, showing that the prophetical periods that extend to the end of the present dispensation, terminate in 1866–8. He has been engaged some thirty years in the preparation of this work. Nearly all chronologers have come to conclusions corresponding, in the main, with Mr. Shimeall.

The following summary of his argument is from The Voice of the Prophets, published by Bro. Himes:

The author states in his preface: "We have undertaken, in our Bible Chronology, to vindicate the Sacred Records against the assaults of the modern school of Egyptologists and others who have sought to undermine the authority of the inspired cosmogony; and we claim, through an exposure of their fallacy, to have demonstrated, by an exhibit of the harmony of the authentic profane annals of antiquity with the Sacred Writings, the exact era of human history, from the creation and fall of man, and of our consequent proximate position, in point of time, to the final close of the present dispensation."

This has cost him a careful, critical, and laborious examination of every system, both ancient and modern, of historic and prophetic chronology, for a period of thirty years.

As to the prophetic numbers of Daniel and John, he is aware, there exists among many sincere christians a deep-rooted prejudice adverse to the possibility of attaining to anything that may be entitled to confidence. Hence the popular plea of the discrepancies of expositions, in justification of indifference in reference to them. Their argument is, that God has left us to grope our way in total darkness, as to any reliable data, either historic or prophetic, in the premises.

But if these discrepancies can be accounted for on the one hand, and corrected on the other, he thinks the subject is fairly entitled to further indulgence.

On the "Prophetic Periods," or "times and seasons," Mr. S. thinks, on the principle that "coming events cast their shadows before," the peculiar state of the church and of the world in every age, and everywhere, has awakened within the mind an intense anxiety to know, from the nature and character of "the times and seasons" then occurring, what was foreshadowed of the future,—and at no period of the past will this remark apply with greater truthfulness and force than at the present. The church was not to be left in "darkness," or the day of the Lord come upon them as a "thief in the night." God has furnished light to his believing people in his word and by his providences, with certain infallible "times and seasons," by carefully regarding which they may know the proximate position they occupy in the world's history, relatively to the time of the end.

And the church of God, as the "light of the world," can never fulfill her mission until she takes her stand on the watch-tower of prophetic observation in these "last times," and responds to the call, "Watchman, what of the night?" that the "morning" of millennial glory spoken of by the old prophets,—"and also the night," that night of darkness, horror, and despair that awaits an apostate and infidel world, "cometh."

After a full and critical examination of the longer prophetic periods of the chronology of Scripture, he gives the following summary as the result of the whole.

I. From the Creation to the commencement of the predicted "Seven times" of Moses and Daniel..........[illegible] years
"Seven times," as above, or 2520 years, viz:
1. To the Nativity..........[illegible] years
2. To the year A. D. 1868..........[illegible]
[illegible]..........2520 years
Total..........6000 years

II. From the Creation to the commencement of Daniel's seventy weeks..........3579 years
The seventy weeks, or 490 years..........490
Add the years A. D., from thence minus 37 years..........1822
..........5991 years
Add nine years..........9
..........6000 years

III. The several periods of the general historic chronology:—
1. From the Creation to the Deluge..........1656 years
2. From Noah to Abraham..........427
3. From Abraham to the Exode..........430
4. Entrance into Canaan, and the time of the judges..........587 years
5. The regal age, from Saul to the Babylonish captivity..........430
6. The Babylonish captivity, 70 years, thence to the commencement of Daniel's 70 weeks, 79 years..........149
7. The seventy weeks..........490
..........4169 years
Add the years A. D. from the close of the "seventy weeks"..........1831
Total..........6000 years

We add—

A summary of the shorter prophetical numbers, taken in connection with the historic chronology, at the point of their commencement, as given by Mr. S. in this work.

I.

1. Set down for commencement of the 2300 years..........3652 A. M.
2. Add years B. C..........480
3. Add years A. D..........1820
4. Add years of the gradual exhaustion of the mystical Euphrates, from that date to A. D. 1859..........39
5. Add 9 years to A. D. 1868..........9
—2348
Total..........6000

II.

1. Set down for commencement of the 2300 years..........3652 A. M.
2. Add years of the 2300, down to commencement of its first integral period of "five months," or 150 years, Rev. 9: 5..........1572
3. Add the 150 years above..........150
4. Add for interval of Turkish repose, from A. D. 934, to A. D. 1057..........123
5. Add interval between departure of Turks from Bagdad, A. D. 1057, to capture of Constantinople, A. D. 1453, equal 396 years, coincident with the second integral period of "a day, an hour, a month, and a year," Rev. 9: 14, 15..........396
6. Add for drying up of the mystical Euphrates, Rev. 16: 12..........107
—2348
Total..........6000

In conclusion, Mr. Shimeall has furnished evidence on the basis of the corrected Hebrew version of the Holy Scriptures, that the year A. D. 1859 is the year A. M. 5991; and hence the year A. D. 1868 completes the 6000th year of the world's history, from the creation and fall of man.

He calls on all classes,—the clergy and laity, learned and unlearned, the rich and the poor, together with those who govern and those who are governed, to ponder well the facts and arguments adduced for the support of his views.

He takes the ground that he has substantiated the three following things, and we think he has the best of reasons for doing so:—

1. That of successfully vindicating the Hebrew version of the Scriptures as alone authoritative in determining the true chronology of the world, against the various theories of Septuagintarians on the one hand, and the pre-Adamite, or ethnological systems of Egyptologists, on the other.

2. That he has proved, on the authority of Holy Scripture, that God, from the beginning, has limited the period for the accomplishment of all his ordinary purposes in nature, providence, and grace, to precisely 6000 years from the creation and fall of man; and

3. That he has demonstrated that the two chronological chains of Holy Scripture, the historic and the prophetic combined, neither fall short of nor overleap, but exactly fill up the period of 6000 years.

And, finally, he says: "If these several points have been sustained, then he would appeal to all to reflect that NINE years from the current year of our Lord, 1859, the present dispensation, as forming the longer portion of the period called 'the times of the Gentiles,' WILL HAVE CLOSED UPON THE CHURCH AND THE WORLD FOREVER."

Planting—Watering—Increase.

BRO. GRANT:—A short time since, in comparing Paul's writings, I noticed a fact that I had not seen mentioned,—very likely others have,—still it is worthy of note. In 1 Cor. 3: 6, Paul says, "I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase." In chap. 1: 17, he says, "Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel."

There is the planting.

Acts 19: 1.—"While Apollos was at Corinth, Paul . . . came to Ephesus: and finding certain disciples, he said unto them, have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" Verse 5.—"When they heard this (see vers. 3 and 4,) they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus."

There is the watering.

Ver. 6.—"And when Paul laid his hands upon them, the Holy Ghost came on them; and they spake with tongues, and prophesied."

There was the increase.

Planting, then, is, to the preacher, giving, and to the hearer, receiving the Word of Life. Watering is being baptized into Christ. And the increase, receiving the Holy Ghost.

Reader! have you been even watered since you received the seed of truth? How can seeds or plants grow, have an increase, without water?

And now why tarriest thou? Arise! and be baptized, and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord.

The Great High Priest.

"Seeing then that we have a great High Priest that is passed into the heavens, Jesus, the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession. For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin."—Heb. 4: 14, 15.

We will refer to some more of this same testimony, contained in Heb. 1. The apostle is continuing the argument, when he expresses this language, "Thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth, and the heavens are the work of thy hands." Turn to John 1: "In the beginning was the Word." When was the beginning? Read Gen. 1: 1. "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." The beginning, then, dates back to the time when this mundane system was created. From thence we can reckon the existence of Christ the Word. But we may trace his history still further back. We have proof that before the foundations of the earth were laid—before the sons of God shouted for joy over the new creation, he existed as the Son of God, and had glory with the Father. Read his last prayer with his disciples. Ponder well this language. "And now, oh Father, glorify me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee, before the world was." "Thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world."

The Word was with God—Christ had glory with the Father—the Father loved the Son, before the worlds were made! How plain that there were two beings, separate and distinct individuals. John cannot be with James, unless there be a John and a James. God "created all things by Jesus Christ"—"by whom, also, he made the worlds."

The objector meets us with this remark, "The word was God," and as there is but one God, the Father and Son are one essence." The word God primarily signifies a law, or ruler, and is significant of supreme power. When the Jews accused Christ of blasphemy, because that he, being a man, made himself God, he replied to them, "If he called them gods unto whom the word of God came, say ye of Him whom the Father hath sanctified, and sent into the world, thou blasphemest, because I said, I am the Son of God?" If Jewish rulers were called gods, how much more properly the Son.

Again, it is objected, "When Philip would fain see the Father, Jesus asks, 'Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not seen me, Philip? He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father,' therefore Christ and the Father are the same." Let me cite you in reply to another scripture. The King, seated upon the throne of judgment, says to the righteous, "I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat. I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink. I was a stranger, and ye took me in" etc., yet these persons never saw Christ really, never fed him, nor clothed him; how then could they minister unto Him? You answer, "by ministering unto his saints, in whom Christ dwelt." Yes, just so. And as in Christ dwelt all the fullness of the Godhead—as God was manifest in the flesh—as Christ did not his own will, nor spoke his own words, but the will and words of Him who sent him, as he was a perfect representative of the mind and character of the Father, so with as much propriety as he could say the righteous ministered unto him, when ministering unto his brethren, could he say those who had heard his words, and seen his works, had seen the Father. He makes this very application in the following verse. "The Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works."—John 14: 8—11.

As the indwelling of Christ in his saints does not destroy his distinct and personal existence at the right hand of God, no more does the indwelling of the Father destroy the separate existence of God.

It is also said in proof of the Trinitarian view, that Christ expressly says, "I and my Father are one." Very true, and he prays that his disciples also may be one, "as we are." Just as he and the Father were one, he desired his disciples to be one. How was that? "That they all may be one; as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us." Now, if "all" the disciples could become "one" disciple, so as to lose their distinct individuality, why we will admit that Christ and his Father by being "one" lost their distinct personality!

The Father in Christ, and Christ in the Father, constituted their oneness; and Christ in his disciples, and they in him, constituted the oneness in them. How plain are these truths; if not perceived it must be because a creed conceals them. We think our position is fully established by the Word of God, viz., that Christ was the Son of God prior to his advent to earth.

We will pass now to the consideration of his relation as High Priest. "For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities." The institution of the priesthood was after the giving of the law from Mt. Sinai. There were two classes of priests—the common priests, who ministered daily by course, in the outer tabernacle, and the high priest who alone had access within the veil, into the holy of holies once every year, with blood, to bear the names of the twelve tribes upon his breast-plate before the Lord, and make an atonement for the sins of the people.

It would be interesting to linger here, and describe the typical ceremonies performed by the high priest, tracing the analogy between them and the work of atonement wrought out by the great High Priest who has passed into the heavens with his own blood, there to appear in the presence of God for us. This, however, would occupy too much space. While we in this outer tabernacle, sustaining to God the relation of a "royal priesthood," inasmuch as we are the children of a King, and heirs of a kingdom, offer up our daily sacrifices, upon altars erected by our own hearth-stone, in the consecrated temple, or shaded grove; our great High Priest, within the veil, sprinkles upon them his all-cleansing blood, and mingleth with them his own prevailing intercessions. For whom doth he make intercession? We know it is often said that he maketh intercession for all men, but what saith the Bible? "Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them." It is then for those who come unto God by him, he maketh intercession—none others.

The Jewish high priest did not offer an atonement for any other than those who submitted to the law of Moses. The heathen nations who worshiped other gods, had no interest in the priesthood. It was for the offerer of sacrifice on Jewish altars, to the Lord God of Israel, alone, that the blood was sprinkled upon the mercy seat, and the sins of the worshipers around the tabernacle only were confessed, and borne away upon the head of the scape-goat. "For us," christians, "us" believers on Christ, he "maketh intercession."—Rom. 8: 34. For those who "come unto God by him" he pleads.

(To be concluded.)

Epistle.

TO THE MEMBERS OF CHRIST'S BODY—THE CHURCH—SCATTERED ABROAD, GREETING:—It is not the salutation of a Paul, a Peter, or a James or John, but of one, who, with Paul, Peter, James and John, is striving together with them for "the faith once delivered to the saints;" yea, for the faith of Abraham! Abraham believed God. Finite man may make you a promise, and make it in expectation of performing the promised favor, yet his frailty may deter; erring, he may come short; being finite, we are not surprised to see the promise left unfulfilled. Not so with the christian's God! He is able to perform all that he has promised! He makes no calculations too large for the infinity of his power. He spake and it was done. He commanded and it stood fast.

This is our great God with whom we have to do. Did he not foretell the destiny of the Jewish nation? Was not their city literally thrown down, that one stone was not left upon another? And may we not expect he will perform the residue of his promises and predictions? Most assuredly he will! "Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name. And to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is written, "After this I will return, and I will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down, and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up."

God, in every different dispensation of the world, has had a people, and a chosen people for his name. They were a chosen people because they chose to obey God's commands, and not the commands of men. They were for his name, because they were married to him (Christ, his Son) and adopted into his family, thus becoming Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise. In the fullness of Jewish times, none could be made Jews by the Jewish law. Christ came and fulfilled the Jewish dispensation, and opened up another and a more glorious one, that he might take out of the Gentiles a people for his name. Did not the Jewish dispensation have a close? Then, assuredly, the Gentiles' times will come to an end.

Reader, that end will come just as soon as he has finished the work of preparing a people for his name. How do you know but that the number is already nearly completed?

During the past few weeks a great work has been done in this vicinity. Scores have been obedient to the faith. Some fifty or sixty have been baptized into Christ, and have thus obeyed that form of doctrine delivered unto them. I write this to cheer the desponding hearts of Christ's people. To let them know that God's truth is still efficient and effectual when properly presented to man's intelligence. It was not without much opposition that the truth was presented. The common people heard it gladly, while wicked professors stood aloof and condemned that which they had not heard. We are called heretical, and infidel, and fools, and fanatical, etc.; but, thank the Lord, we are just as heretical as Paul was, and like him we are fools for Christ's sake; and if believing what Paul preached to the world in his day, is infidelity and fanaticism, then, verily, I am one of the most confirmed infidels in this region, and am willing to be looked upon as fanatical, inasmuch as I enjoy sundry other epithets common to those who believe God's word and obey it.

We have been looking up the ancient landmarks,—the primitive usages and customs of the early Christians, and, as we think, have organized upon Bible grounds, and after apostolical teachings. We meet every "First Day" to break bread, as a token of remembrance to be observed by Christians till he comes, and in commemoration of his death and sufferings. We have two elders and seven deacons, whose duties are laid down in the writings of the apostles. We have also a treasury box, for the fellowship of the church, the usefulness of which has already been pretty thoroughly tested, as we have the poor, which Christ said, we have always with us, and who he said have the gospel preached to them. And, by the way, who need it more than the poor? Who need the benefits of the glad tidings of a kingdom to come in which they may be made partakers of the grand inheritance, thus losing their poverty if obedient to the law of faith.

One influential Methodist offered a poor man one bushel of potatoes, and one bushel of buckwheat, if he would go forward and be baptized! This he did in derision of one of God's plain commands; an ordinance which God instituted and not man. Think you he knew what he was doing? The man replied, "I would not dare to make so light of baptism; but if I am convinced of the truthfulness of the doctrines they preach, when I come to hear them, I will be baptized, but I should not dare to do it for pay!" Well, the man did go to hear the strange doctrine, and, in hearing, became convinced that he was mortal, and must seek for immortality, and seek for it in God's own way, if he ever obtained it. He went into the water and was buried, and rose again. He now lives to give a scriptural reason of his Hope.

Live for Life.

How good the Lord is to care for us, poor mortals. How kind, when our race was doomed to die because of disobedience, to prepare a way of salvation. How compassionate our Heavenly Father was to give his beloved Son to die for us, that whosoever would believe in him might not perish, but have everlasting life. Thus he has proved true the words which he spake by the mouth of the prophets—"For I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord God; wherefore turn yourselves and live ye." Ezek. 18: 32.

Our chance of salvation is conditional, and the Lord requires nothing of his creatures but what they are able to perform. See here! ye sin-sick souls. Listen to your Maker's voice—"Come now and let us reason together, saith the Lord; though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool. If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land. But if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured," etc.

Dear friends, let us not rebel, but live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. Mercy calls, Jesus pleads, and the Spirit says Come!

Doing Good.

Hear a word from the beloved Chalmers, "who being dead, yet speaketh." Thousands of men breathe, move and live—pass off the stage of life, and are heard of no more. Why? They do not a particle of good in the world, and none were blessed by them, could point to them as the instrument of their redemption; not a word they spoke could be recalled, and they perished: their light went out in darkness, and they were not remembered more than the insect of yesterday. Will you thus live and die? . . . . Live for something. Do good, and leave behind you a monument of virtue that the storm of time can never destroy. Write your name in kindness, love, and mercy, on the hearts of thousands who come in contact with you year by year;—you will never be forgotten. No, your name, your deeds, will be as legible on the hearts you leave behind, as the stars on the brow of evening. Good deeds will shine as the stars of heaven.

"Never be ashamed of Jesus—
'Glory ever in his cross,'
Count it most exalted honor
To advance his blessed cause;
Hallowed honors, untold blessings
Cluster round the Savior's cross!"
—Golden Rule.

Looking Glass.

There goes a man who has $2,000 a year for preaching one day in seven, what he calls the gospel of Christ,—a gospel which Christ himself and his immediate followers preached to rich and poor, without money or price! He is clothed in superfine cloth, his hat shines with its late fashionable finish; his hands—lily-white delicate, almost useless little hands—are encased in polished monkey-skin gloves; he has gold-bowed spectacles on his reverend nose, and a costly cane in his hand, and struts, oh, as importantly, as though he were sole owner of earth and heaven. There approaching him is a rich man of his church—a hoary old sinner who has ground thousands from the face of the poor or the toils of the landless—but he is rich, pays the parson well, and seals his mouth by presents, the parson sees him and cries, and, if the parson had a tail, he might wag it as a dog wags at his master's bidding; how—there! what cringing and bowing, how! but hush—words cannot describe it; it must be seen to be appreciated—he bows, he scrapes, he fawns on the rich sinner as a dog fawns on his master for bread, and then passes on. See him strut more pompously if possible than before.

Now there comes a poor mechanic. Will the Rev. Father bow to him? We shall see. There, no!—he notices him no more than he would a dog. Poor old man, his body is bent by toil; his locks are thin and white; wife and children, brothers and sisters, and other friends of his childhood and youth have gone before him, to the grave; he is alone; his soul is lonely, he feels amid the new generation that surrounds him, like a stranger and a pilgrim on the earth—feels that his toils are nearly completed, that he must soon pass away. How sweet would fall upon his lonely, care-worn soul, a kind, benevolent, loving smile from a man of God—a true minister of the gospel—how cheering in his pilgrimage would be a kind word from such a messenger. He casts a wishful look on the pompous person, and hopes for at least a nod of recognition—but no, the Dr. has no eyes for the poor old worker—his bows are for the rich or respectable, not for the toil-scarred veteran in soiled garments who has neither silver nor gold. Well, never mind, my aged father, never mind. Dives was clothed with purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day, and took no notice of Lazarus who lay at his gate and shared crumbs with the dogs, but when the earth-scene closed, both took their proper positions, and so wilt thou, poor old father, and the pompous Dr. Breathe a prayer for him, that God may convert and save his perishing soul.—Pleasure Boat.

Submission.

Father, my spirit bless,
And take me home,
Forth from the wilderness,
Fainting, I come.
My prayer this, this alone,—
Father, thy will be done,
Thy will be done!

Long have I wandered, lone,
Since forth I went,
And dark and drear hath grown
The day, far spent.
Save, ere the sun be gone!
And then thy will be done,
Thy will be done!

Though worthless, Lord, am I,
To be thy child,
Thou wilt not let me die
In the lone wild.
Help me its shades to shun,
And then thy will be done,
Thy will be done!

I will not even pray
To see the Hand,
In all my life's long way,
By which I stand.
But lead me to thy throne,
And then thy will be done,
Thy will be done!

Enough for me to trust
Thy changeless word,
Enough that I am dust,
And Thou—my Lord!
Make me thy humble one,
Then all thy will be done!
Thy will be done!

Silence in Nature.

It is a remarkable and very instructive fact, that many of the most important operations of nature are carried on in an unbroken silence. There is no rushing sound when the broad tide of sunlight breaks on a dark world and floods it with glory, as one bright wave after another falls from the fountain, millions of miles away. There is no creaking of heavy axles or groaning of cumbrous machinery, as the solid earth wheels on its way, and every planet and system performs its revolutions. The great trees bring forth their boughs and shadow the earth beneath them—the plants cover themselves with buds, and the buds burst into flowers, but the whole transaction is unheard. The change from snow and winter winds to the blossoms and fruits and sunshine of summer, is seen in its slow development, but there is scarcely a sound to tell of the mighty transformation. The solemn chant of the ocean, as it raises its unchanged and unceasing voice, the roar of the hurricane, and the soft notes of the breeze, the rushing of the mountain river, and the thunder of the storm,—all this is the music of nature. There is a lesson for us here. The mightiest worker in the universe is the most unobtrusive.—Guardian.

Early Breakfast.

Breakfast should be eaten in the morning, before leaving the house for exercise, or labor of any description; those who do it will be able to perform more work and with greater comfort and alacrity, than those who work an hour or two before breakfast. Besides this, the average duration of the life of those who take breakfast before exercise or work, will be a number of years greater than of those who do otherwise. Most persons begin to feel weak after having been engaged five or six hours in their ordinary avocations; a good meal reinvigorates, but from the last meal of the day until next morning, there is an interval of some twelve hours; hence the body in a sense is weak, the stomach is weak, and in proportion cannot resist deleterious agencies, whether of the fierce cold of mid-winter, or of the poisonous miasm which rests upon the surface of the earth, wherever the sun shines on a blade of vegetation or a heap of offal. This miasm is more solid, more concentrated, and hence more malignant, about sunrise and sunset, than at any other hour of the twenty-four, because the cold of the night condenses it, and it is on the first few inches above the soil in its most solid form; but as the sun rises, it warms and expands and ascends to a point high enough to be breathed, and being taken into the lungs with the air, and swallowed with the saliva into the stomach, all weak and empty as it is, it is greedily drank in, thrown immediately into the circulation of the blood, and carried directly to every part of the body, depositing its poisonous influence at the very fountain-head of life. When in Cuba many years ago, we observed that the favorite time for travel was midnight; and the older residents of Charleston [illegible] fevers prevailed in hot weather, they dared not ride into town in the cool of the morning or evening, but mid-day was accounted the safest. We know, from many years' living in New Orleans, that ill when the evenings and mornings were unusually cool, balmy and delightful, the citizens prepared themselves for still greater ravages of the deadly epidemic for the first few days following.

If early breakfast was taken, in regions where chill and fever, and fever and ague prevail, and if in addition, a brisk fire were kindled in the family room, for the hour including sunset and sunrise, these troublesome maladies would diminish in any one year, not ten-fold, but a thousand-fold, because the heat of the fire would rarefy the miasmatic air instantly, and send it above the breathing point. But it is "troublesome" to be building fires night and morning all summer, and not one in a thousand who reads this will put the suggestion into practice, it being so "troublesome," requiring no effort, to shiver and shake by the hour, daily, for weeks and months together; such is the stupidity of the animal, man!—Dr. Hall.

Costume for Children.

Parents generally err as much in respect to the mode of dressing their children, especially in the cold season of the year, as any other matter involving their health. It is too often the custom of parents to clothe the body of their children comfortably warm, which is the part of the system that in fact requires the least protection, and leave the extremities almost entirely naked. Congestion of the lungs and other internal organs are the result of such a practice. Those parts of the body the most remote from the heart and lungs, the centre of circulation, and where the blood vessels are proportionately small, require double the amount of protection by clothing against the cold and vicissitudes of the weather, that the body does.

If the extremities are exposed to the cold, the blood vessels in them contract and gradually grow small, and consequently carry less and less blood from the heart to the extremities to keep them warm, while the heart and its blood vessels about it, are proportionately increased in size, and constantly distended with blood. In this pathological condition of the system, injuries, or sudden colds, the recession of humors from the surface, and various other causes, very easily produce bleeding from the lungs, coughs, asthma, etc. Many young people, under the influence of this cause, and perhaps combined with a want of muscular exercise in the open air, which exercise tends greatly to promote the circulation of the blood in the extremities, are constantly predisposed to bleeding from the lungs, consumption, etc. Such persons as have full and large veins upon their hands and feet, seldom have diseases.

Warm clothing and proper muscular exercise should be combined, for the full development of the blood vessels in the extremities. If, while the vessels are rendered continually smaller in the extremities by exposure to cold, we have much muscular exercise, especially if taken but occasionally, the muscular exertion only aggravates the trouble, and will be almost certain to produce a rupture of some of the over distended vessels in some internal organ. We are satisfied, from observation for more than twenty years, that these apparently unimportant matters have more to do in producing consumption and several other diseases, than peculiarity of the constitution or formation of the body entailed from parents to children.—Homœopathist.

"Of drinks, I know but one which nature owns,
As wholly suited to her several wants;—
And this is WATER. Cold and unconcoct
With heat or other mixture, I would give
It fresh and sparkling from its crystal font,
To quench the thirst of every thing that lives."

The Panacea.

The great cure-all, the catholicon for the removal of untold human ills, physical and mental, which will make of life a summer sky, which will replace the darkest clouds with the gladdest sunshine, which will put a budding rose where erst flourished the ragged thorn, is the blessed habit of an implicit reliance on the wisdom and the love of Providence in every occurrence of life; of humble gratitude if it is gladsome; of uncomplaining resignation if it is adverse; abiding in the firm faith that if it be dark to-day, it will be bright to-morrow, saying and feeling of every dispensation: "Not as I will, but as Thou wilt." This is the balm of Gilead; this is perennial health; it is happiness, it is bliss.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year..........$1.00
For a single copy 6 months..........1.00
For a single copy 3 months..........50
Five copies to one address for 6 months..........[illegible]
Ten copies to one address for 6 months..........8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months..........15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months..........[illegible]

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Elder Miles Grant, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if prepaid, quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents a year to any part of the United States.

☞ CANADA SUBSCRIBERS have to pre-pay the postage on their papers, 26 cents a year, in addition to the above price. $1 will pay for twenty-three numbers, or $1.26 a year. The same to all the Provinces.

Speak Kindly.

Speak kindly to thy fellow man,
Who treads sin's downward track;
For naught but kindness ever can
Restore the wanderer back.

Speak kindly to the aged one,
Bowed with the weight of years,
Whose sands of life are almost run
In this dark vale of tears.

Speak kindly to the orphan lone,
Bereft of parents dear,
Perchance thy kind and gentle tone
His lonely heart may cheer.

Kindness, it is a paragon,
Of more than diamond worth;
It came from heaven down to man,
For heaven gave it birth.

O! then be kind, whoe'er thou art
That breathest mortal breath;
It shall make happy all thy life,
And sweeten even death.

For the Crisis.

I am Weary and would Rest.

"I am weary!" How often do those simple but expressive words come welling up from the heart as we journey life's rugged and thorny pathway. I am weary buffeting with the waves of adversity and affliction, and would rest. Perhaps in the joyous anticipations of youth, we have dared dream of happiness. Then the sunshine of life cast the varied rainbow glow of hope around us. Then all nature looked joyous and gay; the forest songsters tuning their melodious notes like sweet anthems from heaven wafting our ever fleeting minds to meditate on things past, present, and yet to come. We then viewed God's handiwork in the heavens, and in all the beauties which clothe the earth with charms, inviting us to stay, until the tendrils of affection cling with ivy-like tenacity around home and friends, and we are almost ready to say,—Heaven is here!

But soon we are rudely awakened from that bright dream; our spring-time is matured into summer; life puts on the earnest garb of reality; our fleety visions fade like morning mist; and how happy, if the rainbow glow of hope is transplanted by the hope of a better inheritance that is incorruptible, that fadeth not away.

Affliction comes, casting around us a gloom of almost impenetrable darkness. We pass a way-mark in life, and still we journey on, another, and another, stands out in bold relief, all leaving an indelible impress on the tablets of our hearts, and we sighingly say, "I am weary of life and would rest." But look! the bowed head is raised; the broken in heart receives the heavenly balm of consolation; faith beams from the countenance; for far away in the distance they see the disc of hope arising to the view; not a cloud obstructs the vision of that hope which is

"A beacon beaming from afar,
The weary wanderer's guiding star."

They picture in imagination that day when they shall meet those friends they have laid in the green church-yard amid the grass and flowers which they have often watered with their tears, thinking life's rugged steeps are passed to the mouldering form; that there is no more sighing or sorrowing for them here. Quietly they rest, angels guarding their lowly bed, the blue canopy of heaven their covering, from which the sun sheds its genial rays by day, and the golden stars watch by night. Clouds may darken the horizon, the tempest rage with fury, lightnings flash and thunders roll; yet peacefully they rest from all the tumults of this life.

Yes, courage, fainting heart, there is rest for the weary. How the sweet promise comes like balm to the wounded heart. Thank God for it! The merciful One says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." What hope it brings to the weary! how the heart beats with renewed faith and courage to struggle on yet a little longer, knowing that when our work is finished, and the [illegible] there is a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give unto all them that love his appearing. Then will the wicked cease their troubling, and the weary be at rest.

For the Crisis.

Our Blessed Hope.

I have had a good social meeting this morning in reading the Crisis. It often occurs that the remarks of an individual calls to remembrance some exercise of our own, which quickens, and creates a desire to speak that the mind may be refreshed. Bro. Alling's remarks on the "Existing Powers" have had this effect. Other subjects have been instructive and useful, but nothing meets the wants of a thirsty soul, save what pertains to its "Blessed Hope." When my spirit has been ready to faint for the longings it had for the personal presence of Christ, it has been with the greatest anxiety that I have turned to the sure word of prophecy to obtain a ray of light to cheer my heart, enliven my faith, and lengthen my patience. And as I have mused on the exhortations to be patient, I felt it was just what I needed—a patient continuance in well doing. One part of doing well was, to take heed to a more sure word of prophecy, as unto a light that shines in a dark place, until the day dawns and the Day Star arises in the heart. Jesus says, "He that overcometh and keepeth my words unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations . . . . even as I received of my Father, and I will give him the morning star." Jesus says, "I am the bright and morning star." What else can it be but to be made like Jesus? And as the day star is a sure token of morning, this refreshing, or being made one with Christ, will be a sure sign of his coming. And none, of all ages, who sustain the character to whom the promise is given, can fail of the blessing. And as Christ was seen forty days after his passion before he was taken up, and as this class follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth, they too will remain some days and be seen of many, when the angels will be sent to gather and take them where Jesus is, in the air. Moreover Paul says, "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." Now the question comes, "How long, oh Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?"

In Rev. 7, a command is given to the four angels who hold the four winds, to hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till the servants of God are sealed in their foreheads. The number of them is given, afterward seen with the Lamb on the Mount Zion, having his Father's name in their foreheads. "These are they who follow the Lamb . . . . and were redeemed from among men, being the first fruits unto God and to the Lamb." The true Israel [prevailers with God] of all ages who have fulfilled the condition of Christ's promise: "He that overcometh . . . will I write upon him the name of my God."

Gabriel says to Daniel, "Behold, I will make thee know what shall be in the last end of the indignation"; and as he progressed in his instructions, he describes a certain king (the last one before the resurrection) who should prosper till the indignation be accomplished. There is also an indignation spoken of by Isaiah the prophet, 26:27: "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast;" which I think is the same that Gabriel calls the last end of the indignation, and which is to be accomplished under the prosperous reign of this certain king.

Let this sealing and entering into chambers be what it may, I think it will be an abiding under the shadow of the Almighty. It will be an escape from those things which shall come to pass. "Only with their eyes shall they behold and see the reward of the wicked." As the indignation referred to was to be on Daniel's people, the last end will come upon those who sustain the character of Jacob [supplanter]. Jeremiah exclaims, "Alas! for that day is great so that none is like it: it is even the time of Jacob's trouble but he shall be saved out of it. For I am with thee, saith the Lord, to save: though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee: but I will correct thee in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished."

It is clear from the signs that Jesus gave of his coming, and also the events of the sixth seal, that we are living between the falling of the stars and the departing of the heavens as a scroll [the same heavens the stars fell from], which implies a shaking or rending. According to Matthew's word the next thing after the shaking is the sign of the Son of man, and mourning of the tribes of the earth. In Rev. we read they hid themselves in dens and rocks of the mountains, and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him who sitteth upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb.

Isaiah, in describing the event says, they cast their idols of silver to the moles and to the bats to go into the clefts of the rocks, and into the top of the ragged rocks, for fear of the Lord and for the glory of his majesty, when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth. It has seemed to me for a long time that the shaking of the heavens and earth will be the time when life and immortality will be given to the saints; who are to judge the world with Christ, will go in with him to the marriage and the door will be shut. The heavens that have been rent will close, and the danger will seem to be over. The nations will become angry and suffer themselves to be gathered to a place called Armageddon, where the battle of that great day of God Almighty will be fought. "And the Lamb shall overcome them. He is Lord of lords and King of kings; and they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful."

For the Crisis.

Defining my Position.

Some readers of the Crisis wish to know if I am going to argue the immortality of the soul. They supposed that when I call the soul an immaterial substance, I can mean nothing less. In reply I will say here that I mean nothing of the kind whatever, and have not dreamed of inferring immortality from immateriality.

I will explain as I proceed how I use the terms substance, matter, spirit, etc. But I will here add that the old argument for immortality from the non-material nature of the soul, is decrepit with age, and fast dying out, among orthodox people who still regard the soul as immaterial. This argument for immortality has lost caste. No respectable thinker ever employs it now. It confessedly proves too much, for it involves the immortality of the brutes, and of all life. I sometimes meet the argument, either in dogmatic writers, like Luther Lee; or among country preachers, who have read a very few very standard books, fifty or a hundred years old; or among dear, simple-minded christians, who have heard of such a philosophical argument for immortality, and have admired it just because they didn't understand it.

But I repeat that no thinking man cares a straw for it now. And yet the belief in spirit, as something different from matter, is as prevalent and strong as ever. Excepting among the Spiritualists. They are all materialists. This is a paradox of which I have long been aware; which, with other things, I may explain hereafter.

C. F. H.

1867.

BY JOHN CUMMING, D. D.

"And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days."—Dan. 12: 11, 12.

This is a very difficult passage, but we have no right to pass it by, and if the discussion should seem uninteresting we must pardon the necessity of it, while we accept conclusions only in as far as they seem borne out by data. But my discussion will be less the expression of opinions of my own, and rather what I have been collecting during many years,—the opinions and the interpretations of some of the best, and wisest, and most laborious men who have given their attention to this very important subject. What I shall endeavor to show now is this,—that whatever theories of the fulfillment of these dates are held, whether they fix the commencement at this period, or at that period, or at some other period, nearly all concur in one remarkable conclusion, namely, that 1867 is to be the great crisis, the testing crisis in the events of history, in the fulfillment of prophecy, and in the experience of mankind. What I wish to show is, that the best, the wisest, and the most thoughtful of writers on the subject of prophecy, however much they may differ in certain details,—and they do differ,—nearly all coincide in this, that 1867 is to be a great crisis; and that if all that some expect to occur at that period do not occur, we are at least on the eve of events, as Lord Carlisle has expressed it in his work upon Daniel, the most stupendous, if not ushering in the very close of this present christian economy; we must carefully weigh the quotations, that thus we may be able to judge whether the data on which these writers have come to their conclusions be correct or not.

Elliot and Mede have shown that the 2,300 years, which Daniel gives as one of the great chronological epochs, terminate about the year 1821 or 1822; that is, dating them from the march of Xerxes, and the meridian splendor of the Persian Empire. But a very learned and able clergyman of the church of England, who has written a work called "The Terminal Synchronism of Daniel's Two Periods," differs from Mr. Elliot. He thinks that the 2,300 years, one of Daniel's great epochs, after which, as I showed you, the Eastern Apostasy, or the waters of the river Euphrates that should overflow Europe, that is, the power of Mahomet, should begin to subside, began at the autumnal equinox of 433 B. C.; and if the 2,300 years began at the autumnal equinox of 433 B. C., then that great period would terminate in the autumnal equinox of 1867. Elliot's opinion was that the 2,300 years measure out the taking away of the daily sacrifice, and the exhaustion of that great eastern eclipse which was to overshadow the light and the sunshine of heaven in the eastern world, and that they end in 1821, at which date Mahometanism as a power in Europe was shaken to its centre, and began to cross the Bosphorus, and to fall back upon its ancient channels in Asia, and to cease to be a dominant, triumphant, and advancing fanaticism. But this writer thinks that the proper date is 433 B. C.; and if so, then they would terminate in 1867, when, according to him, Mahometanism will be utterly expunged, and the cross will shine where the crescent now waves in triumph. But more than this; this writer thinks also that the expression "time, times, and half a time," which all commentators admit to be 360 years, twice 360 years and 180 years, making altogether 1,260 years, called in the Apocalypse 42 prophetic months, which is the same thing,—called also 1260 prophetic days,—start from A. D. 607. Mr. Elliot, and Newton, and Mede, think that the 1,260 years, descriptive of the great Western Apostasy, began at the year 532, at which era Justinian constituted the Bishop of Rome to have supreme civil, ecclesiastical, and spiritual jurisdiction; they consider that at that period the Apostasy was invested with supreme civil and ecclesiastical power, and therefore with its permanent form as a politico-sacerdotal system. But this writer differs from them; he says that the 1,260 years do not begin at 532 after Christ, but that they begin at the year 607, when the Emperor Phocas constituted Pope Boniface III. the universal head of the universal church, and the supreme and chief bishop, priest and prelate of Christendom.

If you take this latter opinion, then you add the 1,260 years to the year 607, and it brings you down to the same period at which his 2,300 years terminate, namely, 1867; and according, therefore, to this theory, not only will Mahometanism totally cease at that period, but the Papacy also, with its pope and its cardinals, and its whole ecclesiastical despotism, will sink like a millstone into the depths of the ocean; and the world, east and west, emancipated from the incubus that has crushed and darkened it, shall reflect the beams of an unsetting sun, and form a portion of that great empire which constitutes the kingdom of our God and of his Christ. I must say I prefer Elliot's; but what I wish to impress is the remarkable fact that both interpretations land us in 1867, as a great dominant era, characterized by stupendous events, and involving mighty changes in the present constitution of things. The theory adopted by the interpreters I prefer is, that the 1,260 years which were to mete out the dominant power of the great Western Apostasy, began in A. D. 532, when Justinian in his "Pandects" gave the supreme authority to the Bishop of Rome. If you add 1,260 years to 532, it brings you down to 1792. Accordingly, at the exhaustion of the 1,260 years, in 1792, the Papacy, according to the description in the word of God, was to come under the judgment of Heaven, and gradually to be exhausted. Read "Alison's History," or any other authentic history, and you will find that the great outburst of the French Revolution in 1792 commenced so overwhelming an onslaught on the Papal power, with all its dependencies, that from that day to this, Romanism has been a dying system, exhausted of its chiefest vitality, and struggling for a foothold in any land to which it can have access; so much so, that I have repeated again and again the conviction, that I have no more fear of Popery gaining the upper hand, than I have of Mahometanism or Hindooism gaining supremacy.

The Pope is on his last legs, struggling for existence; and the only unhappy feature, and the most unhappy one, I must candidly confess, is that the only nation upon earth where it is gaining power amid the population, is in this land of ours. Among the lowest classes, I know, from statistics which I could quote, did time permit, the Roman Catholic religion is losing every day. Among the middle classes it is scarcely [illegible]; but among the higher classes it is at this moment daily gaining converts. They serve their apprenticeship to gaudily decorated churches, some of which have been recently opened; and after they have been saturated with homoeopathic doses there, they finally hand themselves over to the allopathic treatment of Pio Nono, and become members of the Roman Catholic Church. It does seem the most inexplicable thing, that the peers of England, illustrious many of them for their genius, their eloquence, their brilliant antecedents, their resistance of tyranny in every form, and their vindication of the noblest rights of our noble land, should any of them believe the monstrous fables, and accept the loud and insolent pretensions of a system that is indeed found in the word of God, but with a brand upon its brow, and its doom pronounced before even it came into existence. But so it is. We rejoice that the feet of our nation are in the right way; the head, or the upper classes, is bewildered; but the heart of old England beats sound and true, and you must not judge by the wavering pulse at the wrist of the few, that the beat of England's heart is in any other condition than its normal, its Protestant and Christian one.

Assuming that 532 began the 1,260 years, what is next to take place, Daniel tells us in this passage, to which I specially ask attention, as confirmatory of the theory I am trying to uphold, that first of all there shall be time, times, and a half a time, or 1,260 years, and then there shall be 1,290 years. In other words, Daniel says that 1,260 years shall be augmented by thirty years more; at the end of which thirty years there shall be some great event, which we have to ascertain. Now if we add to 1792, when the 1,260 years terminated, an additional thirty years, it brings us down to 1822. But 1822 is the terminating period of the 2,300 years also, according to Elliott's interpretation. Well, did anything take place in 1822 that would justify that period as a terminating epoch? We find that Turkey, in the language of Lamartine, began to die for want of Turks; the whole force of that great system of propagandism then began its rapid exhaustion; and from that day to this, even our efforts to keep back Russia have not kept up Turkey; it is at this moment in the pangs of dissolution. I stated four or five years ago that it would be so; and however justified we were, and we were justified in trying to prevent Russia from disturbing the balance of power of Europe; yet, as I then said, our efforts to preserve Turkey would be vain. Russia has still a sign-board near Petersburg, on which is written: "The way to Constantinople," and in the lapse of years Constantinople will be hers, and Russia will yet play a part in the history of the world probably unprecedented for a thousand years.

But Daniel says: "Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days." Here is still an additional period. He adds 75 years to the 1,260, or 45 years to the 1,290. He mentions three periods, you observe, all beginning, we here assume, at 532; first 1,260, ending in 1792; then 1,290, ending in 1822; and then 1,335, ending in 1867; so that, according to this theory, Daniel's period, when he shall be blessed or happy that waiteth and cometh to the close of the 1,335 years, that period assumed by Elliot to be the millennial rest, would begin in the year 1867, and last for a thousand years of uninterrupted felicity, and blessedness, and peace. But what I wish to impress is that, according to both theories, 1867 again evolves as the year of stupendous changes. And it is very remarkable, too, what will confirm this, and what I shall quote passages to prove that Fines Clinton, the ablest chronologist of the age, has shown, and I think with irresistible force, that our era at present, namely, 1859, is not the correct and real era in the chronology of the world. His idea is that Christ came about the year of the world 4,138; and that in the course of a few years more we shall have arrived at the close of the sixth thousand, and at the commencement of the seventh thousand year of the world. What it is interesting to show in connection with this, is the universal belief among Jews and Gentiles, Rabbinists, Talmudists, and Fathers, that the seventh thousand year of the world is to correspond to the seventh day of the week; six days the working week, and the seventh day the Sabbath-day rest; 6,000 years for the working-world week, and the 7,000th year to be what the apostles describe as the rest, or the sabbatismos that remaineth for the people of God.

Several extracts so far seem to authenticate, and vindicate, this conclusion, and you will take them of course for what they are worth: First, Lady Hester Stanhope, in a letter from Syria to her physician, in the year 1827, says: "All those who come [illegible] may go back in the Turkish year, 1245." And the physician adds, in a note: "It would appear from this, that Lady Hester Stanhope expected the accomplishment of some great event in the year of the Hegira, 1245." The Hegira dates our year 622; add 1,245 to 622, and we have the year when she expected some stupendous event, 1867. The late Mr. Irving, deeply deceived in many things, extravagant in more, but a man of splendid genius, of unquestionable piety, the victim of a belief that everybody was good and great, and incapable of a suspicion that anybody could deceive, said: "Not only amongst the Turks in Europe, but all over the East, the Mahometan power is wasting away; and like all doomed things begins to be conscious of its approaching end; insomuch that they say the Ottoman Porte is paralyzed with prophecies of its speedy ruin. Is it not so written, the Turks say, in your Christian book, that our religion is to come to an end within forty years? And what is very remarkable, a friend of mine, who traveled lately into Central Africa, and stood on the Himalaya mountains in India, by the holy pool, where never Christian had dwelt before, found there, also, an expectation of a religion from the West, which in the space of forty years was to possess the earth,—remarks which they made to me with their own lips." Now the African traveler or friend, to whom he refers, was Major Denham or Captain Clapperton; they were in Africa in the year 1823; and forty years added to this would bring us down to 1863. Again, in another part of this book he says: "At the end of the 1,335th day of Daniel, or in the year 1867, which is 42 years from the time when I now write, the period of blessedness shall begin, and the resurrection of the righteous shall then take place." Mr. Cuningham, of Lainshaw, a man of profound research into prophecy, writing in the year 1837, says, that if the whole of the evidence which he adduces be considered, and carefully weighed, he thinks it will be impossible to doubt the accuracy of his dates; and he believes that we were at that time a little more than 29 years and two months from the end of Daniel's 1,335 years; that is, they would expire in the year 1867.

The author of a very able and elaborate treatise, called "The Seventh Vial," writes thus upon the same subject: "No sooner had the period of judgment passed over Europe from 1789 to 1815, ended, than the ancient landmarks were restored. Where is the promise of his coming? came to be the universal cry." He points to the year 1865, "when, according to Daniel, a blessed era shall begin, the millennium be ushered in, and the complete destruction of Antichrist shall then take place." "We are," says that writer, "on the eve of the long anticipated Sabbath of rest and blessedness." And the late Rev. Edward Bickersteth, one of the most able, pious, and spiritually-minded men I ever knew,—and I have listened to him, as a pupil, with profit and delight many a time, and derived from his works some of my best and most precious information—the uncle of the present Bishop of Ripon—says: "If we reckon the 2,300 days in Daniel, from Ezra's commission, B. C. 457, they would expire in 1843; but if we reckon them as we should, from the last cleansing of Nehemiah, in B. C. 433, then they expire in 1867, which I consider to be the period of the restoration of the Jewish nation, the cleansing of the sanctuary, and the preparations for the millennial dawn and sunshine."

I shall quote lastly, from one with whose sentiments in some things I do not agree, Bishop Russell, a Scottish Bishop: he writes especially upon the idea, that the 7000th year, would be the seventh millenary, or millennial rest of the world; and he makes the following most important and valuable remark: "The tradition that the earth, as well as the religious state of its inhabitants, is to undergo a great change at the end of 6,000 years, has been found in the writings of Pagans, Jews, and christians; because six days were employed by Almighty God in the creation of the globe, after which he rested on the seventh; and as with him one day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day, it was concluded by the Cabalist and Jews, that the world was to continue 6,000 years; and on the conclusion of this period there would succeed a Sabbath of a thousand years of corresponding length, a millennium of rest and of peace. This idea has been traced in the Sibylline oracles, in the poems of Hesiod, in Plato, and prevailed long before the birth of Christ, relative to a momentous change which is supposed to await the earth after a period corresponding 6,000 years. We find this expectation expressed by the Chaldeans, the Persians, the Egyptians, the Greeks, the Romans, [illegible] orators, poets, philosophers, and the only difficulty we experience in the examination of the records collected from the literature of ages, is to account for so great unanimity of sentiment, where we cannot discover any source of information, or any authority, which so many different writers would consent to acknowledge for a conclusion so remarkable."

And he adds: "Whatever might be the origin of this anticipation so fondly cherished by Jew and Pagan before the advent of our Savior, in regard to a happy change in the constitution of things, it is manifest that the hope of such a consummation was not superseded by Christ's residence upon the earth, and the many promises which he made to his disciples in relation to a more perfect state of existence hereafter: on the contrary, the first christians looked with a more earnest desire for the new heavens, and the new earth promised to their fathers; and combined this expectation, too, with the ancient hope that this globe was to undergo a material change at the end of 6,000 years, throwing off all its imperfections, which had arisen from the guilt of its inhabitants, and being then made to be the habitation of justice, benevolence, and purity, during a millennium of a thousand years, the Sabbath of the terrestrial world." I may just add that a poet,—if one may take a poet's testimony for anything, and sometimes the deep insight of the poet is truer than the philosopher,—the poet of our firesides, the most beautiful and instructive of them all, I mean Cowper, says:—

"The groans of nature in this nether world,
Which Heaven has heard for ages, have an end,
Foretold by prophets, and by poets sung,
Whose fire was kindled at the prophet's lamp,
The time of rest, the promised Sabbath comes.
Six thousand years of sorrow have well nigh
Fulfilled their tardy and disastrous course
Over a sinful world; and what remains
Of this tempestuous state of human things,
Is merely as the working of the sea
Before a calm, that rocks itself to rest:
For He, whose car the winds are, and the clouds
The dust that waits upon his sultry march,
When sin has moved him, and his wrath is hot,
Shall visit earth in mercy; shall descend
Propitious in his chariot, paved with love;
And what his storms have blasted and defaced,
For man's revolt, shall with a smile repair."

Mr. Scott, a very able writer upon prophecy, states, in his "Outlines of Prophecy,"—"The whole six days' work of creation typifies the whole six thousand years of the work of redemption; and the seventh day, or Sabbath of God, is the type of that seventh thousand year of redemption, the millennium, or sabbatism, that first day, as it were, of universal joy and praise to Christ. Almost all writers on prophecy agree that the prophetical dates given as terminate between this present time and the year 1867."

I have given these extracts from competent authorities, all coming to one conclusion,—that the seventh thousand year of the world is to be its millennial rest; and I have shown you that if the chronology of Mr. Fines Clinton be correct, and I am satisfied it is correct, we are at this very moment within [illegible] years of the commencement of what all these writers hope is the everlasting rest, the dawn of heaven, the millennial blessedness of the people of God; when all tears shall be dried, when all sorrows shall cease, when death shall die, and when Christ shall shine before the ancients gloriously; and this world shall enjoy that rest which has been foretold by prophets, celebrated by poets, anticipated by saints, and declared by an apostle to be the Sabbath rest that remaineth for the people of God.

These are the data on which each must form his own conclusions. I do not venture to dogmatize,—I do not attempt to dictate,—I do not presume to decide. I have shown that the best and ablest christian students are all agreed that 1867 is an era fraught with gigantic issues, while some think it is the commencement of the millennial rest; others think it is the destruction of all the errors which are struck deep into our world, and the universal spread of the empire of the Prince of Peace. Then, if these things be so, look at Europe at this moment, with its tense and awful interests. No one can reflect upon the last ten years without feeling that they have been ten years of the most [illegible] events in the history of Europe and of mankind. No one can look at Europe at this moment without feeling that it is scarcely [illegible] coming from the [illegible] to its very heart, [illegible] one Napoleon, so far alive to the [illegible] righteousness, and liberty, [illegible] own country [illegible] in [illegible] every side [illegible] yet all things [illegible] shall not finally [illegible] prophecy [illegible]

Speak Kindly.

Speak kindly to thy fellow man,
Who treads sin's downward track,
For naught but kindness ever can
Restore the wanderer back.

Speak kindly to the aged one,
Bowed with the weight of years,
Whose sands of life are almost run
In this dark vale of tears.

Speak kindly to the orphan lone,
Bereft of parents dear,
Perchance thy kind and gentle tone
His lonely heart may cheer.

Kindness, it is a paragon,
Of more than diamond worth;
It came from heaven down to man,
For heaven gave it birth.

O! then be kind, whoe'er thou art
That breathest mortal breath;
It shall make happy all thy life,
And sweeten even death.

For the Crisis.

I am Weary and would Rest.

"I am weary!" How often do those simple but expressive words come welling up from the heart as we journey life's rugged and thorny pathway. I am weary buffeting with the waves of adversity and affliction, and would rest. Perhaps in the joyous anticipations of youth, we have dared dream of happiness. Then the sunshine of life cast the varied rainbow glow of hope around us. Then all nature looked joyous and gay; the forest songsters tuning their melodious notes like sweet anthems from heaven wafting our ever fleeting minds to meditate on things past, present, and yet to come. We then viewed God's handiwork in the heavens, and in all the beauties which clothe the earth with charms, inviting us to stay, until the tendrils of affection cling with ivy-like tenacity around home and friends, and we are almost ready to say,—Heaven is here!

But soon we are rudely awakened from that bright dream; our spring-time is matured into summer; life puts on the earnest garb of reality; our fleety visions fade like morning mist; and how happy, if the rainbow glow of hope is transplanted by the hope of a better inheritance that is incorruptible, that fadeth not away.

Affliction comes, casting around us a gloom of almost impenetrable darkness. We pass a way-mark in life, and still we journey on, another, and another, stands out in bold relief, all leaving an indelible impress on the tablets of our hearts, and we sighingly say, "I am weary of life and would rest." But look! the bowed head is raised; the broken in heart receives the heavenly balm of consolation; faith beams from the countenance; for far away in the distance they see the disc of hope arising to the view; not a cloud obstructs the vision of that hope which is

"A beacon beaming from afar,
The weary wanderer's guiding star."

They picture in imagination that day when they shall meet those friends they have laid in the green church-yard amid the grass and flowers which they have often watered with their tears, thinking life's rugged steeps are passed to the mouldering form; that there is no more sighing or sorrowing for them here. Quietly they rest, angels guarding their lowly bed, the blue canopy of heaven their covering, from which the sun sheds its genial rays by day, and the golden stars watch by night. Clouds may darken the horizon, the tempest rage with fury, lightnings flash and thunders roll; yet peacefully they rest from all the tumults of this life.

Yes, courage, fainting heart, there is rest for the weary. How the sweet promise comes like balm to the wounded heart. Thank God for it! The merciful One says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." What hope it brings to the weary! how the heart beats with renewed faith and courage to struggle on yet a little longer, knowing that when our work is finished, and the battle won, there is a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give unto all them that love his appearing. Then will the wicked cease their troubling, and the weary be at rest.

Our Blessed Hope.

I have had a good social meeting this morning in reading the Crisis. It often occurs that the remarks of an individual calls to remembrance some exercise of our own, which quickens and creates a desire to speak that the mind may be refreshed. Bro. Alling's remarks on the "Existing Powers" have had this effect. Other subjects have been instructive and useful, but nothing meets the wants of a thirsty soul, save what pertains to its "Blessed Hope." When my spirit has been ready to faint for the longings it had for the personal presence of Christ, it has been with the greatest anxiety that I have turned to the sure word of prophecy to obtain a ray of light to cheer my heart, enliven my faith, and lengthen my patience. And as I have mused on the exhortations to be patient, I felt it was just what I needed—a patient continuance in well doing. One part of doing well was, to take heed to a more sure word of prophecy, as unto a light that shines in a dark place, until the day dawns and the Day Star arises in the heart. Jesus says, "He that overcometh and keepeth my words unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations . . . . even as I received of my Father, and I will give him the morning star." Jesus says, "I am the bright and morning star." What else can it be but to be made like Jesus? And as the day star is a sure token of morning, this refreshing, or being made one with Christ, will be a sure sign of his coming. And none, of all ages, who sustain the character to whom the promise is given, can fail of the blessing. And as Christ was seen forty days after his passion before he was taken up, and as this class follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth, they too will remain some days and be seen of many, when the angels will be sent to gather and take them where Jesus is, in the air. Moreover Paul says, "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." Now the question comes, "How long, oh Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?"

In Rev. 7, a command is given to the four angels who hold the four winds, to hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till the servants of God are sealed in their foreheads. The number of them is given, afterward seen with the Lamb on the Mount Zion, having his Father's name in their foreheads. "These are they who follow the Lamb . . . . and were redeemed from among men, being the first fruits unto God and to the Lamb." The true Israel [prevailers with God] of all ages who have fulfilled the condition of Christ's promise: "He that overcometh . . . will I write upon him the name of my God."

Gabriel says to Daniel, "Behold, I will make thee know what shall be in the last end of the indignation"; and as he progressed in his instructions, he describes a certain king (the last one before the resurrection) who should prosper till the indignation be accomplished. There is also an indignation spoken of by Isaiah the prophet, 26 : 27 : "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast;" which I think is the same that Gabriel calls the last end of the indignation, and which is to be accomplished under the prosperous reign of this certain king.

Let this sealing and entering into chambers be what it may, I think it will be an abiding under the shadow of the Almighty. It will be an escape from those things which shall come to pass. "Only with their eyes shall they behold and see the reward of the wicked." As the indignation referred to was to be on Daniel's people, the last end will come upon those who sustain the character of Jacob [supplanter]. Jeremiah exclaims, "Alas! for that day is great so that none is like it: it is even the time of Jacob's trouble but he shall be saved out of it. For I am with thee, saith the Lord, to save: though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee: but I will correct thee in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished."

It is clear from the signs that Jesus gave of his coming, and also the events of the sixth seal, that we are living between the falling of the stars and the departing of the heavens as a scroll [the same heavens the stars fell from], which implies a shaking or rending. According to Matthew's word the next thing after the shaking is the sign of the Son of man, and mourning of the tribes of the earth. In Rev. we read they hid themselves in dens and rocks of the mountains, and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him who sitteth upon the throne and from the wrath of the Lamb.

Isaiah, in describing the event says, they cast their idols of silver to the moles and to the bats to go into the clefts of the rocks, and into the top of the ragged rocks, for fear of the Lord and for the glory of his majesty, when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth. It has seemed to me for a long time that the shaking of the heavens and earth will be the time when life and immortality will be given to the saints; who are to judge the world with Christ, will go in with him to the marriage and the door will be shut. The heavens that have been rent will close, and the danger will seem to be over. The nations will become angry and suffer themselves to be gathered to a place called Armageddon, where the battle of that great day of God Almighty will be fought. "And the Lamb shall overcome them. He is Lord of lords and King of kings; and they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful."

For the Crisis.

Defining my Position.

Some readers of the Crisis wish to know if I am going to argue the immortality of the soul. They supposed that when I call the soul an immaterial substance, I can mean nothing less. In reply I will say here that I mean nothing of the kind whatever, and have not dreamed of inferring immortality from immateriality.

I will explain as I proceed how I use the terms substance, matter, spirit, etc. But I will here add that the old argument for immortality from the non-material nature of the soul, is decrepit with age, and fast dying out, among orthodox people who still regard the soul as immaterial. This argument for immortality has lost caste. No respectable thinker ever employs it now. It confessedly proves too much, for it involves the immortality of the brutes, and of all life. I sometimes meet the argument, either in dogmatic writers, like Luther Lee; or among country preachers, who have read a very few very standard books, fifty or a hundred years old, or among dear, simple-minded christians, who have heard of such a philosophical argument for immortality, and have admired it just because they didn't understand it.

But I repeat that no thinking man cares a straw for it now. And yet the belief in spirit, as something different from matter, is as prevalent and strong as ever. Excepting among the Spiritualists. They are all materialists. This is a paradox of which I have long been aware; which, with other things, I may explain hereafter.

1867.

BY JOHN CUMMING, D. D.

"And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days."—Dan 12 : 11, 12.

This is a very difficult passage, but we have no right to pass it by, and if the discussion should seem uninteresting we must pardon the necessity of it, while we accept conclusions only in as far as they seem borne out by data. But my discussion will be less the expression of opinions of my own, and rather what I have been collecting during many years,—the opinions and the interpretations of some of the best, and wisest, and most laborious men who have given their attention to this very important subject. What I shall endeavor to show now is this,—that whatever theories of the fulfillment of these dates are held, whether they fix the commencement at this period, or at that period, or at some other period, nearly all concur in one remarkable conclusion, namely, that 1867 is to be the great crisis, the testing crisis in the events of history, in the fulfillment of prophecy, and in the experience of mankind. What I wish to show is, that the best, the wisest, and the most thoughtful of writers on the subject of prophecy, however much they may differ in certain details,—and they do differ,—nearly all coincide in this, that 1867 is to be a great crisis; and that if all that some expect to occur at that period do not occur, we are at least on the eve of events, as Lord Carlisle has expressed it in his work upon Daniel, the most stupendous, if not ushering in the very close of this present christian economy; we must carefully weigh the quotations, that thus we may be able to judge whether the data on which these writers have come to their conclusions be correct or not.

Elliot and Mede have shown that the 2,300 years, which Daniel gives as one of the great chronological epochs, terminate about the year 1821 or 1822; that is, dating them from the march of Xerxes, and the meridian splendor of the Persian Empire. But a very learned and able clergyman of the church of England, who has written a work called "The Terminal Synchronism of Daniel's Two Periods," differs from Mr. Elliot. He thinks that the 2,300 years, one of Daniel's great epochs, after which, as I showed you, the Eastern Apostasy, or the waters of the river Euphrates that should overflow Europe, that is, the power of Mahomet, should begin to subside, began at the autumnal equinox of 433, B. C.; and if the 2,300 years began at the autumnal equinox of 433 B. C., then that great period would terminate in the autumnal equinox of 1867. Elliot's opinion was that the 2,300 years measure out the taking away of the daily sacrifice, and the exhaustion of that great eastern eclipse which was to overshadow the light and the sunshine of heaven in the eastern world, and that they end in 1821, at which date Mahometanism as a power in Europe was shaken to its centre, and began to cross the Bosphorus, and to fall back upon its ancient channels in Asia, and to cease to be a dominant, triumphant, and advancing fanaticism. But this writer thinks that the proper date is 433 B. C.; and if so, then they would terminate in 1867, when, according to him, Mahometanism will be utterly expunged, and the cross will shine where the crescent now waves in triumph. But more than this; this writer thinks also that the expression "time, times, and half a time," which all commentators admit to be 360 years, twice 360 years and 180 years, making altogether 1,260 years, called in the Apocalypse 42 prophetic months, which is the same thing,—called also 1260 prophetic days,—start from A. D. 607. Mr. Elliot, and Newton, and Mede, think that the 1,260 years, descriptive of the great Western Apostasy, began at the year 532, at which era Justinian constituted the Bishop of Rome to have supreme civil, ecclesiastical, and spiritual jurisdiction; they consider that at that period the Apostasy was invested with supreme civil and ecclesiastical power, and therefore with its permanent form as a politico-sacerdotal system. But this writer differs from them; he says that the 1,260 years do not begin at 532 after Christ, but that they begin at the year 607, when the Emperor Phocas constituted Pope Boniface III. the universal head of the universal church, and the supreme and chief bishop, priest and prelate of Christendom.

If you take this latter opinion, then you add the 1,260 years to the year 607, and it brings you down to the same period at which his 2,300 years terminate, namely, 1867; and according, therefore, to this theory, not only will Mahometanism totally cease at that period, but the Papacy also, with its pope and its cardinals, and its whole ecclesiastical despotism, will sink like a millstone into the depths of the ocean; and the world, east and west, emancipated from the incubus that has crushed and darkened it, shall reflect the beams of an unsetting sun, and form a portion of that great empire which constitutes the kingdom of our God and of his Christ. I must say I prefer Elliot's; but what I wish to impress is the remarkable fact that both interpretations land us in 1867, as a great dominant era, characterized by stupendous events, and involving mighty changes in the present constitution of things. The theory adopted by the interpreters I prefer is, that the 1,260 years which were to mete out the dominant power of the great Western Apostasy, began in A. D. 532, when Justinian in his "Pandects" gave the supreme authority to the Bishop of Rome. If you add 1,260 years to 532, it brings you down to 1792. Accordingly, at the exhaustion of the 1,260 years, in 1792, the Papacy, according to the description in the word of God, was to come under the judgment of Heaven, and gradually to be exhausted. Read "Alison's History," or any other authentic history, and you will find that the great outburst of the French Revolution in 1792 commenced so overwhelming an onslaught on the Papal power, with all its dependencies, that from that day to this, Romanism has been a dying system, exhausted of its chiefest vitality, and struggling for a foothold in any land to which it can have access; so much so, that I have repeated again and again the conviction, that I have no more fear of Popery gaining the upper hand, than I have of Mahometanism or Hindooism gaining supremacy.

The Pope is on his last legs, struggling for existence; and the only unhappy feature, and the most unhappy one, I must candidly confess, is that the only nation upon earth where it is gaining power amid the population, is in this land of ours. Among the lowest classes, I know, from statistics which I could quote, did time permit, the Roman Catholic religion is losing every day. Among the middle classes it never had a footing; but among the higher classes it is at this moment daily gaining converts. They serve their apprenticeship to gaudily decorated churches, some of which have been recently opened; and after they have been saturated with homœopathic doses there, they finally hand themselves over to the allopathic treatment of Pio Nono, and become members of the Roman Catholic Church. It does seem the most inexplicable thing, that the peers of England, illustrious many of them for their genius, their eloquence, their brilliant antecedents, their resistance of tyranny in every form, and their vindication of the noblest rights of our noble land, should any of them believe the monstrous fables, and accept the loud and insolent pretensions of a system that is indeed found in the word of God, but with a brand upon its brow, and its doom pronounced before even it came into existence. But so it is. We rejoice that the feet of our nation are in the right way; the head, or the upper classes, is bewildered; but the heart of old England beats sound and true, and you must not judge by the wavering pulse at the wrist of the few, that the beat of England's heart is in any other condition than its normal, its Protestant and Christian one.

Assuming that 532 began the 1,260 years, what is next to take place, Daniel tells us in this passage, to which I specially ask attention, as confirmatory of the theory I am trying to uphold, that first of all there shall be time, times, and a half a time, or 1,260 years, and then there shall be 1,290 years. In other words, Daniel says that 1,260 years shall be augmented by thirty years more, at the end of which thirty years there shall be some great event, which we have to ascertain. Now if we add to 1792, when the 1,260 years terminated, an additional thirty years, it brings us down to 1822. But 1822 is the terminating period of the 2,300 years also, according to Elliott's interpretation. Well, did anything take place in 1822 that would justify that period as a terminating epoch? We find that Turkey, in the language of Lamartine, began to die for want of Turks; the whole force of that great system of propagandism then began its rapid exhaustion; and from that day to this, even our efforts to keep back Russia have not kept up Turkey; it is at this moment in the pangs of dissolution. I stated four or five years ago that it would be so; and however justified we were, and we were justified in trying to prevent Russia from disturbing the balance of power of Europe; yet, as I then said, our efforts to preserve Turkey would be vain. Russia has still a sign-board near Petersburg, on which is written: "The way to Constantinople," and in the lapse of years Constantinople will be hers, and Russia will yet play a part in the history of the world probably unprecedented for a thousand years.

But Daniel says: "Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days." Here is still an additional period. He adds 75 years to the 1,260, or 45 years to the 1,290. He mentions three periods, you observe, all beginning, we here assume, at 532; first 1,260, ending in 1792; then 1,290, ending in 1822; and then 1,335, ending in 1867; so that, according to this theory, Daniel's period when he shall be blessed or happy that waiteth and cometh to the close of the 1,335 years, that period assumed by Elliot to be the millennial rest, would begin in the year 1867, and last for a thousand years of uninterrupted felicity, and blessedness, and peace. But what I wish to impress is that, according to both theories, 1867 again evolves as the year of stupendous changes. And it is very remarkable, too, what will confirm this, and what I shall quote passages to prove that Fines Clinton, the ablest chronologist of the age, has shown, and I think with irresistible force, that our era at present, namely, 1859, is not the correct and real era in the chronology of the world. His idea is that Christ came about the year of the world 4,138; and that in the course of a few years more we shall have arrived at the close of the sixth thousand, and at the commencement of the seventh thousand year of the world. What it is interesting to show in connection with this, is the universal belief among Jews and Gentiles, Rabbinists, Talmudists, and Fathers, that the seventh thousand year of the world is to correspond to the seventh day of the week; six days the working week, and the seventh day the Sabbath-day rest; 6,000 years for the working-world week, and the 7,000th year to be what the apostles describe as the rest, or the sabbatismos that remaineth for the people of God.

Several extracts so far seem to authenticate and vindicate this conclusion, and you will take them of course for what they are worth: First, Lady Hester Stanhope, in a letter from Syria to her physician, in the year 1827, says: "All those who come ... may go back in the Turkish year, 1245." And the physician adds, in a note: "It would appear from this, that Lady Hester Stanhope expected the accomplishment of some great event in the year of the Hegira, 1245." The Hegira dates our year 622; add 1,245 to 622, and we have the year when she expected some stupendous event, 1867. The late Mr. Irving, deeply deceived in many things, extravagant in more, but a man of splendid genius, of unquestionable piety, the victim of a belief that everybody was good and great, and incapable of a suspicion that anybody could deceive, said: "Not only amongst the Turks in Europe, but all over the East, the Mahometan power is wasting away; and like all doomed things begins to be conscious of its approaching end; insomuch that they say the Ottoman Porte is paralyzed with prophecies of its speedy ruin. Is it not so written, the Turks say, in your Christian book, that our religion is to come to an end within forty years? And what is very remarkable, a friend of mine, who traveled lately into Central Africa, and stood on the Himalaya mountains in India, by the holy pool, where never Christian had dwelt before, found there, also, an expectation of a religion from the West, which in the space of forty years was to possess the earth,—remarks which they made to me with their own lips." Now the African traveler or friend to whom he refers, was Major Denham or Captain Clapperton; they were in Africa in the year 1823; and forty years added to this would bring us down to 1863. Again, in another part of this book he says: "At the end of the 1,335th day of Daniel, or in the year 1867, which is 42 years from the time when I now write, the period of blessedness shall begin, and the resurrection of the righteous shall then take place." Mr. Cuningham, of Lainshaw, a man of profound research into prophecy, writing in the year 1837, says, that if the whole of the evidence which he adduces be considered, and carefully weighed, he thinks it will be impossible to doubt the accuracy of his dates; and he believes that we were at that time a little more than 29 years and two months from the end of Daniel's 1,335 years; that is, they would expire in the year 1867.

The author of a very able and elaborate treatise, called "The Seventh Vial," writes thus upon the same subject: "No sooner had the period of judgment passed over Europe from 1789 to 1815, ended, than the ancient landmarks were restored. Where is the promise of his coming? came to be the universal cry." He points to the year 1865, "when, according to Daniel, a blessed era shall begin, the millennium be ushered in, and the complete destruction of Antichrist shall then take place." "We are," says that writer, "on the eve of the long anticipated Sabbath of rest and blessedness." And the late Rev. Edward Bickersteth, one of the most able, pious, and spiritually-minded men I ever knew,—and I have listened to him, as a pupil, with profit and delight many a time, and derived from his works some of my best and most precious information—the uncle of the present Bishop of Ripon—says: "If we reckon the 2,300 days in Daniel, from Ezra's commission, B. C. 457, they would expire in 1843, but if we reckon them as we should, from the last cleansing of Nehemiah, in B. C. 433, then they expire in 1867, which I consider to be the period of the restoration of the Jewish nation, the cleansing of the sanctuary, and the preparations for the millennial dawn and sunshine."

I shall quote lastly, from one with whose sentiments in some things I do not agree, Bishop Russell, a Scottish Bishop: he writes especially upon the idea, that the 7000th year, would be the seventh millenary, or millennial rest of the world; and he makes the following most important and valuable remark: "The tradition that the earth, as well as the religious state of its inhabitants, is to undergo a great change at the end of 6,000 years, has been found in the writings of Pagans, Jews, and christians; because six days were employed by Almighty God in the creation of the globe, after which he rested on the seventh; and as with him one day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day, it was concluded by the Cabalist and Jews, that the world was to continue 6,000 years; and on the conclusion of this period there would succeed a Sabbath of a thousand years of corresponding length, a millennium of rest and of peace. This idea has been traced in the Sibylline oracles, in the poems of Hesiod, in Plato, and prevailed long before the birth of Christ, relative to a momentous change which is supposed to await the earth after a period not exceeding 6,000 years. We find this expectation expressed by the Chaldeans, the Persians, the Egyptians, the Greeks, the Romans, orators, poets, philosophers; and the only difficulty we experience in the examination of the records collected from the literature of ages, is to account for so great unanimity of sentiment, where we cannot discover any source of information, or any authority, which so many different writers would consent to acknowledge for a conclusion so remarkable."

And he adds: "Whatever might be the origin of this anticipation so fondly cherished by Jew and Pagan, before the advent of our Savior, in regard to a happy change in the constitution of things, it is manifest that the hope of such a consummation was not superseded by Christ's residence upon the earth, and the many promises which he made to his disciples in relation to a more perfect state of existence hereafter: on the contrary, the first christians looked with a more earnest desire for the new heavens, and the new earth promised to their fathers; and connected this expectation, too, with the ancient hope that this globe was to undergo a material change at the end of 6,000 years, throwing off all its imperfections, which had arisen from the guilt of its inhabitants, and being then made to be the habitation of justice, benevolence, and purity, during a millennium of a thousand years, the Sabbath of this terrestrial world." I may just add that a poet,—if one may take a poet's testimony for anything, and sometimes the deep insight of the poet is truer than the philosopher,—the poet of our firesides, the most beautiful and instructive of them all, I mean Cowper, says:—

"The groans of nature in this nether world,
Which Heaven has heard for ages, have an end.
Foretold by prophets, and by poets sung,
Whose fire was kindled at the prophet's lamp,
The time of rest, the promised Sabbath comes.
Six thousand years of sorrow have well nigh
Fulfilled their tardy and disastrous course
Over a sinful world; and what remains
Of this tempestuous state of human things,
Is merely as the working of the sea
Before a calm, that rocks itself to rest:
For He, whose car the winds are, and the clouds
The dust that waits upon his sultry march,
When sin has moved him, and his wrath is hot,
Shall visit earth in mercy; shall descend
Propitious in his chariot, paved with love;
And what his storms have blasted and defaced,
For man's revolt, shall with a smile repair."

Mr. Scott, a very able writer upon prophecy, states, in his "Outlines of Prophecy,"—"The whole six days' work of creation typifies the whole six thousand years of the work of redemption; and the seventh day, or Sabbath of God, is the type of that seventh thousand year of redemption, the millennium or sabbatism, that first day, as it were, of universal joy and praise to Christ. Almost all writers on prophecy agree that the prophetical dates given us terminate between this present time and the year 1867."

I have given these extracts from competent authorities, all coming to one conclusion,—that the seventh thousand year of the world is to be its millennial rest; and I have shown you that, if the chronology of Mr. Fines Clinton be correct, and I am satisfied it is correct, we are at this very moment within [illegible] years of the commencement of what all these writers hope is the everlasting rest, the dawn of heaven, the millennial blessedness of the people of God; when all tears shall be dried, when all sorrows shall cease, when death shall die, and when Christ shall shine before the ancients gloriously, and this world shall enjoy that rest which has been foretold by prophets, celebrated by poets, anticipated by saints, and declared by an apostle to be the Sabbath-rest that remaineth for the people of God.

These are the data on which I form his own conclusion. I do not venture to dogmatize,—I do not attempt to dictate,—I do not presume to decide. I have shown that the best and ablest christian students are all agreed that 1867 is an era fraught with gigantic issues,—that some think it is the commencement of the millennial rest; others think it is the destruction of all the enemies ... are struck deep into our earth, and the universal spread of the empire of the Prince of Peace. Then, if these things be, we look at Europe at this moment, with its tense and awful interests. We can not but reflect upon the last ten years, that they have been ten years of collected events in the history of Europe, and of mankind. No one can look at Europe at this moment ...

Speak Kindly.

Speak kindly to thy fellow man,
Who treads sin's [illegible] track,
For naught but kindness ever can
Restore the wanderer back.

Speak kindly to the aged one,
Bowed with the weight of years,
Whose sands of life are almost run
In this dark vale of tears.

Speak kindly to the orphan lone,
Bereft of parents dear,
Perchance thy kind and gentle tone
His lonely heart may cheer.

Kindness, it is a paragon,
Of more than diamond worth;
It came from heaven down to man,
For heaven gave it birth.

O! then be kind, whoe'er thou art
That breathest mortal breath;
It shall make happy all thy life,
And sweeten even death. E. M. V.

For the Crisis.

I am Weary and would Rest.

"I am weary!" How often do those simple but expressive words come welling up from the heart as we journey life's rugged and thorny pathway. I am weary buffeting with the waves of adversity and affliction, and would rest. Perhaps in the joyous anticipations of youth, we have dared dream of happiness. Then the sunshine of life cast the varied rainbow glow of hope around us. Then all nature looked joyous and gay; the forest songsters tuning their melodious notes like sweet anthems from heaven wafting our ever fleeting minds to meditate on things past, present, and yet to come. We then viewed God's handiwork in the heavens, and in all the beauties which clothe the earth with charms, inviting us to stay, until the tendrils of affection cling with ivy-like tenacity around home and friends, and we are almost ready to say,—Heaven is here!

But soon we are rudely awakened from that bright dream; our spring-time is matured into summer; life puts on the earnest garb of reality; our fleety visions fade like morning mist; and how happy, if the rainbow glow of hope is transplanted by the hope of a better inheritance that is incorruptible, that fadeth not away.

Affliction comes, casting around us a gloom of almost impenetrable darkness. We pass a way-mark in life, and still we journey on, another, and another, stands out in bold relief, all leaving an indelible impress on the tablets of our hearts, and we sighingly say, "I am weary of life and would rest." But look! the bowed head is raised; the broken in heart receives the heavenly balm of consolation; faith beams from the countenance; for far away in the distance they see the disc of hope arising to the view; not a cloud obstructs the vision of that hope which is

"A beacon beaming from afar,
The weary wanderer's guiding star."

They picture in imagination that day when they shall meet those friends they have laid in the green church-yard amid the grass and flowers which they have often watered with their tears, thinking life's rugged steeps are passed to the mouldering form; that there is no more sighing or sorrowing for them here. Quietly they rest, angels guarding their lowly bed, the blue canopy of heaven their covering, from which the sun sheds its genial rays by day, and the golden stars watch by night. Clouds may darken the horizon, the tempest rage with fury, lightnings flash and thunders roll; yet peacefully they rest from all the tumults of this life.

Yes, courage, fainting heart, there is rest for the weary. How the sweet promise comes like balm to the wounded heart. Thank God for it! The merciful One says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." What hope it brings to the weary! how the heart beats with renewed faith and courage to struggle on yet a little longer, knowing that when our work is finished, and the battle won, there is a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give unto all them that love his appearing. Then will the wicked cease their troubling, and the weary be at rest.

Our Blessed Hope.

I have had a good social meeting this morning in reading the Crisis. It often occurs that the remarks of an individual calls to remembrance some exercise of our own, which quickens, and creates a desire to speak that the mind may be refreshed. Bro. Alling's remarks on the "Existing Powers" have had this effect. Other subjects have been instructive, and useful, but nothing meets the wants of a thirsty soul, save what pertains to its "Blessed Hope." When my spirit has been ready to faint for the longings it had for the personal presence of Christ, it has been with the greatest anxiety that I have turned to the sure word of prophecy to obtain a ray of light to cheer my heart, enliven my faith, and lengthen my patience. And as I have mused on the exhortations to be patient, I felt it was just what I needed—a patient continuance in well doing. One part of doing well was, to take heed to a more sure word of prophecy, as unto a light that shines in a dark place, until the day dawns and the Day Star arises in the heart. Jesus says, "He that overcometh and keepeth my words unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations . . . . even as I received of my Father, and I will give him the morning star." Jesus says, "I am the bright and morning star." What else can it be but to be made like Jesus? And as the day star is a sure token of morning, this refreshing, or being made one with Christ, will be a sure sign of his coming. And none, of all ages, who sustain the character to whom the promise is given, can fail of the blessing. And as Christ was seen forty days after his passion before he was taken up, and as this class follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth, they too will remain some days and be seen of many, when the angels will be sent to gather and take them where Jesus is, in the air. Moreover Paul says, "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection." Now the question comes, "How long, oh Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?"

In Rev. 7, a command is given to the four angels who hold the four winds, to hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till the servants of God are sealed in their foreheads. The number of them is given, afterward seen with the Lamb on the Mount Zion, having his Father's name in their foreheads. "These are they who follow the Lamb . . . . and were redeemed from among men, being the first fruits unto God and to the Lamb." The true Israel [prevailers with God] of all ages who have fulfilled the condition of Christ's promise: "He that overcometh . . . will I write upon him the name of my God."

Gabriel says to Daniel, "Behold, I will make thee know what shall be in the last end of the indignation"; and as he progressed in his instructions, he describes a certain king (the last one before the resurrection) who should prosper till the indignation be accomplished. There is also an indignation spoken of by Isaiah the prophet, 26:27: "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast;" which I think is the same that Gabriel calls the last end of the indignation, and which is to be accomplished under the prosperous reign of this certain king.

Let this sealing and entering into chambers be what it may, I think it will be an abiding under the shadow of the Almighty. It will be an escape from those things which shall come to pass. "Only with their eyes shall they behold and see the reward of the wicked." As the indignation referred to was to be on Daniel's people, the last end will come upon those who sustain the character of Jacob [supplanter]. Jeremiah exclaims, "Alas! for that day is great so that none is like it: it is even the time of Jacob's trouble but he shall be saved out of it. For I am with thee, saith the Lord, to save: though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee: but I will correct thee in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished."

It is clear from the signs that Jesus gave of his coming, and also the events of the sixth seal, that we are living between the falling of the stars and the departing of the heavens as a scroll [the same heavens the stars fell from], which implies a shaking or rending. According to Matthew's word the next thing after the shaking is the sign of the Son of man, and mourning of the tribes of the earth. In Rev. we read they hid themselves in dens and rocks of the mountains, and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of Him who sitteth upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb.

Isaiah, in describing the event says, they cast their idols of silver to the moles and to the bats to go into the clefts of the rocks, and into the top of the ragged rocks, for fear of the Lord and for the glory of his majesty, when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth. It has seemed to me for a long time that the shaking of the heavens and earth will be the time when life and immortality will be given to the saints; who are to judge the world with Christ, will go in with him to the marriage and the door will be shut. The heavens that have been rent will close, and the danger will seem to be over. The nations will become angry and suffer themselves to be gathered to a place called Armageddon, where the battle of that great day of God Almighty will be fought. "And the Lamb shall overcome them: He is Lord of lords and King of kings; and they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful."

For the Crisis.

Defining my Position.

Some readers of the Crisis wish to know if I am going to argue the immortality of the soul. They supposed that when I call the soul an immaterial substance, I can mean nothing less. In reply I will say here that I mean nothing of the kind whatever, and have not dreamed of inferring immortality from immateriality.

I will explain as I proceed how I use the terms substance, matter, spirit, etc. But I will here add that the old argument for immortality from the non-material nature of the soul, is decrepit with age, and fast dying out, among orthodox people who still regard the soul as immaterial. This argument for immortality has lost caste. No respectable thinker ever employs it now. It confessedly proves too much, for it involves the immortality of the brutes, and of all life. I sometimes meet the argument, either in dogmatic writers, like Luther Lee; or among country preachers, who have read a very few very standard books, fifty or a hundred years old; or among dear, simple-minded christians, who have heard of such a philosophical argument for immortality, and have admired it just because they didn't understand it.

But I repeat that no thinking man cares a straw for it now. And yet the belief in spirit, as something different from matter, is as prevalent and strong as ever. Excepting among the Spiritualists. They are all materialists. This is a paradox of which I have long been aware; which, with other things, I may explain hereafter.

1867.

BY JOHN CUMMING, D. D.

"And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days."—Dan. 12: 11, 12.

This is a very difficult passage, but we have no right to pass it by; and if the discussion should seem uninteresting we must pardon the necessity of it, while we accept conclusions only in as far as they seem borne out by data. But my discussion will be less the expression of opinions of my own, and rather what I have been collecting during many years,—the opinions and the interpretations of some of the best, and wisest, and most laborious men who have given their attention to this very important subject. What I shall endeavor to show now is this,—that whatever theories of the fulfillment of these dates are held, whether they fix the commencement at this period, or at that period, or at some other period, nearly all concur in one remarkable conclusion, namely, that 1867 is to be the great crisis, the testing crisis in the events of history, in the fulfillment of prophecy, and in the experience of mankind. What I wish to show is, that the best, the wisest, and the most thoughtful of writers on the subject of prophecy, however much they may differ in certain details,—and they do differ,—nearly all coincide in this, that 1867 is to be a great crisis; and that if all that some expect to occur at that period do not occur, we are at least on the eve of events, as Lord Carlisle has expressed it in his work upon Daniel, the most stupendous, if not ushering in the very close of this present christian economy; we must carefully weigh the quotations, that thus we may be able to judge whether the data on which these writers have come to their conclusions be correct or not.

Elliot and Mede have shown that the 2,300 years, which Daniel gives as one of the great chronological epochs, terminate about the year 1821 or 1822; that is, dating them from the march of Xerxes, and the meridian splendor of the Persian Empire. But a very learned and able clergyman of the church of England, who has written a work called "The Terminal Synchronism of Daniel's Two Periods," differs from Mr. Elliot. He thinks that the 2,300 years, one of Daniel's great epochs, after which, as I showed you, the Eastern Apostasy, or the waters of the river Euphrates that should overflow Europe, that is, the power of Mahomet, should begin to subside, began at the autumnal equinox of 433 B. C.; and if the 2,300 years began at the autumnal equinox of 433 B. C., then that great period would terminate in the autumnal equinox of 1867. Elliot's opinion was that the 2,300 years measure out the taking away of the daily sacrifice, and the exhaustion of that great eastern eclipse which was to overshadow the light and the sunshine of heaven in the eastern world, and that they end in 1821, at which date Mahometanism as a power in Europe was shaken to its centre, and began to cross the Bosphorus, and to fall back upon its ancient channels in Asia, and to cease to be a dominant, triumphant, and advancing fanaticism. But this writer thinks that the proper date is 433 B. C.; and if so, then they would terminate in 1867, when, according to him, Mahometanism will be utterly expunged, and the cross will shine where the crescent now waves in triumph. But more than this; this writer thinks also that the expression "time, times, and half a time," which all commentators admit to be 360 years, twice 360 years and 180 years, making altogether 1,260 years, called in the Apocalypse 42 prophetic months, which is the same thing,—called also 1260 prophetic days,—start from A. D. 607. Mr. Elliot, and Newton, and Mede, think that the 1,260 years, descriptive of the great Western Apostasy, began at the year 532, at which era Justinian constituted the Bishop of Rome to have supreme civil, ecclesiastical, and spiritual jurisdiction; they consider that at that period the Apostasy was invested with supreme civil and ecclesiastical power, and therefore with its permanent form as a politico-sacerdotal system. But this writer differs from them; he says that the 1,260 years do not begin at 532 after Christ, but that they begin at the year 607, when the Emperor Phocas constituted Pope Boniface III. the universal head of the universal church, and the supreme and chief bishop, priest and prelate of Christendom.

If you take this latter opinion, then you add the 1,260 years to the year 607, and it brings you down to the same period at which his 2,300 years terminate, namely, 1867; and according, therefore, to this theory, not only will Mahometanism totally cease at that period, but the Papacy also, with its pope and its cardinals, and its whole ecclesiastical despotism, will sink like a millstone into the depths of the ocean; and the world, east and west, emancipated from the incubus that has crushed and darkened it, shall reflect the beams of an unsetting sun, and form a portion of that great empire which constitutes the kingdom of our God and of his Christ. I must say I prefer Elliot's; but what I wish to impress is the remarkable fact that both interpretations land us in 1867, as a great dominant era, characterized by stupendous events, and involving mighty changes in the present constitution of things. The theory adopted by the interpreters I prefer is, that the 1,260 years which were to mete out the dominant power of the great Western Apostasy, began in A. D. 532, when Justinian in his "Pandects" gave the supreme authority to the Bishop of Rome. If you add 1,260 years to 532, it brings you down to 1792. Accordingly, at the exhaustion of the 1,260 years, in 1792, the Papacy, according to the description in the word of God, was to come under the judgment of Heaven, and gradually to be exhausted. Read "Alison's History," or any other authentic history, and you will find that the great outburst of the French Revolution in 1792 commenced so overwhelming an onslaught on the Papal power, with all its dependencies, that from that day to this, Romanism has been a dying system, exhausted of its chiefest vitality, and struggling for a foothold in any land to which it can have access; so much so, that I have repeated again and again the conviction, that I have no more fear of Popery gaining the upper hand, than I have of Mahometanism or Hindooism gaining supremacy.

The Pope is on his last legs, struggling for existence; and the only unhappy feature, and the most unhappy one, I must candidly confess, is that the only nation upon earth where it is gaining power amid the population, is in this land of ours. Among the lowest classes, I know, from statistics which I could quote, did time permit, the Roman Catholic religion is losing every day. Among the middle classes it never had a footing; but among the higher classes it is at this moment daily gaining converts. They serve their apprenticeship to gaudily decorated churches, some of which have been recently opened; and after they have been saturated with homœopathic doses there, they finally hand themselves over to the allopathic treatment of Pio Nono, and become members of the Roman Catholic Church. It does seem the most inexplicable thing, that the peers of England, illustrious many of them for their genius, their eloquence, their brilliant antecedents, their resistance of tyranny in every form, and their vindication of the noblest rights of our noble land, should any of them believe the monstrous fables, and accept the loud and insolent pretensions of a system that is indeed found in the word of God, but with a brand upon its brow, and its doom pronounced before even it came into existence. But so it is. We rejoice that the feet of our nation are in the right way; the head, or the upper classes, is bewildered; but the heart of old England beats sound and true, and you must not judge by the wavering pulse at the wrist of the few, that the beat of England's heart is in any other condition than its normal, its Protestant and Christian one.

Assuming that 532 began the 1,260 years, what is next to take place, Daniel tells us in this passage, to which I specially ask attention, as confirmatory of the theory I am trying to uphold, that first of all there shall be time, times, and a half a time, or 1,260 years, and then there shall be 1,290 years. In other words, Daniel says that 1,260 years shall be augmented by thirty years more; at the end of which thirty years there shall be some great event, which we have to ascertain. Now if we add to 1792, when the 1,260 years terminated, an additional thirty years, it brings us down to 1822. But 1822 is the terminating period of the 2,300 years also, according to Elliott's interpretation. Well, did anything take place in 1822 that would justify that period as a terminating epoch? We find that Turkey, in the language of Lamartine, began to die for want of Turks; the whole force of that great system of propagandism then began its rapid exhaustion; and from that day to this, even our efforts to keep back Russia have not kept up Turkey; it is at this moment in the pangs of dissolution. I stated four or five years ago that it would be so; and however justified we were, and we were justified in trying to prevent Russia from disturbing the balance of power of Europe; yet, as I then said, our efforts to preserve Turkey would be vain. Russia has still a sign-board near Petersburg, on which is written: "The way to Constantinople," and in the lapse of years Constantinople will be hers, and Russia will yet play a part in the history of the world probably unprecedented for a thousand years.

But Daniel says: "Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days." Here is still an additional period. He adds 75 years to the 1,260, or 45 years to the 1,290. He mentions three periods, you observe, all beginning, we here assume, at 532; first 1,260, ending in 1792; then 1,290, ending in 1822; and then 1,335, ending in 1867; so that, according to this theory, Daniel's period, when he shall be blessed or happy that waiteth and cometh to the close of the 1,335 years, that period assumed by Elliot to be the millennial rest, would begin in the year 1867, and last for a thousand years of uninterrupted felicity, and blessedness, and peace. But what I wish to impress is that, according to both theories, 1867 again evolves as the year of stupendous changes. And it is very remarkable, too, what will confirm this, and what I shall quote passages to prove that Fines Clinton, the ablest chronologist of the age, has shown, and I think with irresistible force, that our era at present, namely, 1859, is not the correct and real era in the chronology of the world. His idea is that Christ came about the year of the world 4,138; and that in the course of a few years more we shall have arrived at the close of the sixth thousand, and at the commencement of the seventh thousand year of the world. What it is interesting to show in connection with this, is the universal belief among Jews and Gentiles, Rabbinists, Talmudists, and Fathers, that the seventh thousand year of the world is to correspond to the seventh day of the week; six days the working week, and the seventh day the Sabbath-day rest; 6,000 years for the working-world week, and the 7,000th year to be what the apostles describe as the rest, or the sabbatismos that remaineth for the people of God.

Several extracts so far seem to authenticate, and vindicate, this conclusion, and you will take them of course for what they are worth: First, Lady Hester Stanhope, in a letter from Syria to her physician, in the year 1827, says: "All those who come [illegible] may go back in the Turkish year, 1245." And the physician adds, in a note: "It would appear from this, that Lady Hester Stanhope expected the accomplishment of some great event in the year of the Hegira, 1245." The Hegira dates our year 622; add 1,245 to 622, and we have the year when she expected some stupendous event, 1867. The late Mr. Irving, deeply deceived in many things, extravagant in more, but a man of splendid genius, of unquestionable piety, the victim of a belief that everybody was good and great, and incapable of a suspicion that anybody could deceive, said: "Not only amongst the Turks in Europe, but all over the East, the Mahometan power is wasting away; and like all doomed things begins to be conscious of its approaching end; insomuch that they say the Ottoman Porte is paralyzed with prophecies of its speedy ruin. Is it not so written, the Turks say, in your Christian book, that our religion is to come to an end within forty years? And what is very remarkable, a friend of mine, who traveled lately into Central Africa, and stood on the Himalaya mountains in India, by the holy pool, where never Christian had dwelt before, found there, also, an expectation of a religion from the West, which in the space of forty years was to possess the earth,—remarks which they made to me with their own lips." Now the African traveler or friend to whom he refers, was Major Denham or Captain Clapperton; they were in Africa in the year 1823; and forty years added to this would bring us down to 1863. Again, in another part of this book he says: "At the end of the 1,335th day of Daniel, or in the year 1867, which is 42 years from the time when I now write, the period of blessedness shall begin, and the resurrection of the righteous shall then take place." Mr. Cuningham, of Lainshaw, a man of profound research into prophecy, writing in the year 1837, says, that if the whole of the evidence which he adduces be considered, and carefully weighed, he thinks it will be impossible to doubt the accuracy of his dates; and he believes that we were at that time a little more than 29 years and two months from the end of Daniel's 1,335 years; that is, they would expire in the year 1867.

The author of a very able and elaborate treatise, called "The Seventh Vial," writes thus upon the same subject: "No sooner had the period of judgment passed over Europe from 1789 to 1815, ended, than the ancient landmarks were restored. Where is the promise of his coming? came to be the universal cry." He points to the year 1865, "when, according to Daniel, a blessed era shall begin, the millennium be ushered in, and the complete destruction of Antichrist shall then take place." "We are," says that writer, "on the eve of the long anticipated Sabbath of rest and blessedness." And the late Rev. Edward Bickersteth, one of the most able, pious, and spiritually-minded men I ever knew,—and I have listened to him, as a pupil, with profit and delight many a time, and derived from his works some of my best and most precious information—the uncle of the present Bishop of Ripon—says: "If we reckon the 2,300 days in Daniel, from Ezra's commission, B. C. 457, they would expire in 1843; but if we reckon them as we should, from the last cleansing of Nehemiah, in B. C. 433, then they expire in 1867, which I consider to be the period of the restoration of the Jewish nation, the cleansing of the sanctuary, and the preparations for the millennial dawn and sunshine."

I shall quote lastly, from one with whose sentiments in some things I do not agree, Bishop Russell, a Scottish Bishop: he writes especially upon the idea, that the 7000th year, would be the seventh millenary, or millennial rest of the world; and he makes the following most important and valuable remark: "The tradition that the earth, as well as the religious state of its inhabitants, is to undergo a great change at the end of 6,000 years, has been found in the writings of Pagans, Jews, and christians; because six days were employed by Almighty God in the creation of the globe, after which he rested on the seventh; and as with him one day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day, it was concluded by the Cabalist and Jews, that the world was to continue 6,000 years; and on the conclusion of this period there would succeed a Sabbath of a thousand years of corresponding length, a millennium of rest and of peace. This idea has been traced in the Sibylline oracles, in the poems of Hesiod, in Plato, and prevailed long before the birth of Christ, relative to a momentous change which is supposed to await the earth after a period of [illegible] 6,000 years. We find this expectation expressed by the Chaldeans, the Persians, the Egyptians, the Greeks, the Romans, [illegible] orators, poets, philosophers; and the difficulty we experience in the examination of the records collected from the [illegible] ature of ages, is to account for so great unanimity of sentiment, where we cannot discover any source of information, or any authority, which so many different minds would consent to acknowledge for a conclusion so remarkable."

And he adds: "Whatever might be the origin of this anticipation so [illegible] ished by Jew and Pagan, before the advent of our Savior, in regard to a happy change in the constitution of things, it is manifest that the hope of such a consummation was not superseded by Christ's residence upon the earth, and the [illegible] ises which he made to his disciples in relation to a more perfect state of existence hereafter: on the contrary, the first christians looked with a more earnest desire for the new heavens, and the new earth promised to their fathers; and connected this expectation, too, with the ancient hope that this globe was to undergo a material change at the end of 6,000 years, throwing off all its imperfections, which had arisen from the guilt of its inhabitants, and being then made to be the habitation of justice, benevolence, and purity, during a millennium of a thousand years, the Sabbath of the terrestrial world." I may just add that a poet,—if one may take a poet's testimony for anything, and sometimes the insight of the poet is truer than the philosopher,—the poet of our firesides, the most beautiful and instructive of them all, I mean Cowper, says:—

"The groans of nature in this nether world,
Which Heaven has heard for ages, have an end.
Foretold by prophets, and by poets sung,
Whose fire was kindled at the prophet's lamp,
The time of rest, the promised Sabbath comes.
Six thousand years of sorrow have well nigh
Fulfilled their tardy and disastrous course
Over a sinful world; and what remains
Of this tempestuous state of human things,
Is merely as the working of the sea
Before a calm, that rocks itself to rest:
For He, whose car the winds are, and the clouds
The dust that waits upon his sultry march,
When sin has moved him, and his wrath is hot,
Shall visit earth in mercy; shall descend
Propitious in his chariot, paved with love;
And what his storms have blasted and defaced,
For man's revolt, shall with a smile repair."

Mr. Scott, a very able writer upon prophecy, states, in his "Outlines of Prophecy,"—"The whole six days' work of creation typifies the whole six thousand years of the work of redemption; and the seventh day, or Sabbath of God, is the type of that seventh thousand year of redemption, the millennium, or sabbatism, that first day, as it were, of universal joy and praise to Christ. Almost all writers on prophecy agree that the prophetical dates given us terminate between this present time and the year 1867."

I have given these extracts from competent authorities, all coming to one conclusion,—that the seventh thousand year of the world is to be its millennial rest; and I have shown you that if the chronology of Mr. Fines Clinton be correct, and I am satisfied it is correct, we are at this very moment within eight years of the commencement of what all these writers hope is the everlasting rest, the dawn of heaven, the millennial blessedness of the people of God; when all tears shall be dried, when all sorrows shall cease, when death shall die, and when Christ shall shine before the ancients gloriously; and this world shall enjoy that rest which has been foretold by prophets, celebrated by poets, anticipated by saints, and declared by an apostle to be the Sabbath-rest that remaineth for the people of God.

These are the data on which each can form his own conclusion. I do not venture to dogmatize,—I do not attempt to dictate,—I do not presume to decide. I have shown that the best and ablest christian students are all agreed that 1867 is an era fraught with gigantic issues,—that some think it is the commencement of the millennial rest; others think it is the destruction of all the errors whose roots are struck deep into our world, and the universal spread of the empire of the Prince of Peace. Then, if these things be so, we look at Europe at this moment, still intense and awful interest. No one can reflect upon the last ten years without seeing that they have been the years of unprecedented events in the history of the world and of mankind. No one can look upon Europe at this moment without feeling that it is actually a sleeping volcano; [illegible] will be spared in the wreck of nations. Her banners may be torn; but she will, we hope, survive, for she separated, at the great reformation, from the Ten Kingdoms of the Papacy that are now coming under the judgments of Heaven; and I believe, therefore,—and I am refreshed and delighted while I express the belief—that old England will have no western setting in the horizon, till its beams mingle with the beams of that Sun beneath whose wings is healing, and in whose presence there is light and liberty for the nations of the earth.

But what does all this teach us now? Suppose I had proved to you, to demonstration, that 1867 was to close this present era. Some will say, Oh! then we had better not insure our lives,—we had better not take leases,—we had better do nothing; but fling everything off, and let society go to ruin. I say no. What is the Savior's command? "Occupy till I come." What is the condition of the people when he comes? "Two women shall be grinding in the mill; the one shall be taken," that is, one a christian, "and the other left." What does that teach us? That our duties are determined by God's plain precepts; they are not to be modified by any of his prophecies, however clear. The prophecy I read for comfort,—the precept I read for direction. And, therefore, when people say we act inconsistently,—as it was said not very long ago by caricaturists and others in the papers,—that, because I took the lease of a house, therefore I did not believe these conclusions, I answer that if I thought it would be for my interest or advantage, or the advantage of my family, I would take a house for a hundred years' lease to-morrow. I have nothing to do with prophecy in determining my duties,—they are to be determined by God's precepts, and by common sense; and if I believed that 1867 were to end the present economy of things, I should have my hand equally busy in my work. I would bid the soldier appear in the ranks, the merchant in his counting-house, the senator in the parliament,—every man at his post; for the post of duty is always the place of safety before God, and in the sight of all mankind. But whilst our hands should be at duty, our hearts should be more than ever in heaven. Some people say, Oh, how shocking, how terrible, that you may die to-morrow! I might say, how shocking, that the aged of sixty has only some fifteen years to live, on an average. Death to the individual, is just as solemn as the close of this economy to the whole world: but there is nothing shocking in it. Our Savior does not so construe it; for what does he say? When ye see these things begin to come to pass, what! be terrified,—be alarmed, resign your duties? No, no, no. The Bible is too rich in common sense: "Lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." And who can possibly regret the probable nearness of such a consummation? What will it be? The end of sin, the emancipation of the oppressed,—the extinction of war,—the return of earth's ancient glory,—the restoration of all the blessedness we have lost,—a peace that passeth all understanding; no more quarrels, no more misapprehensions, no more sins, no more sorrows. Instead of dreading the advent of so glorious an epoch, with all our hearts we should pray, as from the heart I do, "Come, Lord Jesus; yea, come quickly."

For the Crisis.

"Reasons for my Hope."

The second edition of this work is now ready for delivery. Persons whose orders have been delayed can now be supplied. I hope to circulate at least TEN THOUSAND copies of this book. Who will help?—Price, BOUND IN CLOTH, by mail, 50 cts.; price without postage, 40 cts.; three copies by express for $1.00; ten copies do. for $3.00; fifty copies do. for $13.00; one hundred copies do. for $25.00. Price in stiff neat glazed paper covers, by mail single 30 cts.; price without postage, 25 cts.; four copies prepaid for $1.00; five copies without postage, for $1.00; fifty copies do. for $8.50; one hundred copies do. for $15.00.

These prices are low because I want the work scattered. Cash should always accompany the order. I have no time to keep accounts, and when the books are gone I want the pay to print more at once. I will give to the poor, but I hate to sell books and dun folks two or three years for the pay and then not get it. Who will take one hundred copies—sell what they can and give away the rest? Have not several brethren $15 to use in this way? Scatter "Reasons for my Hope," and I will have something else good for you soon. I have half a dozen books in my head that would have got out before this if brethren would only order the books and scatter them, instead of compelling me to peddle them round the country to get money to print more. Let us all be diligent, the Master cometh soon. Orders with the pay should be addressed H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I. For sale at this office.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MAY 16, 1860.

Relief for the Distressed;
or,
How we got out of "Doubting Castle."

No. 21.

In our last, we remarked, we have reason to suspect there has been foul play among the managers of "Doubting Castle." Some movements have looked very suspicious to us, as we have been passing through its various apartments; and a deep impression has been made upon our mind, that the worst features of the "Castle" were kept carefully concealed. And yet every thing looked so nice, and the learned D. D.'s were so polite to us, and apparently so glad to see us, we hardly dared to indulge the thought that they were not just what they appeared to be. We were invited into their magnificent chapel to attend religious exercises. Every thing was conducted with the most perfect decorum; the singing, from some distinguished operatic vocalists, was performed in a masterly manner, while the deep-toned organ stirred every nerve within us. Then followed "an eloquent prayer" from one of the distinguished D. D.'s, and then an elegantly written discourse on departed spirits, and the interest they take in our welfare. The exercises were closed with a beautiful piece of music from the opera, a little altered for Sabbath use. After the benediction, the fashionable elite, in silks, satins and diamonds, moved slowly and gracefully out, while the organist played a brilliant overture to a new ballet.

Notwithstanding nothing was said or done to awaken in us any religious emotions, or cause us to think of the meek and lowly Jesus; yet the exercises were so imposing, and sustained by so many of the first class of people, that we almost shrunk from the idea that it was not the true worship of God; and had we not promised a thorough examination of the premises, we think we should have turned from the unpleasant duty. Our heart almost fainted at the thought of confronting all the learned theologians in the "Castle," knowing the bitter invectives that would certainly be heaped upon us; and also the mortification we should feel if we found our strong suspicions were groundless. When in this dilemma, it occurred to us that when we left our dear Bro. B. last week, he was preparing to leave the "Castle," having found the key that would unlock all the doors and lead him again into the King's highway. But we had seen nothing of him during the week, consequently he must still be in the "Castle," although we did not see him at the chapel exercises. Perhaps he is sick. On inquiry, we were told very politely, and with an air of gravity, expressing apparent sadness at the thought that he had left the institution. But we were so well satisfied to the contrary, our suspicions of foul play were doubled at once, and we then resolved, in the strength of our great King, to know all about "Doubting Castle," and rescue our Bro. B. if possible.

In all our previous examinations, we had entered no rooms where we were not invited by the Faculty. But now we determined, in company with our associates, to examine every thing with as little ceremony as the French soldiers manifested at the Inquisition at Madrid. After visiting several rooms, and finding nothing to strengthen our suspicions, we almost began to wish we had not undertaken this second examination; thinking, perhaps, "Doubting Castle" theology is not so bad after all as we supposed; and that no very great evil had come from it, even though it be as false as we had claimed.

Just at this time we noticed another closet door in a room not before examined. We looked into the closet, saw nothing about it different from any other. Some old clothes and papers were lying on the bottom, as if carelessly thrown in to get them out of the way. As we turned to leave, we noticed an expression upon the countenances of the Faculty that indicated extreme anxiety mingled with fear. We at once turned back to the closet, removed the things upon the floor, and to our surprise, found a trap-door, which was immediately opened, when we discovered a stairway, leading to a deep and extensive subterranean hall, dimly lighted. As we descended the staircase, we could not help thinking of the fabled infernal regions of the ancient heathen.

We first entered a large hall hung with paintings illustrative of hero worship. In these we saw the first fruits of "Doubting Castle" theology. We learned that the ancient Egyptians were deluded into hero-worship by the artful devices of demons, who pretended to be the spirits of noted men. It was at once apparent, that had the Egyptians known and believed the Bible, which teaches that the dead have no knowledge, they would have rejected the lies of the demons, and been saved from such heathenish idolatry.

We entered another large and elegant apartment, where we found a great number engaged in praying to departed saints. We thought this looked very consistent, provided our friends do come back to this world after death; for when they lived here we often asked them to pray for us, why not when they return? We saw that the whole system of Papal worship was based on the doctrine that man has a conscious spirit that lives when he is dead; and that if this were given up, it would at once come to a perpetual end; and that no more money would be paid for praying souls out of purgatory.

After discovering that hero-worship, prayers to saints, purgatory, and indeed the whole system of Catholicism were all resting upon the same doctrines held by the "Doubting Castle" D. D's. our minds were prepared to find every system of theological error supported the same dogma. We began to see the magnitude of the lie of Satan when he said, "Ye shall not surely die."

In the next room we found a kind of an altar, whereon we learned that widows were burnt alive. When we ascertained the history of this barbarous practice, we learned it was for the purpose of having the widow's soul escape so as to go and be with her husband's soul in the "spirit-land." We now saw clearer than ever, that the whole system of Pagan worship was based on the same dogma as Catholicism, and that the latter was only a modification of the former.

In the next room we found some horrid looking pictures, illustrating some appalling scenes. A great crowd of men were represented; in their midst were some two or three hundred apparently prepared for execution. We judged this to be the case, as one of their number was about receiving the death-blow from the executioner. We inquired into the history of their crimes. Judge of our surprise, when we learned that they were faithful servants of one Mexican noble, lately deceased; and that these servants were being put to death so that their souls could go and wait upon his lordly soul in the "spirit land." By this time our eyes were fully opened to the real merits of "Doubting Castle" theology. We anxiously inquired what is coming next?

We advanced into a large hall, the very sight of which was appalling. In one part was a kind of throne for the Inquisitor-general, and surrounding seats for his associates. The room was ornamented with pictures illustrating the most horrid scenes of cruelty ever invented and executed by human beings. The implements of torture were still lying about; the very sight of which was enough to make the blood run chill in our veins. We inquired into the history of this infernal machinery, and the object of its use. We were told, this was the place where the Catholics tormented the body for the good of the soul; claiming, if they could make the soul yield by bodily torment, then it might be saved. Here we saw again the fruits of the theology of "Doubting Castle," and learned the history of the doctrine of endless suffering. In case the soul would not recant in consequence of the Papal tortures inflicted in this infernal dungeon, then it was condemned to eternal torment. Oh! how these enemies of the cross of Christ have perverted the blessed gospel of Jesus, turning thousands and millions into infidelity, and leading them in the way to eternal destruction.

At this time we began to wonder why PROTESTANTISM should sustain an institution resting upon such a foundation, with such iniquitous dens beneath. But on a moment's reflection, the reason was apparent. The foundation and cap-stone of "Doubting Castle" rest upon the doctrine that man has a spirit which is conscious when he is dead. On this doctrine was founded too hero-worship, prayers to saints, purgatory, burning of widows, slaughtering of servants, torments of the inquisition, and eternal misery; and as Protestantism has adopted this anti-scriptural dogma, and the doctrine of eternal misery, it was perfectly consistent that it should build "Doubting Castle" over the old cellar of the inquisition, and rest it upon the same cornerstone. We saw clearly the intimate relation between "the mother of harlots" and her daughters.

Having explored the basement of "Doubting Castle" to our satisfaction, we concluded to wind our way out. In our return, we passed through several new rooms, one of which was occupied by Swedenborgians, who were engaged in tracing imaginary "CORRESPONDENCES" between the natural and the spiritual world; receiving their instruction from demons who were talking through Emanuel Swedenborg, as their medium, in strains of sublime nonsense, that made the common people stand all aghast, who were mourning because they could not comprehend it. O how unlike the plain teachings of our dear Savior, when the common people heard him gladly.

In another room, we found a company of Shakers, who were receiving their instruction from a demon pretending to be the spirit of Ann Lee. They seemed to be in ecstasies, dancing for joy at the revelations from the supposed spirit of "Mother Ann."

In another room, we found a company around a table receiving communications from what claimed to be departed human spirits. Here were hymns, class-leaders, deacons, elders, and a host of clergymen from the different evangelical denominations, consulting the spirits after the manner of the old heathen oracles. We listened awhile to their instructions, and found they all denied the resurrection of the dead and the literal coming of Christ. They also denied that Jesus is our Savior and the Son of God, and declared that God is nothing more than a principle in all matter. They all taught "the soul is immortal," and upon this doctrine their whole system rested. When we heard them deny "Father and Son," we cried out, "this is the ANTI-CHRIST."

As we passed through this subterranean labyrinth, we came across the cells where the saints of God had been shut up to starve in chains. In the distance we heard a mournful sound. We listened, and discovered it was the voice of earnest prayer. We hastened to the spot, and here found our dear Bro. B. confined in one of the dark cells of the old "Castle," half starved, and suffering with pain brought on by the cold damps of his dreary dungeon. It was a joyful meeting; and we were not long in bringing him out of that dismal den of demons. Thank the Lord for his rescue; we are paid a thousand fold for all our labors.

While rejoicing over him, the thought occurred, there may be others immured in those dungeons. We went back in search for more, and succeeded in finding scores in the same sad condition, who were brought out with great rejoicings. It was almost equal to a resurrection from the dead.

After the rescue of these weary pilgrims from the old "Castle," we longed for the day to arrive when it would be burnt with an unquenchable fire. We rejoice to know the time is at hand.

Dear reader, when the day of its destruction comes, may we be found free from the theology of "Doubting Castle," ready to welcome the return of Jesus our Savior.

Discussion with Dr. Lyon.

Our discussion with Dr. Lyon at Bridgeport resulted in opening the eyes of some to the immoral and atheistical tendency of Spiritualism. He appeared to have no more respect for the Bible, than a "last year's almanac." He spoke like one who had outgrown the wisdom of the wise, inspired men, Christ and our heavenly Father. It was painful to hear his blasphemous talk. He appears to be a ripe Spiritualist. It is said he was once a very successful Baptist preacher. What a change! When Spiritualism is matured, it becomes licentious atheism.

He endeavored to prove the immortality of the soul from philosophy; but like all others who have made the attempt, he succeeded in making a total failure. He admitted, if he could not prove the immortality of the soul, he should be without foundation. He said if he went to the Bible to prove his position, he should get whipped; thus admitting that the doctrine is not taught in the Scriptures.

His arguments consisted mostly in assertions and propositions without proof; such as could not be logically sustained.

He obtained a reporter to write out his sayings in full, with only a few of our propositions, omitting our arguments and proof texts, and intends to publish this as a report of the discussion.

The following list of some of his sayings will give the reader a faint idea of his position: "The devil is one of the most amiable beings." "What sensible man would not admit that a dead man knows nothing." "Death is the antithesis of life." "There is no such thing as death." Man is a spark of Divinity." "The Bible is not in harmony with nature." "If I fail to prove the immortality of the soul, my position is not sustained.' "If man has no immortality, God never made him." "All that God made is immortal." "I do not believe the dead know not any thing, because the Bible says so." "If I had no other arguments than what the Bible affords, I should agree with my opponent." "They are overthrown who endeavor to sustain the immortality of the soul from the Bible." "If I go to the Bible he will whip me." "I design to demonstrate the immortality of the soul from philosophy." "No passage in the Bible that teaches the resurrection of the body." "God is as much in the libertine as the most pious saint that ever lived." "Man grew up from the lower order of animals." "Jesus has come." "Jesus has never seen his body since his crucifixion." "No man can meet my arguments."

"The Battle Summer."

The approaching summer is denominated, prospectively, "the battle summer." Says the Banner of Light:

"The nation is to pass through a quadrennial fever of excitement, this summer, more intense, without doubt, if not more absolutely fierce in its characteristics than has fallen to its experience since the adoption of the Constitution. All men are looking forward to it, intently, some rendered anxious on one account, and others for reasons in all respects different. It appears to be considered in advance, that business avocations are, to a very considerable extent, to be set aside on account of this approaching excitement, and both press and preachers have begun to utter their counsels and their warning relative to all who expect to participate in the coming melo-drama. . . . It has been, somewhat widely discussed of late, we have good reason to know, if it is not best for all men in this country who believe in the renewing agency of spirit-communion, and whose inspirations may be found to be the purest and holiest possible to the heart of man, to step forth at this time and organize themselves into a body for political purposes."

In a discourse at the Melodeon, Boston, April 15th, 1860, Mrs. A. M. Spence remarks:

"Spiritualism will be like the David, and slay the Goliah of wrong with the pebbles of truth, without shedding his blood. Her effect you will witness in the result of your next Presidential campaign. The Church and the State will be revolutionized by it, and then society, on which they are based, will feel its power and bend to it. If you, as Spiritualists, are luke-warm, you are like the foolish virgins who had not their lamps trimmed ready for the coming of the bridegroom. You need no excitation of your faculties to know your nation is in danger. Politics will rage heavier and more powerful at the next election than ever before, and now every day your meetings of New England "strikers" bespeak a loss of friendly, trade relations between north and south. The two sections of your common country are arrayed against each other like Cain and Abel, and one will surely destroy the other, unless a power interferes mighty to check, and strong to mend broken confidence, and a fractured brotherhood. The cause is real, and tangible, though its effect is as yet a shadow. Spiritualism is the only power which can prevent this disaster. Everything else is impotent and vain. . . . Spiritualism has not done its work yet—it has a greater one to do. It will soon have a controlling power over government. Your government will never be elevated till your religion is revolutionized."

Says the Charleston correspondent of the Boston Traveller:

"Everybody seems astonished at the results of the last hour. It is hard for men to believe that the great National Democratic party is scattered to fragments, and they know not what to say. Everybody is speculating in regard to the results which are to follow. But nobody seems to dream of reconciliation. Indeed, in the present temper of the delegates from the different sections of the country, nobody seems to desire it. The general truth is that the great Democracy is used up, and each party charges the other with being guilty of its blood."

"Jesus is Here Already."

The above heading may sound rather strange to the readers of the Crisis. It is a saying of Dr. Griswold, the editor of the Sunbeam, published at Batavia, N. Y. This Sunbeam has just ceased to shine, having set in obscure darkness, and there is but little probability that we shall receive any illuminations either from its past rays, or from its surviving editor. There was some prospect that we should meet in discussion; but, like the Sunbeam, it has disappeared. The editor says:—

"The World's Crisis thinks that Jesus Christ will come to the world within eight years. We presume that the World's Crisis expect to see him come out of the clouds in a physical body. . . . . We can assure the World's Crisis, or any one else desiring to inquire into the facts that Jesus is here already. We have talked with the spirit of the divine man of Nazareth."

This reminds us of the caution given by our Savior, to be heeded just before his return: "If they shall say unto you, behold, he is in the . . . . secret chamber; believe it not." Why not? "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." He has not thus come yet, hence we shall utterly reject the assurance given by the editor of the rayless Sunbeam.

"Evil Spirits."

The following shows why the intoxicating drinks of the day are so ruinous to the systems of those who use them; and also shows the corruption in business operations:

"An expert chemist in New York, bought of an importer a bottle of what was called genuine champagne. Analyzation proved it to contain one quarter of an ounce of sugar of lead! The same gentleman analyzed sixteen samples of wine—Port, Sherry and Madeira—in which not one drop of the juice of the grape was found. The base of the Port wine was diluted sulphuric acid, colored with elderberry juice, with alum, sugar, and neutral spirits. The base of the Sherry was a pale malt, sulphuric acid from bitter almonds, with a percentage of alcoholic spirits from brandy. The Madeira wine was a decoction of hops, sulphuric acid, honey, Jamaica spirits, etc.

The N. Y. Express gives the analysis of two pipes of brandy, one pale and one dark, obtained in New York, with the foreign stamp "Seignette Brandy." First sample (dark) 55 per cent. alchoholic spirits by volume, and 41 per cent by weight; specific gravity 0,945. The tests indicate sulphuric acid, nitric acid (!) nitric ether, prussic acid (Guinea pepper, and an abundance of fusil oil (!) Base—common whisky—not one drop of wine.

The second sample (pale) exhibited precisely the same poisonous ingredients, but in greater abundance. Three, at least, of the above named ingredients, are deadly poisons!"

Political Spiritualism.

The Spiritualists are more and more outspoken on the subject of political action. We apprehend the worst features of this demoniacal system is yet to be developed. Their influence is continually spreading like an ocean tide. Their sentiments, in part, are already adopted by a large number of church members, saying nothing of the scores of clergymen, who, either secretly, or openly, advocate their principles, and deny the resurrection of the dead, thus overthrowing the very foundation stone of christianity; for, Paul says, "If the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised." What the Spiritualists now need, is political power, that they may, like the Catholics in their strength, establish their doctrines by law, and suppress all opposers. Says the editor of the Spiritual Age—now the Spiritual Eclectic—

"Agitation is our creed as fully as it is that of any one. The writer has done something in this line in the past, and hopes to do much more. The principles of Spiritual truth, when clearly set forth and applied to practical life, must produce agitation and fermentation in the political as well as the theological and social worlds. The writer, under the light of spiritual truth, has come to the conviction that the existing political fabric is so radically defective and thoroughly corrupt that it is not only past usefulness as an instrument of the needed reforms, but that action under it, in any such way as to recognize its validity and rightfulness, is positively wrong—is, in fact, treason to Humanity, to Truth and to God. . . . For ourselves, we accept this new revelation as one which is utterly to revolutionize and destroy existing institutions of all kinds—political, social and religious,—and that speedily; and we are utterly indifferent to the squabbles of this or that party or sect to obtain the mastery. They are all death-struck, and must soon give place to a divinely-constituted order of things.—A. E. N."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

——, N. Y., Apr. 20th, 1860.

DEAR BRO. H.:—Those books and tracts came to hand, and most of the tracts are out doing their work, with my prayer for their success. I am satisfied that a great work can be accomplished by scattering tracts. God bless the tract enterprize. . . . I feel more than ever like dedicating all my powers to the Lord, and sacrificing for the cause of God. I suppose some would think they were really needy if they were situated as I am, but God be praised, I feel like rejoicing in my riches,—leaky boots, patched pants, do. coat; but the full assurance of faith, and the smiles of a good Father who says I shall not want any good thing if I walk uprightly. . . . We live on bread, potatoes and water, and by faith on the Son of God. Sorrowful, yet always rejoicing, praise the Lord. His promises are yea and amen. Not one can fail.

A few weeks ago I wanted to go away. My wife wanted to write a letter and as I had only money enough to pay toll-gate fee, I told her she would have to wait as I had none for postage. That night some one came into our room when we were asleep and left twenty-five cents. Why should I distrust the Lord? I have no cause to do so. Bless God. L."

Well, brother, be of good cheer. Christ liveth, and he that watcheth and keepeth Israel never slumbers nor sleeps. God will care for you. Take care of your health. Patched clothes are just as warm and as good to preach in as any; I can testify to that, and if folks get too proud to like the looks, why all they have to do is to get you better ones.

Take as good care as possible of your wife's health. She at home may have more privations than you do when traveling about. My God shall supply all your need according to his glorious riches in Christ Jesus. I will try and send you a Greek grammar soon. Study it, and with your Testament and Englishman's Greek Concordance, you will learn a great deal more of New Testament teachings than you can from King James' version. I shall try and send you more tracts when I can get time.

Your brother. H. L. H.

SPIRITUALISM EXPOSED IN THE LIGHT OF DIVINE REVELATION; with an Examination of the position of A. J. DAVIS, and MR. DOD. By MARY D. WELLCOME.

The writer appeals "to the law and to the testimony" as proof that the practice of Spiritualists in seeking unto the dead for knowledge, is decidedly wrong, and condemned by God; and by placing in parallel columns the doctrines cherished by them as truth, and the testimony of the Bible on the same point, the reader is shown at a glance, the opposition of the one to the other.

The foundation upon which modern Spiritualism is established, is next examined, and demonstrated to be utterly unreliable. The three prominent positions taken in regard to the phenomena are examined:—

1st. They are produced by angelic beings, once tabernacling in the form. 2d. They are all explainable by natural laws. 3d. They are the work of demons, or evil spirits. These several positions are tested by facts and the Bible. Please read and decide who is right. Retail price of the pamphlet, 12 cts. 30 per ct. discount by the dozen. New Hampshire State Conference at Pittsfield.

It will be seen by the following resolution which was adopted at the last session, that the time for holding our State Conference is at hand:—

"Resolved, That this Conference shall hold its sessions annually, on the first Thursday in June, at such place, and to commence at such hour of the day as may be appointed from year to year; at which the ministers shall report themselves personally or by letter, and the churches by delegate or by letter."

It is hoped that brethren in the ministry, and also the churches will report themselves at the Conference, as set forth in the foregoing resolution. Conference to be holden at the Advent chapel in Pittsfield, to commence Thursday, June 7th, at 2 o'clock P. M., and continue over the Sabbath.

The Grant and Loveland Discussion.

This deeply interesting debate, of which I shall endeavor to give a synopsis, took place, according to advertisement in the Boston Melodeon (Little Temple), on the evenings of Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, May 1st, 2d, 3d and 4th, and was witnessed by a respectable and attentive audience. There is much in such a controversy, even when repeated verbatim, which the readers lose who were not present, to wit: the action, energy and emphasis of the speakers, which often sway the audience full as much as the matter. Mr. Loveland, a quondam Methodist minister, is one of the great guns of the spiritual fraternity, and to do him justice I must say that his manner of speaking is easy, with a certain dash of eloquence, attractive to those who are satisfied with a superficial gloss; and further, he showed a gentlemanly urbanity which is very rare among the debaters on his side. Of Eld. Grant's manner, as well as material, I need not speak more than that he wielded the christian's weapon like a well tried soldier of the cross, and in the end added another triumph to his Master's cause. Eld. J. V. Himes, who presided, read the questions for debate, which were as follows:

1st. "Is human immortality taught by the Bible, science and philosophy, or proved by Spiritualism?" J. S. Loveland on the affirmative.

2d. "Is immortality a gift of God dependent upon the character of the receiver?" Affirmative by Eld. Grant. The latter gentleman opened the meeting by prayer, after which Eld. Himes, introduced Mr. Loveland to the audience as the leader on the first question, who spake as follows:

MR. LOVELAND. Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen:—I deem myself happy in being privileged to stand up here as an advocate for human immortality. The subject of this discussion is no new one, although put in a new form; for it reaches as far back as the beginning of the christian era. Jesus Christ taught it in opposition to the doctrine of the Sadducees, and Paul in his first letter to the Corinthians says, "But the natural man discerneth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them because they are spiritually discerned. But he that is spiritual judgeth all things, yet he himself is judged of no man." Here is proof that the natural mind fails to grasp spiritual potencies, denying their existence because they cannot be weighed or measured. This I propose to grapple with, and in doing so, shall show the dual and triple nature of man. I shall not enter upon a detail of the different notions concerning the doctrine of man's immortality which is taught by intuition, but will say that it is the basis alike of Jew and Christian faith.

In the Mosaic account of man's creation we read that "God formed man out of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." "There is a spirit in man." Jesus Christ commands us, "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." It is said of a certain young lady that "her spirit came again into her and she revived." Paul prays, "I pray God your whole spirit, soul and body be preserved blameless." "For the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh." In fact, everything demonstrates this living and acting principle. Greek, Hindoo, Egyptian, Christian, Reason and Science bear testimony to the potency of mind or soul over matter; and the medical faculty is witness to the influence of the mind over malady. It is the basis of philosophy.

Second. Again, there is a universal cause and effect. Means and ends are everywhere revealed. Means indicate ends—cause, effects. Where there is no cause there is no effect. In the grand progression of cause and effect, we see mineral, vegetable, animal and man. Man is the culmination of this earth, the last blossom on the tree of creation. Nothing surpasses him; he is lord of all the rest.

Third. In the universe there is even and exact justice. This rule is applied to the whole creation. It is the iron chain which connects means to ends, where results are linked to causes, without which power nothing could exist. Some may dream of something to sever this union, but they will find their mistake when they discover there is no breaking it. From the lower strata progress advances through mineral, vegetable and animal, till it culminates in man, which perfection cannot be reached in a day.

Fourth. All revelation is direct or indirect. It is either immediate or coming through mediums. All are instrumental in its development. Before the existence will be spared in the wreck of nations. Her banners may be torn; but she will, we hope, survive, for she separated, at the great reformation, from the Ten Kingdoms of the Papacy that are now coming under the judgments of Heaven; and I believe, therefore,—and I am refreshed and delighted while I express the belief—that old England will have no western setting in the horizon, till its beams mingle with the beams of that Sun beneath whose wings is healing, and in whose presence there is light and liberty for the nations of the earth.

But what does all this teach us now? Suppose I had proved to you, to demonstration, that 1867 was to close this present era. Some will say, Oh! then we had better not insure our lives,—we had better not take leases,—we had better do nothing; but fling everything off, and let society go to ruin. I say no. What is the [illegible] command? "Occupy till I come." What is the condition of the people when he comes? "Two women shall be grinding in the mill; the one shall be taken," that is, one a christian, "and the other left." What does that teach us? That our duties are determined by God's plain precepts; they are not to be modified by any of his prophecies, however clear. The prophecy I read for comfort,—the precept I read for direction. And, therefore, when people say we act inconsistently,—as it was said not very long ago by caricaturists and others in the papers,—that, because I took the lease of a house, therefore I did not believe these conclusions, I answer that if I thought it would be for my interest or advantage, or the advantage of my family, I would take a house for a hundred years' lease to-morrow. I have nothing to do with prophecy in determining my duties,—they are to be determined by God's precepts, and by common sense; and if I believed that 1867 were to end the present economy of things, I should have my hand equally busy in my work. I would bid the soldier appear in the ranks, the merchant in his counting-house, the senator in the parliament,—every man at his post; for the post of duty is always the place of safety before God, and in the sight of all mankind. But whilst our hands should be at duty, our hearts should be more than ever in heaven. Some people say, Oh, how shocking, how terrible, that you may die to-morrow! I might say, how shocking, that the aged of sixty has only some fifteen years to live, on an average. Death to the individual, is just as solemn as the close of this economy to the whole world: but there is nothing shocking in it. Our Savior does not so construe it; for what does he say? When ye see these things begin to come to pass, what! be terrified,—be alarmed, resign your duties? No, no, no. The Bible is too rich in common sense: "Lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." And who can possibly regret the probable nearness of such a consummation? What will it be? The end of sin,—the emancipation of the oppressed,—the extinction of war,—the return of earth's ancient glory,—the restoration of all the blessedness we have lost,—a peace that passeth all understanding; no more quarrels, no more misapprehensions, no more sins, no more sorrows. Instead of dreading the advent of so glorious an epoch, with all our hearts we should pray, as from the heart I do, "Come, Lord Jesus; ea, come quickly."

"Reasons for my Hope."

The second edition of this work is now ready for delivery. Persons whose orders have been delayed can now be supplied. I hope to circulate at least TEN THOUSAND copies of this book. Who will help?—Price, BOUND in CLOTH, by mail, 50 cts.; price without postage, 40 cts.; three copies by express for $1.00; ten copies do. for $3.00; fifty copies do. for $13.00, one hundred copies do. for $25.00. Price in stiff next glazed paper covers, by mail single 30 cts.; price without postage, 25 cts.; four copies prepaid for $1.00; five copies without postage, for $1.00; fifty copies do. for $8.50; one hundred copies do. for $15.00.

These prices are low because I want the work scattered. Cash should always accompany the order. I have no time to keep accounts, and when the books are gone I want the pay to print more at once. I will give to the poor, but I hate to sell books and dun folks two or three years for the pay and then not get it. Who will take one hundred copies—sell what they can and give away the rest? Have not several brethren $15 to use in this way? Scatter "Reasons for my Hope," and I will have something else good for you soon. I have half a dozen books in my head that would have got out before this if brethren would only order the books and scatter them, instead of compelling me to peddle them round the country to get money to print more. Let us all be diligent—the Master cometh soon. Orders with the pay should be addressed H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I. For sale at this office.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MAY 16, 1860.

Relief for the Distressed; or, How we got out of "Doubting Castle."

No. 21.

In our last, we remarked, we have reason to suspect there has been foul play among the managers of "Doubting Castle." Some movements have looked very suspicious to us, as we have been passing through its various apartments; and a deep impression has been made upon our mind, that the worst features of the "Castle" were kept carefully concealed. And yet every thing looked so nice, and the learned D. D.'s were so polite to us, and apparently so glad to see us, we hardly dared to indulge the thought that they were not just what they appeared to be. We were invited into their magnificent chapel to attend religious exercises. Every thing was conducted with the most perfect decorum; the singing, from some distinguished operatic vocalists, was performed in a masterly manner, while the deep-toned organ stirred every nerve within us. Then followed "an eloquent prayer" from one of the distinguished D. D.'s, and then an elegantly written discourse on departed spirits, and the interest they take in our welfare. The exercises were closed with a beautiful piece of music from the opera, a little altered for Sabbath use. After the benediction, the fashionable elite, in silks, satins and diamonds, moved slowly and gracefully out, while the organist played a brilliant overture to a new ballet.

Notwithstanding nothing was said or done to awaken in us any religious emotions, or cause us to think of the meek and lowly Jesus, yet the exercises were so imposing, and sustained by so many of the first class of people, that we almost shrunk from the idea that it was not the true worship of God, and had we not promised a thorough examination of the premises, we think we should have turned from the unpleasant duty. Our heart almost fainted at the thought of confronting all the learned theologians in the "Castle," knowing the bitter invectives that would certainly be heaped upon us, and also the mortification we should feel if we found our strong suspicions were groundless. When in this dilemma, it occurred to us that when we left our dear Bro. B. last week, he was preparing to leave the "Castle," having found the key that would unlock all the doors and lead him again into the King's highway. But we had seen nothing of him during the week, consequently he must still be in the "Castle," although we did not see him at the chapel exercises. Perhaps he is sick. On inquiry, we were told very politely, and with an air of gravity, expressing apparent sadness at the thought that he had left the institution. But we were so well satisfied to the contrary, our suspicions of foul play were doubled at once, and we then resolved, in the strength of our great King, to know all about "Doubting Castle," and rescue our Bro. B. if possible.

In all our previous examinations, we had entered no rooms where we were not invited by the Faculty. But now we determined, in company with our associates, to examine every thing with as little ceremony as the French soldiers manifested at the Inquisition at Madrid. After visiting several rooms, and finding nothing to strengthen our suspicions, we almost began to wish we had not undertaken this second examination; thinking, perhaps, "Doubting Castle" theology is not so bad after all as we supposed; and that no very great evil had come from it, even though it be as false as we had claimed.

Just at this time we noticed another closet door in a room not before examined. We looked into the closet, saw nothing about it different from any other. Some old clothes and papers were lying on the bottom, as if carelessly thrown in to get them out of the way. As we turned to leave, we noticed an expression upon the countenances of the Faculty that indicated extreme anxiety mingled with fear. We at once turned back to the closet, removed the things upon the floor, and to our surprise, found a trap-door, which was immediately opened, when we discovered a stairway, leading to a deep and extensive subterranean hall, dimly lighted. As we descended the staircase, we could not help thinking of the fabled infernal regions of the ancient heathen.

We first entered a large hall hung with paintings illustrative of hero worship. In these we saw the first fruits of "Doubting Castle" theology. We learned that the ancient Egyptians were deluded into hero-worship by the artful devices of demons, who pretended to be the spirits of noted men. It was at once apparent, that had the Egyptians known and believed the Bible, which teaches that the dead have no knowledge, they would have rejected the lies of the demons, and been saved from such heathenish idolatry.

We entered another large and elegant apartment, where we found a great number engaged in praying to departed saints. We thought this looked very consistent, provided our friends do come back to this world after death; for when they lived here we often asked them to pray for us, why not when they return? We saw that the whole system of Papal worship was based on the doctrine that man has a conscious spirit that lives when he is dead; and that if this were given up, it would at once come to a perpetual end; and that no more money would be paid for praying souls out of purgatory.

After discovering that hero-worship, prayers to saints, purgatory, and indeed the whole system of Catholicism were all resting upon the same doctrines held by the "Doubting Castle" D. D's. our minds were prepared to find every system of theological error supported the same dogma. We began to see the magnitude of the lie of Satan when he said, "Ye shall not surely die."

In the next room we found a kind of an altar, whereon we learned that widows were burnt alive. When we ascertained the history of this barbarous practice, we learned it was for the purpose of having the widow's soul escape so as to go and be with her husband's soul in the "spirit-land." We now saw clearer than ever, that the whole system of Pagan worship was based on the same dogma as Catholicism, and that the latter was only a modification of the former.

In the next room we found some horrid looking pictures, illustrating some appalling scenes. A great crowd of men were represented; in their midst were some two or three hundred apparently prepared for execution. We judged this to be the case, as one of their number was about receiving the death-blow from the executioner. We inquired into the history of their crimes. Judge of our surprise, when we learned that they were faithful servants of one Mexican noble, lately deceased; and that these servants were being put to death so that their souls could go and wait upon his lordly soul in the "spirit land." By this time our eyes were fully opened to the real merits of "Doubting Castle" theology. We anxiously inquired what is coming next?

We advanced into a large hall, the very sight of which was appalling. In one part was a kind of throne for the Inquisitor-general, and surrounding seats for his associates. The room was ornamented with pictures illustrating the most horrid scenes of cruelty ever invented and executed by human beings. The implements of torture were still lying about; the very sight of which was enough to make the blood run chill in our veins. We inquired into the history of this infernal machinery, and the object of its use. We were told, this was the place where the Catholics tormented the body for the good of the soul; claiming, if they could make the soul yield by bodily torment, then it might be saved. Here we saw again the fruits of the theology of "Doubting Castle," and learned the history of the doctrine of endless suffering. In case the soul would not recant in consequence of the Papal tortures inflicted in this infernal dungeon, then it was condemned to eternal torment. Oh! how these enemies of the cross of Christ have perverted the blessed gospel of Jesus, turning thousands and millions into infidelity, and leading them in the way to eternal destruction.

At this time we began to wonder why PROTESTANTISM should sustain an institution resting upon such a foundation, with such iniquitous dens beneath. But on a moment's reflection, the reason was apparent. The foundation and cap-stone of "Doubting Castle" rest upon the doctrine that man has a spirit which is conscious when he is dead. On this doctrine was founded too hero-worship, prayers to saints, purgatory, burning of widows, slaughtering of servants, torments of the inquisition, and eternal misery, and as Protestantism has adopted this anti-scriptural dogma, and the doctrine of eternal misery, it was perfectly consistent that it should build "Doubting Castle" over the old cellar of the inquisition, and rest it upon the same corner-stone. We saw clearly the intimate relation between "the mother of harlots" and her daughters.

Having explored the basement of "Doubting Castle" to our satisfaction, we concluded to wind our way out. In our return, we passed through several new rooms, one of which was occupied by Swedenborgians, who were engaged in tracing imaginary "CORRESPONDENCES" between the natural and the spiritual world; receiving their instruction from demons who were talking through Emanuel Swedenborg, as their medium, in strains of sublime nonsense, that made the common people stand all aghast, who were mourning because they could not comprehend it. O how unlike the plain teachings of our dear Savior, when the common people heard him gladly.

In another room, we found a company of Shakers, who were receiving their instruction from a demon pretending to be the spirit of Ann Lee. They seemed to be in ecstasies, dancing for joy at the revelations from the supposed spirit of "Mother Ann."

In another room, we found a company around a table receiving communications from what claimed to be departed human spirits. Here were laymen, class-leaders, deacons, elders, and a host of clergymen from the different evangelical denominations, consulting the spirits after the manner of the old heathen oracles. We listened awhile to their instructions, and found they all denied the resurrection of the dead and the literal coming of Christ. They also denied that Jesus is our Savior and the Son of God, and declared that God is nothing more than a principle in all matter. They all taught "the soul is immortal," and upon this doctrine their whole system rested. When we heard them deny "Father and Son," we cried out, "this is the ANTI-CHRIST."

As we passed through this subterranean labyrinth, we came across the cells where the saints of God had been shut up to starve in chains. In the distance we heard a mournful sound. We listened, and discovered it was the voice of earnest prayer. We hastened to the spot, and here found our dear Bro. B. confined in one of the dark cells of the old "Castle," half starved, and suffering with pain brought on by the cold damps of his dreary dungeon. It was a joyful meeting; and we were not long in bringing him out of that dismal den of demons. Thank the Lord for his rescue; we are paid a thousand fold for all our labors.

While rejoicing over him, the thought occurred, there may be others immured in those dungeons. We went back in search for more, and succeeded in finding scores in the same sad condition, who were brought out with great rejoicings. It was almost equal to a resurrection from the dead.

After the rescue of these weary pilgrims from the old "Castle," we longed for the day to arrive when it would be burnt with an unquenchable fire. We rejoice to know the time is at hand.

Dear reader, when the day of its destruction comes, may we be found free from the theology of "Doubting Castle," ready to welcome the return of Jesus our Savior.

Discussion with Dr. Lyon.

Our discussion with Dr. Lyon at Bridgeport resulted in opening the eyes of some to the immoral and atheistical tendency of Spiritualism. He appeared to have no more respect for the Bible, than a "last year's almanac." He spoke like one who had outgrown the wisdom of the wise, inspired men, Christ and our heavenly Father. It was painful to hear his blasphemous talk. He appears to be a ripe Spiritualist. It is said he was once a very successful Baptist preacher. What a change! When Spiritualism is matured, it becomes licentious atheism.

He endeavored to prove the immortality of the soul from philosophy; but like all others who have made the attempt, he succeeded in making a total failure. He admitted, if he could not prove the immortality of the soul, he should be without foundation. He said if he went to the Bible to prove his position, he should get whipped, thus admitting that the doctrine is not taught in the Scriptures.

His arguments consisted mostly in assertions and propositions without proof, such as could not be logically sustained.

He obtained a reporter to write out his sayings in full, with only a few of our propositions, omitting our arguments and proof texts, and intends to publish this as a report of the discussion.

The following list of some of his sayings will give the reader a faint idea of his position. "The devil is one of the most amiable beings." "What sensible man would not admit that a dead man knows nothing." "Death is the antithesis of life." "There is no such thing as death." Man is a spark of Divinity." "The Bible is not in harmony with nature." "If I fail to prove the immortality of the soul, my position is not sustained." "If man has no immortality, God never made him." "All that God made is immortal." "I do not believe the dead know not any thing, because the Bible says so." "If I had no other arguments than what the Bible affords, I should agree with my opponent." "They are overthrown who endeavor to sustain the immortality of the soul from the Bible." "If I go to the Bible he will whip me." "I design to demonstrate the immortality of the soul from philosophy." "No passage in the Bible that teaches the resurrection of the body." "God is as much in the libertine as the most pious saint that ever lived." "Man grew up from the lower order of animals." "Jesus has come." "Jesus has never seen his body since his crucifixion." "No man can meet my arguments."

"The Battle Summer."

The approaching summer is denominated, prospectively, "the battle summer." Says the Banner of Light:

"The nation is to pass through a quadrennial fever of excitement, this summer, more intense, without doubt, if not more absolutely fierce in its characteristics than has fallen to its experience since the adoption of the Constitution. All men are looking forward to it intently, some rendered anxious on one account, and others for reasons in all respects different. It appears to be considered in advance, that business avocations are, to a very considerable extent, to be set aside on account of this approaching excitement, and both press and preachers have begun to utter their counsels and their warning relative to all who expect to participate in the coming melo-drama. . . . It has been somewhat widely discussed of late, we have good reason to know, if it is not best for all men in this country who believe in the renewing agency of spirit-communion, and whose inspirations may be found to be the purest and highest possible to the heart of man, to step forth at this time and organize themselves into a body for political purposes."

In a discourse at the Melodeon, Boston, April 15th, 1860, Mrs. A. M. Spence remarks:

"Spiritualism will be like the David, and slay the Goliah of wrong with the pebbles of truth, without shedding his blood. Her effect you will witness in the result of your next Presidential campaign. The Church and the State will be revolutionized by it, and then society, on which they are based, will feel its power and bend to it. If you, as Spiritualists, are luke-warm, you are like the foolish virgins who had not their lamps trimmed ready for the coming of the bridegroom. You need no excitation of your faculties to know your nation is in danger. Politics will rage heavier and more powerful at the next election than ever before, and now every day your meetings of New England "strikers" bespeak a loss of friendly, trade relations between north and south. The two sections of your common country are arrayed against each other like Cain and Abel, and one will surely destroy the other, unless a power interferes mighty to check, and strong to mend broken confidence, and a fractured brotherhood. The cause is real, and tangible, though its effect is as yet a shadow. Spiritualism is the only power which can prevent this disaster. Everything else is impotent and vain. . . . Spiritualism has not done its work yet—it has a greater one to do. It will soon have a controlling power over government. Your government will never be elevated till your religion is revolutionized."

Says the Charleston correspondent of the Boston Traveller:

"Everybody seems astonished at the results of the last hour. It is hard for men to believe that the great National Democratic party is scattered to fragments, and they know not what to say. Everybody is speculating in regard to the results which are to follow. But nobody seems to dream of reconciliation. Indeed, in the present temper of the delegates from the different sections of the country, nobody seems to desire it. The general truth is that the great Democracy is used up, and each party charges the other with being guilty of its blood."

"Jesus is Here Already."

The above heading may sound rather strange to the readers of the Crisis. It is a saying of Dr. Griswold, the editor of the Sunbeam, published at Batavia, N. Y. This Sunbeam has just ceased to shine, having set in obscure darkness, and there is but little probability that we shall receive any illuminations either from its past rays, or from its surviving editor. There was some prospect that we should meet in discussion; but, like the Sunbeam, it has disappeared. The editor says:—

"The World's Crisis thinks that Jesus Christ will come to the world within eight years. We presume that the World's Crisis expect to see him come out of the clouds in a physical body. . . . We can assure the World's Crisis, or any one else desiring to inquire into the facts that Jesus is here already. We have talked with the spirit of the divine man of Nazareth."

This reminds us of the caution given by our Savior, to be heeded just before his return: "If they shall say unto you, behold, he is in the secret chamber; believe it not." Why not? "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." He has not thus come yet, hence we shall utterly reject the assurance given by the editor of the rayless Sunbeam.

"Evil Spirits."

The following shows why the intoxicating drinks of the day are so ruinous to the systems of those who use them; and also shows the corruption in business operations.

"An expert chemist in New York, bought of an importer a bottle of what was called genuine champagne. Analyzation proved it to contain one quarter of an ounce of sugar of lead! The same gentleman analyzed sixteen samples of wine—Port, Sherry and Madeira—in which not one drop of the juice of the grape was found. The base of the Port wine was diluted sulphuric acid, colored with elderberry juice, with alum, sugar, and neutral spirits. The base of the Sherry was a pale malt, sulphuric acid from bitter almonds, with a percentage of alcoholic spirits from brandy. The Madeira wine was a decoction of hops, sulphuric acid, honey, Jamaica spirits, etc.

The N. Y. Express gives the analysis of two pipes of brandy, one pale and one dark, obtained in New York, with the foreign stamp "Seignette Brandy." First sample (dark) 55 per cent. alchoholic spirits by volume, and 41 per cent by weight; specific gravity 0,945. The tests indicate sulphuric acid, nitric acid (!) nitric ether, prussic acid (Guinea pepper, and an abundance of fusil oil (!) Base—common whisky—not one drop of wine.

The second sample (pale) exhibited precisely the same poisonous ingredients, but in greater abundance. Three, at least, of the above named ingredients, are deadly poisons!"

Political Spiritualism.

The Spiritualists are more and more outspoken on the subject of political action. We apprehend the worst features of this demoniacal system is yet to be developed. Their influence is continually spreading like an ocean tide. Their sentiments, in part, are already adopted by a large number of church members, saying nothing of the scores of clergymen, who, either secretly, or openly, advocate their principles, and deny the resurrection of the dead, thus overthrowing the very foundation stone of christianity; for Paul says, "If the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised."

What the Spiritualists now want, is political power, so that they may, like the Catholics in their strength, establish their doctrines by law, and suppress all opposers. Says the editor of the Spiritual Age—now the Spiritual Eclectic—

"Agitation is our creed as fully as it is that of any one. The writer has done something in this line in the past, and hopes to do much more. The principles of Spiritual truth, when clearly set forth and applied to practical life, must produce agitation and fermentation in the political as well as the theological and social worlds. The writer, under the light of spiritual truth, has come to the conviction that the existing political fabric is so radically defective and thoroughly corrupt that it is not only past usefulness as an instrument of the needed reforms, but that action under it, in any such way as to recognize its validity and rightfulness, is positively wrong—is, in fact, treason to Humanity, to Truth and to God. . . . For ourselves, we accept this new revelation as one which is utterly to revolutionize and destroy existing institutions of all kinds—political, social and religious—and that speedily; and we are utterly indifferent to the squabbles of this or that party or sect to obtain the mastery. They are all death-struck, and must soon give place to a divinely-constituted order of things.—A. E. N."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

"—— N. Y., Apr. 20th, 1860.

DEAR BRO. H.:—Those books and tracts came to hand, and most of the tracts are out doing their work, with my prayer for their success. I am satisfied that a great work can be accomplished by scattering tracts. God bless the tract enterprize. . . . I feel more than ever like dedicating all my powers to the Lord, and sacrificing for the cause of God. I suppose some would think they were really needy if they were situated as I am, but God be praised, I feel like rejoicing in my riches,—leaky boots, patched pants, do. coat; but the full assurance of faith, and the smiles of a good Father who says I shall not want any good thing if I walk uprightly. . . . . We live on bread, potatoes and water, and by faith on the Son of God. Sorrowful, yet always rejoicing, praise the Lord. His promises are yea and amen. Not one can fail.

A few weeks ago I wanted to go away. My wife wanted to write a letter and as I had only money enough to pay toll-gate fee, I told her she would have to wait as I had none for postage. That night some one came into our room when we were asleep and left twenty-five cents. Why should I distrust the Lord? I have no cause to do so. Bless God. L."

Well, brother, be of good cheer. Christ liveth, and he that watcheth and keepeth Israel never slumbers nor sleeps. God will care for you. Take care of your health. Patched clothes are just as warm and as good to preach in as any; I can testify to that, and if folks get too proud to like the looks, why all they have to do is to get you better ones.

Take as good care as possible of your wife's health. She at home may have more privations than you do when traveling about. My God shall supply all your need according to his glorious riches in Christ Jesus. I will try and send you a Greek grammar soon. Study it, and with your Testament and Englishman's Greek Concordance, you will learn a great deal more of New Testament teachings than you can from King James' version. I shall try and send you more tracts when I can get time.

Your brother. H. L. H.

SPIRITUALISM EXPOSED IN THE LIGHT OF DIVINE REVELATION; with an Examination of the position of A. J. DAVIS, and MR. DOD. By MARY D. WELLCOME.

The writer appeals "to the law and to the testimony" as proof that the practice of Spiritualists in seeking unto the dead for knowledge, is decidedly wrong, and condemned by God; and by placing in parallel columns the doctrines cherished by them as truth, and the testimony of the Bible on the same point, the reader is shown at a glance, the opposition of the one to the other.

The foundation upon which modern Spiritualism is established, is next examined, and demonstrated to be utterly unreliable. The three prominent positions taken in regard to the phenomena are examined:—

1st. They are produced by angelic beings, once tabernacling in the form. 2d. They are all explainable by natural laws. 3d. They are the work of demons, or evil spirits. These several positions are tested by facts and the Bible. Please read and decide who is right. Retail price of the pamphlet, 12 cts. 30 per ct. discount by the dozen. New Hampshire State Conference at Pittsfield.

It will be seen by the following resolution which was adopted at the last session, that the time for holding our State Conference is at hand:—

"Resolved, That this Conference shall hold its sessions annually, on the first Thursday in June, at such place, and to commence at such hour of the day as may be appointed from year to year; at which the ministers shall report themselves personally or by letter, and the churches by delegate or by letter."

It is hoped that brethren in the ministry, and also the churches will report themselves at the Conference, as set forth in the foregoing resolution. Conference to be holden at the Advent chapel in Pittsfield, to commence Thursday, June 7th at 2 o'clock P. M., and continue over the Sabbath.

The Grant and Loveland Discussion.

This deeply interesting debate, of which I shall endeavor to give a synopsis, took place according to advertisement in the Boston Melodeon (Little Temple), on the evenings of Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, May 1st, 2d, 3d and 4th, and was witnessed by a respectable and attentive audience. There is much in such a controversy, even when repeated verbatim, which the readers lose who were not present, to wit: the action, energy and emphasis of the speakers, which often sway the audience full as much as the matter. Mr. Loveland, a quondam Methodist minister, is one of the great guns of the spiritual fraternity, and to do him justice I must say that his manner of speaking is easy, with a certain dash of eloquence, attractive to those who are satisfied with a superficial gloss; and further, he showed a gentlemanly urbanity which is very rare among the debaters on his side. Of Eld. Grant's manner, as well as material, I need not speak more than that he wielded the christian's weapon like a well tried soldier of the cross, and in the end added another triumph to his Master's cause. Eld. J. V. Himes, who presided, read the questions for debate, which were as follows:

1st. "Is human immortality taught by the Bible, science and philosophy, or proved by Spiritualism?" J. S. Loveland on the affirmative.

2d. "Is immortality a gift of God dependent upon the character of the receiver?" Affirmative by Eld. Grant. The latter gentleman opened the meeting by prayer, after which Eld. Himes introduced Mr. Loveland to the audience as the leader on the first question, who spake as follows:

MR. LOVELAND. Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen:—I deem myself happy in being privileged to stand up here as an advocate for human immortality. The subject of this discussion is no new one, although put in a new form; for it reaches as far back as the beginning of the christian era. Jesus Christ taught it in opposition to the doctrine of the Sadducees, and Paul in his first letter to the Corinthians says, "But the natural man discerneth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them because they are spiritually discerned. But he that is spiritual judgeth all things, yet he himself is judged of no man." Here is proof that the natural mind fails to grasp spiritual potencies, denying their existence because they cannot be weighed or measured. This I propose to grapple with, and in doing so, shall show the dual and triple nature of man. I shall not enter upon a detail of the different notions concerning the doctrine of man's immortality which is taught by intuition, but will say that it is the basis alike of Jew and Christian faith.

In the Mosaic account of man's creation we read that "God formed man out of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." "There is a spirit in man." Jesus Christ commands us, "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." It is said of a certain young lady that "her spirit came again into her and she revived." Paul prays, "I pray God your whole spirit, soul and body be preserved blameless." "For the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh." In fact, everything demonstrates this living and acting principle. Greek, Hindoo, Egyptian, Christian, Reason and Science bear testimony to the potency of mind or soul over matter; and the medical faculty is witness to the influence of the mind over malady. It is the basis of philosophy.

Second. Again, there is a universal cause and effect. Means and ends are everywhere revealed. Means indicate ends—cause, effects. Where there is no cause there is no effect. In the grand progression of cause and effect, we see mineral, vegetable, animal and man. Man is the culmination of this earth, the last blossom on the tree of creation. Nothing surpasses him; he is lord of all the rest.

Third. In the universe, there is even and exact justice. This rule is applied to the whole creation. It is the iron chain which connects means to ends, where results are linked to causes, without which power nothing could exist. Some may dream of something to sever this union, but they will find their mistake when they discover there is no breaking it. From the lower strata progress advances through mineral, vegetable and animal, till it culminates in man, which perfection cannot be reached in a day.

Fourth. All revelation is direct or indirect. It is either immediate or coming through mediums. All is [illegible] in its development. Before the existence will be spared in the wreck of nations. Her banners may be torn; but she, we hope, survive, for she separated, at the great reformation, from the Ten Kingdoms of the Papacy that are now coming under the judgments of Heaven; and I believe, therefore,—and I am refreshed and delighted while I express the belief—that old England's sun will have no western setting in the horizon, till its beams mingle with the beams of that Sun beneath whose wings is healing, and in whose presence there is light and liberty for the nations of the earth.

But what does all this teach us now? Suppose I had proved to you, to demonstration, that 1867 was to close this present era. Some will say, Oh! then we had better not insure our lives,—we had better not take leases,—we had better do nothing; but fling everything off, and let society go to ruin. I say no. What is the Lord's command? "Occupy till I come." What is the condition of the people when he comes? "Two women shall be grinding in the mill; the one shall be taken," that is, one a christian, "and the other left." What does that teach us? That our duties are determined by God's plain precepts; they are not to be modified by any of his prophecies, however clear. The prophecy I read for comfort,—the precept I read for direction. And, therefore, when people say we act inconsistently,—as it was said not very long ago by caricaturists and others in the papers,—that, because I took the lease of a house, therefore I did not believe these conclusions, I answer that if I thought it would be for my interest or advantage, or the advantage of my family, I would take a house for a hundred years' lease to-morrow. I have nothing to do with prophecy in determining my duties,—they are to be determined by God's precepts, and by common sense; and if I believed that 1867 were to end the present economy of things, I should have my hand equally busy in my work. I would bid the soldier appear in the ranks, the merchant in his counting-house, the senator in the parliament,—every man at his post; for the post of duty is always the place of safety before God, and in the sight of all mankind. But whilst our hands should be at duty, our hearts should be more than ever in heaven. Some people say, Oh, how shocking, how terrible, that you may die to-morrow! I might say, how shocking, that the aged of sixty has only some fifteen years to live, on an average. Death to the individual, is just as solemn as the close of this economy to the whole world: but there is nothing shocking in it. Our Savior does not so construe it; for what does he say? When ye see these things begin to come to pass, what! be terrified,—be alarmed, resign your duties? No, no, no. The Bible is too rich in common sense: "Lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." And who can possibly regret the probable nearness of such a consummation? What will it be? The end of sin, —the emancipation of the oppressed,—the extinction of war,—the return of earth's ancient glory,—the restoration of all the blessedness we have lost,—a peace that passeth all understanding; no more quarrels, no more misapprehensions, no more ills, no more sorrows. Instead of dreading the advent of so glorious an epoch, with all our hearts we should pray, as from the heart, I do, "Come, Lord Jesus; yea, come quickly."

"Reasons for my Hope."

The second edition of this work is now ready for delivery. Persons whose orders have been delayed can now be supplied. I hope to circulate at least TEN THOUSAND copies of this book. Who will help?—Price, BOUND in CLOTH, by mail, 50 cts.; copies without postage, 40 cts.; three copies by express for $1.00; ten copies do. for $3.00; fifty copies do. for $13.00, one hundred copies do. for $25.00. Price in stiff neat glazed paper covers, by mail single 30 cts.; price without postage, 25 cts.; five copies prepaid for $1.00; five copies without postage, for $1.00; fifty copies do. for $8.50; one hundred copies do. for $15.00.

These prices are low because I want the work scattered. Cash should always accompany the order. I have no time to keep accounts, and when the books are gone I want the pay to print more at once. I will give to the poor, but I hate to sell books and dun folks two or three years for the pay and then not get it. Who will take one hundred copies—sell what they can and give away the rest? Have not several brethren $15 to use in this way? Scatter "Reasons for my Hope" and I will have something else good for you soon. I have half a dozen books in my head that would have got out before this if brethren would only order the books and scatter them, instead of compelling me to peddle them round the country to get money to print more. Let us all be diligent, the Master cometh soon. Orders with the pay should be addressed H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I. For sale at this office.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MAY 16, 1860.

Relief for the Distressed; or, How we got out of "Doubting Castle."

No. 21.

In our last, we remarked, we have reason to suspect there has been foul play among the managers of "Doubting Castle." Some movements have looked very suspicious to us, as we have been passing through its various apartments; and a deep impression has been made upon our mind, that the worst features of the "Castle" were kept carefully concealed. And yet every thing looked so nice, and the learned D. D.'s were so polite to us, and apparently so glad to see us, we hardly dared to indulge the thought that they were not just what they appeared to be. We were invited into their magnificent chapel to attend religious exercises. Every thing was conducted with the most perfect decorum; the singing, from some distinguished operatic vocalists, was performed in a masterly manner, while the deep-toned organ stirred every nerve within us. Then followed "an eloquent prayer" from one of the distinguished D. D.'s, and then an elegantly written discourse on departed spirits, and the interest they take in our welfare. The exercises were closed with a beautiful piece of music from the opera, a little altered for Sabbath use. After the benediction, the fashionable elite, in silks, satins and diamonds, moved slowly and gracefully out, while the organist played a brilliant overture to a new ballet.

Notwithstanding nothing was said or done to awaken in us any religious emotions, or cause us to think of the meek and lowly Jesus, yet the exercises were so imposing, and sustained by so many of the first class of people, that we almost shrunk from the idea that it was not the true worship of God; and had we not promised a thorough examination of the premises, we think we should have turned from the unpleasant duty. Our heart almost fainted at the thought of confronting all the learned theologians in the "Castle," knowing the bitter invectives that would certainly be heaped upon us; and also the mortification we should feel if we found our strong suspicions were groundless. When in this dilemma, it occurred to us that when we left our dear Bro. B. last week, he was preparing to leave the "Castle," having found the key that would unlock all the doors and lead him again into the King's highway. But we had seen nothing of him during the week, consequently he must still be in the "Castle," altough we did not see him at the chapel exercises. Perhaps he is sick On inquiry, we were told very politely, and with an air of gravity, expressing apparent sadness at the thought that he had left the institution. But we were so well satisfied to the contrary, our suspicions of foul play were doubled at once, and we then resolved, in the strength of our great King, to know all about "Doubting Castle," and rescue our Bro. B. if possible.

In all our previous examinations, we had entered no rooms where we were not invited by the Faculty. But now we determined, in company with our associates, to examine every thing with as little ceremony as the French soldiers manifested at the Inquisition at Madrid. After visiting several rooms, and finding nothing to strengthen our suspicions, we almost began to wish we had not undertaken this second examination; thinking, perhaps, "Doubting Castle" theology is not so bad after all as we supposed; and that no very great evil had come from it, even though it be as false as we had claimed.

Just at this time we noticed another closet door in a room not before examined. We looked into the closet, saw nothing about it different from any other. Some old clothes and papers were lying on the bottom, as if carelessly thrown in to get them out of the way. As we turned to leave, we noticed an expression upon the countenances of the Faculty that indicated extreme anxiety mingled with fear. We at once turned back to the closet, removed the things upon the floor, and to our surprise, found a trap-door, which was immediately opened, when we discovered a stairway, leading to a deep and extensive subterranean hall, dimly lighted. As we descended the staircase, we could not help thinking of the fabled infernal regions of the ancient heathen.

We first entered a large hall hung with paintings illustrative of hero worship. In these we saw the first fruits of "Doubting Castle" theology. We learned that the ancient Egyptians were deluded into hero-worship by the artful devices of demons, who pretended to be the spirits of noted men. It was at once apparent, that had the Egyptians known and believed the Bible, which teaches that the dead have no knowledge, they would have rejected the lies of the demons, and been saved from such heathenish idolatry.

We entered another large and elegant apartment, where we found a great number engaged in praying to departed saints. We thought this looked very consistent, provided our friends do come back to this world after death; for when they lived here, we often asked them to pray for us, why not when they return? We saw that the whole system of Papal worship was based on the doctrine that man has a conscious spirit that lives when he is dead; and that if this were given up, it would at once come to a perpetual end; and that no more money would be paid for praying souls out of purgatory.

After discovering that hero-worship, prayers to saints, purgatory, and indeed the whole system of Catholicism were all resting upon the same doctrines held by the "Doubting Castle" D. D's. our minds were prepared to find every system of theological error supported the same dogma. We began to see the magnitude of the lie of Satan when he said, "Ye shall not surely die."

In the next room we found a kind of an altar, whereon we learned that widows were burnt alive. When we ascertained the history of this barbarous practice, we learned it was for the purpose of having the widow's soul escape so as to go and be with her husband's soul in the "spirit-land." We now saw clearer than ever, that the whole system of Pagan worship was based on the same dogma as Catholicism, and that the latter was only a modification of the former.

In the next room we found some horrid looking pictures, illustrating some appalling scenes. A great crowd of men were represented; in their midst were some two or three hundred apparently prepared for execution. We judged this to be the case, as one of their number was about receiving the death-blow from the executioner. We inquired into the history of their crimes. Judge of our surprise, when we learned that they were faithful servants of one Mexican noble, lately deceased; and that these servants were being put to death so that their souls could go and wait upon his lordly soul in the "spirit land." By this time our eyes were fully opened to the real merits of "Doubting Castle" theology. We anxiously inquired what is coming next?

We advanced into a large hall, the very sight of which was appalling. In one part was a kind of throne for the Inquisitor-general, and surrounding seats for his associates. The room was ornamented with pictures illustrating the most horrid scenes of cruelty ever invented and executed by human beings. The implements of torture were still lying about; the very sight of which was enough to make the blood run chill in our veins. We inquired into the history of this infernal machinery, and the object of its use. We were told, this was the place where the Catholics tormented the body for the good of the soul; claiming, if they could make the soul yield by bodily torment, then it might be saved. Here we saw again the fruits of the theology of "Doubting Castle," and learned the history of the doctrine of endless suffering. In case the soul would not recant in consequence of the Papal tortures inflicted in this infernal dungeon, then it was condemned to eternal torment. Oh! how these enemies of the cross of Christ have perverted the blessed gospel of Jesus, turning thousands and millions into infidelity, and leading them in the way to eternal destruction.

At this time we began to wonder why PROTESTANTISM should sustain an institution resting upon such a foundation, with such iniquitous dens beneath. But on a moment's reflection, the reason was apparent. The foundation and cap-stone of "Doubting Castle" rest upon the doctrine that man has a spirit which is conscious when he is dead. On this doctrine was founded too hero-worship, prayers to saints, purgatory, burning of widows, slaughtering of servants, torments of the inquisition, and eternal misery; and as Protestantism has adopted this anti-scriptural dogma, and the doctrine of eternal misery, it was perfectly consistent that it should build "Doubting Castle" over the old cellar of the inquisition, and rest it upon the same corner-stone. We saw clearly the intimate relation between "the mother of harlots" and her daughters.

Having explored the basement of "Doubting Castle" to our satisfaction, we concluded to wind our way out. In our return, we passed through several new rooms, one of which was occupied by Swedenborgians, who were engaged in tracing imaginary "CORRESPONDENCES" between the natural and the spiritual world; receiving their instruction from demons who were talking through Emanuel Swedenborg, as their medium, in strains of sublime nonsense, that made the common people stand all aghast, who were mourning because they could not comprehend it. O how unlike the plain teachings of our dear Savior, when the common people heard him gladly.

In another room, we found a company of Shakers, who were receiving their instruction from a demon pretending to be the spirit of Ann Lee. They seemed to be in ecstasies, dancing for joy at the revelations from the supposed spirit of "Mother Ann."

In another room, we found a company around a table receiving communications from what claimed to be departed human spirits. Here were laymen, class-leaders, deacons, elders, and a host of clergymen from the different evangelical denominations, consulting the spirits after the manner of the old heathen oracles. We listened awhile to their instructions, and found they all denied the resurrection of the dead and the literal coming of Christ. They also denied that Jesus is our Savior and the Son of God, and declared that God is nothing more than a principle in all matter. They all taught "the soul is immortal," and upon this doctrine their whole system rested. When we heard them deny "Father and Son," we cried out, "this is the ANTI-CHRIST."

As we passed through this subterranean labyrinth, we came across the cells where the saints of God had been shut up to starve in chains. In the distance we heard a mournful sound. We listened, and discovered it was the voice of earnest prayer. We hastened to the spot, and here found our dear Bro. B. confined in one of the dark cells of the old "Castle," half starved, and suffering with pain brought on by the cold damps of his dreary dungeon. It was a joyful meeting; and we were not long in bringing him out of that dismal den of demons. Thank the Lord for his rescue; we are paid a thousand fold for all our labors.

While rejoicing over him, the thought occurred, there may be others immured in those dungeons. We went back in search for more, and succeeded in finding scores in the same sad condition, who were brought out with great rejoicings. It was almost equal to a resurrection from the dead.

After the rescue of these weary pilgrims from the old "Castle," we longed for the day to arrive when it would be burnt with an unquenchable fire. We rejoice to know the time is at hand.

Dear reader, when the day of its destruction comes, may we be found free from the theology of "Doubting Castle," ready to welcome the return of Jesus our Savior.

Discussion with Dr. Lyon.

Our discussion with Dr. Lyon at Bridgeport resulted in opening the eyes of some to the immoral and atheistical tendency of Spiritualism. He appeared to have no more respect for the Bible, than a "last year's almanac." He spoke like one who had outgrown the wisdom of the wise, inspired men, Christ and our heavenly Father. It was painful to hear his blasphemous talk. He appears to be a ripe Spiritualist. It is said he was once a very successful Baptist preacher. What a change! When Spiritualism is matured, it becomes licentious atheism.

He endeavored to prove the immortality of the soul from philosophy; but like all others who have made the attempt, he succeeded in making a total failure. He admitted, if he could not prove the immortality of the soul, he should be without foundation. He said if he went to the Bible to prove his position, he should get whipped; thus admitting that the doctrine is not taught in the Scriptures.

His arguments consisted mostly in assertions and propositions without proof, such as could not be logically sustained.

He obtained a reporter to write out his sayings in full, with only a few of our propositions, omitting our arguments and proof texts, and intends to publish this as a report of the discussion.

The following list of some of his sayings will give the reader a faint idea of his position. "The devil is one of the most amiable beings." "What sensible man would not admit that a dead man knows nothing." "Death is the antithesis of life." "There is no such thing as death." Man is a spark of Divinity." "The Bible is not in harmony with nature." "If I fail to prove the immortality of the soul, my position is not sustained." "If man has no immortality, God never made him." "All that God made is immortal." "I do not believe the dead know not any thing, because the Bible says so." "If I had no other arguments than what the Bible affords, I should agree with my opponent." "They are overthrown who endeavor to sustain the immortality of the soul from the Bible." "If I go to the Bible he will whip me." "I design to demonstrate the immortality of the soul from philosophy." "No passage in the Bible that teaches the resurrection of the body." "God is as much in the libertine as the most pious saint that ever lived." "Man grew up from the lower order of animals." "Jesus has come." "Jesus has never seen his body since his crucifixion." "No man can meet my arguments."

"The Battle Summer."

The approaching summer is denominated, prospectively, "the battle summer." Says the Banner of Light:

"The nation is to pass through a quadrennial fever of excitement, this summer, more intense, without doubt, if not more absolutely fierce in its characteristics than has fallen to its experience since the adoption of the Constitution. All men are looking forward to it, intently, some rendered anxious on one account, and others for reasons in all respects different. It appears to be considered in advance, that business avocations are, to a very considerable extent, to be set aside on account of this approaching excitement, and both press and preachers have begun to utter their counsels and their warning relative to all who expect to participate in the coming melo-drama. . . . It has been somewhat widely discussed of late, we have good reason to know, if it is not best for all men in this country who believe in the renewing agency of spirit-communion, and whose inspirations may be claimed to be the purest and highest possible to the heart of man, to step forth at this time and organize themselves into a body for political purposes."

In a discourse at the Melodeon, Boston, April 15th, 1860, Mrs. A. M. Spence remarks:

"Spiritualism will be like the David, and slay the Goliah of wrong with the pebbles of truth, without shedding his blood. Her effect you will witness in the result of your next Presidential campaign. The Church and the State will be revolutionized by it, and then society, on which they are based, will feel its power and bend to it. If you, as Spiritualists, are luke-warm, you are like the foolish virgins who had not their lamps trimmed ready for the coming of the bridegroom. You need no excitation of your faculties to know your nation is in danger. Politics will rage heavier and more powerful at the next election than ever before, and now every day your meetings of New England "strikers" bespeak a loss of friendly, trade relations between north and south. The two sections of your common country are arrayed against each other like Cain and Abel, and one will surely destroy the other, unless a power interferes mighty to check, and strong to mend broken confidence, and a fractured brotherhood. The cause is real, and tangible, though its effect is as yet a shadow. Spiritualism is the only power which can prevent this disaster. Every-thing else is impotent and vain. . . . Spiritualism has not done its work yet—it has a greater one to do. It will soon have a controlling power over government. Your government will never be elevated till your religion is revolutionized."

Says the Charleston correspondent of the Boston Traveller:

"Everybody seems astonished at the results of the last hour. It is hard for men to believe that the great National Democratic party is scattered to fragments, and they know not what to say. Everybody is speculating in regard to the results which are to follow. But nobody seems to dream of reconciliation. Indeed, in the present temper of the delegates from the different sections of the country, nobody seems to desire it. The general truth is that the great Democracy is used up, and each party charges the other with being guilty of its blood."

"Jesus is Here Already."

The above heading may sound rather strange to the readers of the Crisis. It is a saying of Dr. Griswold, the editor of the Sunbeam, published at Batavia, N. Y. This Sunbeam has just ceased to shine, having set in obscure darkness, and there is but little probability that we shall receive any illuminations either from its past rays, or from its surviving editor. There was some prospect that we should meet in discussion; but, like the Sunbeam, it has disappeared. The editor says:—

"The World's Crisis thinks that Jesus Christ will come to the world within eight years. We presume that the World's Crisis expect to see him come out of the clouds in a physical body. . . . We can assure the World's Crisis, or any one else desiring to inquire into the facts that Jesus is here already. We have talked with the spirit of the divine man of Nazareth."

This reminds us of the caution given by our Savior, to be heeded just before his return: "If they shall say unto you, behold, he is in the secret chamber; believe it not." Why not? "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." He has not thus come yet, hence we shall utterly reject the assurance given by the editor of the rayless Sunbeam.

"Evil Spirits."

The following shows why the intoxicating drinks of the day are so ruinous to the systems of those who use them, and also shows the corruption in business operations:

"An expert chemist in New York, bought of an importer a bottle of what was called genuine champagne. Analyzation proved it to contain one quarter of an ounce of sugar of lead! The same gentleman analyzed sixteen samples of wine—Port, Sherry and Madeira—in which not one drop of the juice of the grape was found. The base of the Port wine was diluted sulphuric acid, colored with elderberry juice, with alum, sugar, and neutral spirits. The base of the Sherry was a pale malt, sulphuric acid from bitter almonds, with a percentage of alcoholic spirits from brandy. The Madeira wine was a decoction of hops, sulphuric acid, honey, Jamaica spirits, etc.

The N. Y. Express gives the analysis of two pipes of brandy, one pale and one dark, obtained in New York, with the foreign stamp "Seignette Brandy." First sample (dark) 55 per cent. alchoholic spirits by volume, and 41 per cent by weight; specific gravity 0,945. The tests indicate sulphuric acid, nitric acid (!) nitric ether, prussic acid (Guinea pepper, and an abundance of fusil oil (!) Base—common whisky—not one drop of wine.

The second sample (pale) exhibited precisely the same poisonous ingredients, but in greater abundance. Three, at least, of the above named ingredients, are deadly poisons!"

Political Spiritualism.

The Spiritualists are more and more outspoken on the subject of political action. We apprehend the worst features of this demoniacal system is yet to be developed. Their influence is continually spreading like an ocean tide. Their sentiments, in part, are already adopted by a large number of church members, saying nothing of the scores of clergymen, who, either secretly, or openly, advocate their principles, and deny the resurrection of the dead, thus overthrowing the very foundation stone of christianity; for Paul says, "If the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised." What the Spiritualists [illegible] political [illegible] they [illegible] Catholics, in their strength, establish their doctrines by law, and suppress all opposers. Says the editor of the Spiritual Age—now the Spiritual Eclectic—

"Agitation is our creed as fully as it is that of any one. The writer has done something in this line in the past, and hopes to do much more. The principles of Spiritual truth, when clearly set forth and applied to practical life, must produce agitation and fermentation in the political as well as the theological and social worlds. The writer, under the light of spiritual truth, has come to the conviction that the existing political fabric is so radically defective and thoroughly corrupt that it is not only past usefulness as an instrument of the needed reforms, but that action under it, in any such way as to recognize its validity and rightfulness, is positively wrong—is, in fact, treason to Humanity, to Truth and to God. . . . For ourselves, we accept this new revelation as one which is utterly to revolutionize and destroy existing institutions of all kinds—political, social and religious—and that speedily; and we are utterly indifferent to the squabbles of this or that party or sect to obtain the mastery. They are all death-struck, and must soon give place to a divinely-constituted order of things.—A. E. N."

EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS.

"—— N. Y., Apr. 20th, 1860.

DEAR BRO. H.:—Those books and tracts came to hand, and most of the tracts are out doing their work, with my prayer for their success. I am satisfied that a great work can be accomplished by scattering tracts. God bless the tract enterprize. . . . I feel more than ever like dedicating all my powers to the Lord, and sacrificing for the cause of God. I suppose some would think they were really needy if they were situated as I am, but God be praised, I feel like rejoicing in my riches,—leaky boots, patched pants, do. coat; but the full assurance of faith, and the smiles of a good Father who says I shall not want any good thing if I walk uprightly. . . . . We live on bread, potatoes and water, and by faith on the Son of God. Sorrowful, yet always rejoicing, praise the Lord. His promises are yea and amen. Not one can fail.

A few weeks ago I wanted to go away. My wife wanted to write a letter and as I had only money enough to pay toll-gate fee, I told her she would have to wait as I had none for postage. That night some one came into our room when we were asleep and left twenty-five cents. Why should I distrust the Lord? I have no cause to do so. Bless God. L."

Well, brother, be of good cheer. Christ liveth, and he that watcheth and keepeth Israel never slumbers nor sleeps. God will care for you. Take care of your health. Patched clothes are just as warm and as good to preach in as any; I can testify to that, and if folks get too proud to like the looks, why all they have to do is to get you better ones.

Take as good care as possible of your wife's health. She at home may have more privations than you do when traveling about. My God shall supply all your need according to his glorious riches in Christ Jesus. I will try and send you a Greek grammar soon. Study it, and with your Testament and Englishman's Greek Concordance, you will learn a great deal more of New Testament teachings than you can from King James' version. I shall try and send you more tracts when I can get time.

Your brother. H. L. H.

SPIRITUALISM EXPOSED IN THE LIGHT OF DIVINE REVELATION; with an Examination of the position of A. J. DAVIS, and MR. DOD. By MARY D. WELLCOME.

The writer appeals "to the law and to the testimony" as proof that the practice of Spiritualists in seeking unto the dead for knowledge, is decidedly wrong, and condemned by God; and by placing in parallel columns the doctrines cherished by them as truth, and the testimony of the Bible on the same point, the reader is shown at a glance, the opposition of the one to the other.

The foundation upon which modern Spiritualism is established, is next examined, and demonstrated to be utterly unreliable. The three prominent positions taken in regard to the phenomena are examined:—

1st. They are produced by angelic beings, once tabernacling in the form. 2d. They are all explainable by natural laws. 3d. They are the work of demons, or evil spirits. These several positions are tested by facts and the Bible. Please read and decide who is right. Retail price of the pamphlet, 12 cts. 30 per ct. discount by the dozen. New Hampshire State Conference at Pittsfield.

It will be seen by the following resolution which was adopted at the last session, that the time for holding our State Conference is at hand:—

"Resolved, That this Conference shall hold its sessions annually, on the first Thursday in June, at such place, and to commence at such hour of the day as may be appointed from year to year; at which the ministers shall report themselves personally or by letter, and the churches by delegates or by letter."

It is hoped that brethren in the ministry, and also the churches will report themselves at the Conference, as set forth in the foregoing resolution. Conference to be holden at the Advent chapel in Pittsfield, to commence Thursday, June 7th, at 2 o'clock P. M., and continue over the Sabbath.

The Grant and Loveland Discussion.

This deeply interesting debate, of which I shall endeavor to give a synopsis, took place, according to advertisement in the Boston Melodeon (Little Temple), on the evenings of Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, May 1st, 2d, 3d and 4th, and was witnessed by a respectable and attentive audience. There is much in such a controversy, even when repeated verbatim, which the readers lose who were not present, to wit: the action, energy and emphasis of the speakers, which often sway the audience full as much as the matter. Mr. Loveland, a quondam Methodist minister, is one of the great guns of the spiritual fraternity, and to do him justice I must say that his manner of speaking is easy, with a certain dash of eloquence, attractive to those who are satisfied with a superficial gloss; and further, he showed a gentlemanly urbanity which is very rare among the debaters on his side. Of Eld. Grant's manner, as well as material, I need not speak more than that he wielded the christian's weapon like a well tried soldier of the cross, and in the end added another triumph to his Master's cause. Eld. J. V. Himes, who presided, read the questions for debate, which were as follows:

1st. "Is human immortality taught by the Bible, science and philosophy, or proved by Spiritualism?" J. S. Loveland on the affirmative.

2d. "Is immortality a gift of God dependent upon the character of the receiver?" Affirmative by Eld. Grant. The latter gentleman opened the meeting by prayer, after which Eld. Himes, introduced Mr. Loveland to the audience as the leader on the first question, who spake as follows:

MR. LOVELAND. Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen:—I deem myself happy in being privileged to stand up here as an advocate for human immortality. The subject of this discussion is no new one, although put in a new form; for it reaches as far back as the beginning of the christian era. Jesus Christ taught it in opposition to the doctrine of the Sadducees, and Paul in his first letter to the Corinthians says, "But the natural man discerneth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them because they are spiritually discerned. But he that is spiritual judgeth all things, yet he himself is judged of no man." Here is proof that the natural mind fails to grasp spiritual potencies, denying their existence because they cannot be weighed or measured. This I propose to grapple with, and in doing so, shall show the dual and triple nature of man. I shall not enter upon a detail of the different notions concerning the doctrine of man's immortality which is taught by intuition, but will say that it is the basis alike of Jew and Christian faith.

In the Mosaic account of man's creation we read that "God formed man out of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." "There is a spirit in man." Jesus Christ commands us, "And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." It is said of a certain young lady that "her spirit came again into her and she revived." Paul prays, "I pray God your whole spirit, soul and body be preserved blameless." "For the flesh lusteth against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh." In fact, everything demonstrates this living and acting principle. Greek, Hindoo, Egyptian, Christian, Reason and Science bear testimony to the potency of mind or soul over matter; and the medical faculty is witness to the influence of the mind over malady. It is the basis of philosophy.

Second. Again, there is a universal cause and effect. Means and ends are everywhere revealed. Means indicate ends—cause, effects. Where there is no cause there is no effect. In the grand progression of cause and effect, we see mineral, vegetable, animal and man. Man is the culmination of this earth, the last blossom on the tree of creation. Nothing surpasses him; he is lord of all the rest.

Third. In the universe, there is even and exact justice. This rule is applied to the whole creation. It is the iron chain which connects means to ends, where results are linked to causes, without which power nothing could exist. Some may dream of something to sever this union, but they will find their mistake when they discover there is no breaking it. From the lowest strata progress advances through mineral, vegetable and animal, till it culminates in man, which perfection cannot be reached in a day.

Fourth. All revelation is direct or indirect. It is either immediate or coming through mediums. All [illegible] instrumental in its development. Before the existence

[illegible] there was no revelation. When newly created man walked forth [illegible], his eyes opened upon the fresh glories of the universe. There was no verbal revelation before Adam lived, and when they are made, they must, to be reliable, be amenable to science. They must be corrected by science. For instance, that which is called the inspired account of the time employed in the creation of the world and the period which has elapsed since, has been disproved by philosophy, the ablest geologists having demonstrated the fact that ages upon ages have been necessarily employed in producing this earth in its present stage from the wild confusion of chaos. It was also believed that this sphere was the centre of the universe, till science tells of other planets of greater magnitude than our own, forming solar systems in the wide scope of immensity of space.

Fifth. All preceding facts and principles find their culmination in progress which is the method of divine revelation. From a chaotic mass, change succeeding change, the solid earth was formed. Change followed change, first the vegetable, then animal, and man. By successive gradation from the lower animal existence, creation upon creation till man comes forth, crowning the whole—the incarnate law of progress. Nothing goes further than man, inasmuch as he is a progressive being. No more is needed to obtain immortality. His soul darts from sphere to sphere and grows continually, unfolding new combinations and uses in its endless progression. This is revealed to him through his capacity and susceptibility, proving himself to be crown of the universe. (Here he repeated his propositions.) These I place as the basis to establish man's immortality. If it be admitted in the laws of ends and means that man extends over time, if revelation is made primary, if all culminates in the great law of progression, we have a firm basis on which to construct man's immortality. He will be found to lengthen out his existence after life and will need immortality to expand his progression. [Time.]

MR. GRANT. Mr. Chairman, Ladies and Gentlemen:—This subject is one of the deepest importance. There is none which has so agitated the theological world, and of more important results. If the opposition sustains his position from philosophy, science and revelation, he sustains hero-worship, purgatory and witchcraft, and the word of him who said, at the beginning, "Thou shalt not surely die." Popular theology may teach it, but neither does science or the Bible. Milton, Tyndale, Luther, the Apostolic Fathers, Moses and the prophets, Christ and his Father, expressly teach the contrary. We are honest in our views, and have no doubt but our opponent is also sincere; let us therefore as we honestly differ conduct this debate with christian candor eschewing all feeling and personalities.

My friend on the opposition has made many assertions; but there is a very wide difference between meager assertion and substantial proof. It is here said that Christ taught immortality against the Sadducees. We admit that in one point he did, but never did he teach human immortality. The Sadducees denied the resurrection of the dead; Christ taught it, as the medium through which man would attain immortality. We have been called Sadducees, but we do not merit the name as we believe in the doctrine of the resurrection from the dead, inasmuch as all hopes are centered there. Paul says in 1 Cor. 15: 13, 14, "But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen: and if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain."

My friend says that the existence of an immortal spirit in man is taught by intuition. I do not feel its working then; and would dispute the assertion that it ever formed the basis of Jew or Christian religion. If of the Jew, why did they not know of it before they got it from the heathen? if of the Christian, why did Christ and his apostles and their immediate successors not preach it, ere the church became acquainted with this heresy, unknown till the second century, when christianity became mixed with Platonic philosophy?

As we take the Bible for the best authority, we will look at it for a history of man's creation. In Gen. 2: 7;—"And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." This is the account given, and we have yet to learn that he existed before in the hydrogen, iron and lime, etc., of which he had been formed. God formed and animated him by "blowing into his nostrils the breath of life; that same breath which animated "every living thing of all flesh," which Noah was commanded to receive two and two into the ark, for the preservation of their species. And yet we are told that this breathing into man conveyed to him immortality. This requires proof. Job asks the important question, 14: 14, "If a man die, shall he live again?" Here is the answer, John 11: 25, 26, "Jesus saith unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth (at my coming) and believeth in me shall never die." In John 6: 40;—"And this is the will of him that sent me, that every one that seeth the Son and believeth on him, may have everlasting life; (not has it already) and I will raise him up at the last day." In Zech. 12: 1, we read, "The burden of the word of the Lord for Israel, saith the Lord, which stretcheth forth the heavens, and formeth the spirit of man within him." When did he stretch forth the heavens, and form the spirit in man? At their creation. This word rendered spirit occurs in the Old Testament four hundred times, and in the New Testament three hundred and eighty-five, and not once is it rendered soul. In Amos 4: 13, we have a similar passage where the same word is rendered wind. "For lo he formeth the mountains, and createth the wind, and declareth unto man what are his thoughts, that maketh the morning darkness and treadeth upon the high places of the earth, the Lord, the God of hosts is his name." Spirit is always in the neuter gender. In Psalm 104: 29;—"Thou hidest thy face, they are troubled; thou takest away their breath and they die." When referring to man it means the breath of life, and in this he has no preeminence over the beast. In Job 32: 8;—"But there is a spirit in man, and the inspiration of the Almighty giveth them understanding." It is the same which David speaks of, the breath which sets the noble structure in motion. Man is not perfect as my friend supposes. He breathes and lives; the breath is taken away and he dies. We call upon our opponent to prove by Bible, philosophy or science, that anything leaves man at his death save this spirit which is the breath of life. Where is this spirit located? In Job 27: 3, we have the answer—"All the while the breath is in me, and the Spirit of God is in my nostrils." In Matt. 10: 28;—"And fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell;" psukee, and the corresponding word nephesh, are never rendered spirit and should not be confounded with pneuma.

My friend says that science and philosophy teach the immortality of the soul. This is not so; for, on the contrary, they say that "unless you cease to teach the inherent immortality in man, we cannot believe the Bible; and if you are right, then philosophy, as well as Bible, is entirely wrong." Herodotus says that the soul's immortality was first taught by the Egyptians; and in his own day there were some Greeks who had adopted it. Nothing but a heathen mind could conceive anything so improbable; for does it appear reasonable that after the entire organization of man was broken up, that anything could survive as a conscious entity?

MR. LOVELAND. No.

MR. GRANT. We say no. Bible, philosophy and science agree, for no truths can clash. We grant that in the universe there is the working of cause and effect. Man being formed out of the dust of the earth and breathed into, became a living animal, as Dr. Kitto renders it. Here was cause and effect; but that this man was the highest intelligence, we deny, for we think the Son of God was higher still. There are some who say that man is God and God is man. We know not if our friend upholds this position. We also admit that there is a divine justice which pervades creation. The infallibility of man's moral acts we deny. Our friend asserts that revelation was developed in the mind of man and unaided became known to him. The Bible saith that all revelation comes from God. My friend also says that science has proved the Bible account of the creation to be untrue. We affirm that the ablest geologists admit that six thousand years would be sufficient to bring about all the changes which are discovered in the earth. If man be highest, and still progressing, why is it that his strength is decaying, his life shortening, his morals corrupting? In Boston during the last forty years the moral standard has retrograded fifty per cent. Every where there is distrust. Merchants look doubtingly upon their brethren, and mutual confidence is almost unknown. Is man then the crown of the universe, progressing steadily from perfection to perfection, till he merges into Deity? We look for proofs. We know not where our opponent can find them, for we are well assured they are not in the Bible. [Time.]

"Christ our Life," by C. F. Hudson.

Having had the opportunity of perusing the manuscripts of Prof. Hudson's forthcoming book with the above title, I am glad to present my testimony as to its value. I regard it as a very compact and comprehensive scriptural argument in proof of the grand truth of life in Christ only. It contains much not in Debt and Grace, and is more adapted to the popular mind, more eminently scriptural than that, and less historical and theoretical.

While such contemptible abortions as "Sadduceeism," and such bombastic arrogancies as Landis on "Immortality" are being issued by the American Tract Society at Boston, and the Methodist Book Concern in New York, it is well for those who know the truth to keep the thinking public supplied with works which bear the tokens of having sprung from the hearts of christians and the heads of men, and which will give light on the subject.

I hope the book will be widely circulated. It will prove valuable indeed. [illegible]

Notice—Books, Tracts, &c.

I gave notice, a few weeks since, of having received a large quantity of tracts from Bro. H. L. Hastings, supplied by the Western Tract Fund. These are now mostly on hand to supply any orders from brethren and sisters for scattering among the people. Enough money must be sent to pay the postage if sent by mail, and whatever donations are made I shall forward to Bro. H. after paying the expense of transportation of the tracts from the East, which money will go into the tract fund.

I have received also a new supply of books. Debt and Grace, by C. F. Hudson, $1.25; Voice of the Church, by D. T. Taylor, $1.00; Dobney on Future Punishment, 75 cts.; Great Controversy, by H. L. H., 60 cts.; Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion, by Dr. Ramsey, 40 cts.; ditto paper covers, 30 cts.; Church Debts, by Dr. Ramsey, 40 cts.; Reasons for my Hope, by H. L. H., 50 cts.; ditto paper covers, 30 cts.; Tracts on Prophecy, 50 cts.; Tracts on Immortality, 50 cts.; Fate of Infidelity, 25 cts.; I. C. Wellcome's Treatise on the 24th and 25th Matt., 33 cts. Also the following, with paper covers: Old Paths, 15 cts.; Pauline Theology, 15 cts.; Death not Life, 25 cts. Postage in addition to the above prices. A liberal discount made to preachers and others buying to sell again. N. BRANCH, Jr.

Correspondence.

From Bro. S. Clark.

BRO. GRANT:—We wish through the Crisis to say to our preaching brethren, that a few of the hitherto scattered and homeless ones at Newark, N. J., have partially formed an association and hired a hall (for the Sabbath only), in which we have been holding meetings for the past two or three months, and the presence of the Lord has been with us, although we feel that occasional preaching would be profitable for us, and we hope instrumental in stirring up the minds of some who are still careless. Will not some of the good brethren thus engaged come and preach for us on the Sabbath? They will be kindly received and hospitably entertained while with us, but we can promise but little more.

Please let a notice be inserted in the Crisis for the then next following Sabbath, or sent direct to S. Clark, No. 320 Broad street. In either case we will see that such notice is properly circulated through our local papers if received in time. Visiting brethren will call on R. H. Noe, No. 14 Ferry street, near Market street depot, Newark, N. J. Come over, brethren, and help us.

May 8th.

From J. A. Sober.

BRO. GRANT:—I am now located in Burlington, Calhoun Co., Mich. I have three regular places to preach in, Burlington, Tekousha and Leroy. All these places are located in Calhoun Co.

From what I can gather by observation and the statements of brethren and friends, I think the good cause is gaining ground in this part of Michigan; and it is my conviction the truth will triumph if presented to the people in a right spirit. "Preach the truth in love," is a text we do well to heed always. I shall expect and pray when ministering brethren come among us to proclaim the great truths of the gospel, that they will manifest the meek and quiet spirit of Jesus their Master. O! may we be as wise as serpents and harmless as doves, "in publishing the good news" of Jesus' gospel to our fellow-beings. Do we realize the responsible position we occupy? Do we reflect that we are giving the last call of mercy to this world? I solemnly believe we are. Never was my faith stronger in the Advent near than at this moment. The evidences of the Lord's return to our globe at about this time amount almost to Divine inspiration. Brethren in the ministry, do we feel the power of this evidence in our own hearts? O! let us arise and blow the trumpet of warning to awaken a guilty world and dead church.

I would invite ministering brethren passing through this section to give us a call. Our doors are open to all true servants of Jesus. Come, brethren.

Obituary Notices.

In Hubbardston, Mass., April 25th, Mrs. ELIZABETH WAIT, aged thirty five.

Died, in Northwood, N. H., April 27th, ROYTER B., eldest son of True B. and Hannah T. Davis, in his seventeenth year.

The parents are sorely afflicted by the loss of a beloved child, but they sorrow not as others that have no hope, for they believe that Jesus died and rose again, and that those who sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. May this affliction be sanctified to all the mourning friends. O. S. EMERSON.

Died, in Warwick, R. I., May 4th, Bro. DANIEL PROPHET, in the eighty-third year of his age.

His death was sudden, being as well as usual until the day before he died. Bro. Prophet has been a christian for a number of years. He was respected by all classes for his honest and straightforward course. His loss will be felt by the church of which he was a worthy member, and we shall often call to remembrance the old man, as he used to stand before us, his hair whitened with age, his voice faltering, and his whole countenance animated with the hope that filled his aged breast. He was the oldest member of the Plain Church. He made no great pretensions, but his daily humble deportment convinced all that he was indeed a christian. His work is finished, his labor is done, and with the sleeping multitude he awaits that morn that shall awake him to newness of life, and give him rest that shall never more be broken.

Eld. E. Bellows preached his funeral sermon, from Ps. 37: 37,—"Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright; for the end of that man is peace." A large number of friends and neighbors were present.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Advices to the 2d instant.]

The Chinese were determined to dispute the passage of the Allies to Pekin. Within six miles of the fortifications, 200,000 men were under arms.

It is stated that France proposed to Switzerland to relinquish her right in reference to the neutralized districts of Savoy for fifty million francs.

The Bishops of the Romagna have received a prohibition against taking any part in the reception of King Victor Emmanuel. A correspondent of the Journal des Debats was ordered to leave Rome by the Pope, but obtained a delay of twenty days.

Advices from Naples say that the royal troops attacked the insurgents entrenched in the town of Carini, on the 18th. Desperate fighting continued for three days, when the Government troops received reinforcements and compelled the insurgents to retire to Portenico, leaving 250 killed behind. The royal troops had 300 killed. The town of Carini was besieged and set on fire. Great misery prevails at Palermo. Since the execution of thirteen insurgents, twenty six Neapolitan soldiers have been surprised and hung at Carini.

Letters assert that the Neapolitan army amounts to 60,000.

Advices from Messina of the 28th state that perfect tranquillity prevails there, but general discouragement also prevails. The number of persons arrested is considerable, and the prisons are crowded to excess.

The government was about to be transferred to Messina, and the garrison at Palermo, though numbering twenty thousand men, are afraid to proceed to the interior.

THE TWO SICILIES.

TURIN, April 27. The government has received the following dispatch, dated "Roads of Palermo, Wednesday evening, April, 25":

"The insurrection at Palermo has been suppressed. The state of siege is rigorously maintained, and great numbers of royal troops are quartered in the city. Messina is tranquil. The armed bands in the interior of the island are insignificant, and appear to be dispersed in all directions. The coasts are watched. Great agitation prevails throughout the island, including the province of Trapani. It is only in the province of Marsala that the royal authority has not been re-established."

NAPLES, April 26. The insurgent bands are being pursued continually, and are retiring before the royal forces. They had intrenched themselves in the small town of Carlini, which was surrounded by the royal troops, by whom they have been completely destroyed. The remnant have made their submission. Throughout Sicily and the kingdom of Naples the most perfect order and tranquility prevails.

Garibaldi, having been offered the freedom of Brescia, as compensation for the loss of that of Nice, at once accepted the offer, and in the course of his letter to the Brescians he made the following allusions to Nice and Sicily, confirming the impression that he intends to go to the island which is now struggling for its independence.

"The misfortunes of Italy have always arisen from the same cause, that those who were not directly threatened forsook their brothers in danger; and if the present is more edifying by the admirable unanimity of all the populations of the peninsula, it is still stained by one immoral and dishonorable deed. I accept with gratitude the freedom of the town offered by our dear Brescia; but as an Italian and Nizzard I do not mean to forsake my cradle, the grave of my mother, and the rights of Italy, or the land of Segurana and of Massena."

THE FRENCH EMPEROR.—The Liverpool Mercury says:

"There was a rumor in London at the end of last week, that the Emperor of the French has had a slight touch of apoplexy. That the Emperor has, during the last twelve months, at all events, had enough of care and anxiety to produce such a result is likely enough; but whether the statement be true or founded only on probability, we shall perhaps hear no more about it, as the Emperor dislikes his little ailments to be talked about, and such an attack as the one reported is pretty sure to be hushed up at the present critical moment in the affairs of France."

THE INQUISITION REVIVED.—Horrible tortures are inflicted by the Palermo police upon political prisoners, to make them confess—one is, making the offender sit down on a chair with an open seat, furnished with razor blades, and having underneath a chafing dish of burning coal.

NEW YORK, May 10. S. G. Goodrich, extensively known as "Peter Parley," died in this city very suddenly yesterday.

Notices, &c.

Editorial Notice.

☞ We are expecting, daily, a supply of "Reasons for my Hope," in paper covers. Those having sent orders for the same will please have patience and they will get them in a few days.

Notice.

There will be a conference holden in Strawberry Point, Clayton Co., Iowa, commencing June 28th, at 2 o'clock, P. M., to continue over the Lord's day, as Bro. Dow may arrange. Brother and Sister Mansfield will be present at the above conferences, with the writer, to preach the word. We hope there will be a general attendance at the above meetings. Friends will remember that Bro. and Sr. Mansfield cannot travel without means. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Y. HICOCK, Evangelist.

[illegible]

Notice.

There will be a Tent Meeting in Warren Co., Ill., near Shanghai, where our conference was held last year, commencing Wednesday, May 30th, 1860, at 7 1-2 P. M., and continue over the Lord's day. Brother and Sister Mansfield are expected to be there to preach the word, and other preaching brethren. We give a general invitation to all preachers and people to come and enjoy the feast. Provision will be made for all who come. A wagon will be at the depot in Galesburg Wednesday and Thursday, to meet the noon trains from east and west, to take all that come in the cars to the meeting, free of charge.

Also a Tent Meeting at Walker's Neck, Brown Co., Ill., commencing Thursday evening, June 7th, at 7 1-2 o'clock, and continue over the Lord's day. Brother and Sister Mansfield are expected to attend. We hope there will be a general gathering of the saints at this meeting. Provision will be made for all that come.

MOSES CHANDLER,
In behalf of the brethren.

New York Annual Conference.

The Western New York Annual Conference will be held at Seneca Falls, N. Y., commencing Friday evening, June 1st, at 7 1-2 o'clock, and continuing over the following Sunday. Elder S. H. Collings, R. V. Lyon, and many other preaching brethren are expected to be present, and we invite all, far and near,—east, west, north and south, to come. Cannot Bro. Grant attend? Let there be a general gathering of those that love the appearing of our King, for the time is AT HAND. Let as many as can, be on hand on Friday, so that the conference may be organized at the first meeting, and give time to do the business, there being considerable to be done, and only one day to do it in (Saturday.)

A. GUTHRIE, C. W. LOW, O. F. SWEET, } Committee of Arrangements.

By C. F. SWEET, Evangelist.

Seneca Falls can be reached by railroad from any point of compass, and there are warm-hearted brethren and sisters there who will receive all who will come. Inquire for T. G. Newman. We say again, come!

Notice.

There will be a conference in North Hermon, (Maine), Bracket neighborhood, to commence Saturday, May 26th, at 10 1-2 o'clock, and continue over the Sabbath. Let there be a general turnout. F. H. BERICK.
JAMES HEMENWAY.

Conference at Burlington, Mich.

Providence permitting, there will be a conference at Burlington, Calhoun Co., Mich., commencing Friday, June 1st, 1860, and continue over Lord's day following. Bro. and Sr. Seymour, Brn. E. Miller, Jr., and Cheesbrough will be present to preach the word. We also extend a cordial invitation to Bro. and Sr. Mansfield to meet with us and assist in preaching the word of life. We expect brethren and sisters from the surrounding country will meet with us. Come! Bro., lay by your work and meet us at Burlington. What we do must be done quickly, for the Lord is nigh at hand. For the church,

J. A. SOBER.

A Proposition.

To any one who will send us a new subscriber for one year, we will forward, post paid, a copy of our late discussion with Eld. W. W. Clayton, on the conscious state of the spirit after death, and the destruction of the wicked. And for a new subscriber for six months, we will send a copy of the pamphlets on "Soul" and "Spirit." With a little effort, a thousand names may be added to our list. Let every reader try to aid in scattering the light and truth. Now is the time to work.

For the Crisis.

The Great High Priest.

"Seeing then that we have a great High Priest that is passed into the heavens, Jesus, the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession. For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin."—Heb. 4: 14, 15.

(Concluded.)

Let us consider briefly some of the qualifications of this High Priest, and see if he be adapted to his exalted and important relation. We behold united in him the divinity and the humanity. He is God-man. First, he sustains an exalted position and relation to the Father. He understands perfectly the divine attributes and law. Thus he becomes qualified for a faithful advocate "in things pertaining to God." Possessed of immortality, we know that he ever liveth to make intercession. Those who live hundreds of years from the time when he assumed the priestly office, can be as much benefited by his pleadings, as those who first received the benefit of them. And as unto him is given all power in heaven and on earth, we well know he is able to save to the uttermost them who come to him.

We read again that him the Father heareth alway, therefore in view of his divinity, power to redeem, and all-prevailing supplications, we can rest confidently, our eternal interests upon him. But while we admit his divinity and power without questioning; while we doubt not his ability to save us to the uttermost, the very fact that he possesses this divine power, and is thus exalted, brings a trembling of heart, while we contrast with his holiness, his perfection, his wisdom, our own sinfulness, imperfection, errors and infirmities. "How can such a Being condescend to such an one as I?" is the anxious question. What most interests us to know is, not so much as to whether he can comprehend Deity and be faithful in enforcing the Divine law, as, can [illegible] humanity, can he sympathise with its laws, its sufferings, its infirmities?

He can assert the claims of the Divine government, can plead in vindication of the Divine law, but will he listen to the claims of poor human nature? Will he bear with patience a recital of my grievances, my temptations? How like music to the soul are the precious words—"We have not an high priest who cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are." How precious now to our hearts is the cordial invitation—"Let us therefore (in consideration of his sympathy) come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need."

As the Jewish high priest was "taken from among men," so that he might "have compassion on the ignorant, and on them that are out of the way; for that he himself also is compassed with infirmity;" so our great High Priest "took not on him the nature of angels, but he took on him the seed of Abraham. Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God, to make reconciliation for the sins of the people. For in that he himself hath suffered being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted."—Heb. 2: 16-18.

When in the form of a servant, he went up and down our poor world, he suffered from temptation, from poverty, from scorn, hatred and persecution in many ways—from stripes, imprisonment and death. In the days of his flesh, his prayers, like ours, were often mingled with strong crying and tears. He trembled in view of the bitter cup—he feared the baptism which awaited him. Like us learned the lesson of obedience by the things which he suffered.—Heb. 5: 7, 8. Through sufferings, the Captain of our salvation was made perfect.—Heb. 2: 10. He was sustained by hope, as we often are.—"For the joy that was set before him," he endured the cross and despised the shame."

Think not, because divine, he felt not as we feel the sufferings of humanity. The Scriptures represent him as sensitively shrinking from, and as painfully enduring, suffering as ourselves. For this very purpose he became in all things like unto his brethren—exposed to the same hardships, the same trials, the same sorrows, the same temptations, and possessing the same passions, he was susceptible of the same emotions and sufferings.

We are not prepared to fully sympathize with the agony of a bereaved parent's heart, unless we too have felt the same sore grief. We cannot fully comprehend the trials, the privations and afflictions attendant on a life of poverty, if we have never known want. We may pity the bereaved mother; we may be moved with compassion at the sight of poverty; but we cannot be touched with the feeling thereof without the experience.

It was to meet this want of our being,—it was in order to qualify himself for the heart-experiences, our High Priest chose a lowly position, among the humble poor, and toiled at the carpenter's bench. For this he became a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. "Surely," says the prophet Isaiah, "He hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows." Not his, but "ours." Can he not then be touched with the feeling thereof? O! he can, and his great heart of love and mercy is toward us for good. Cast all your care upon him, yea, all of it, for he careth for you. For you, poor sinner, weighed down with guilt; for you, poor wanderer into a far country, sitting by Babylon's cold stream, your harp all unstrung, hanging upon its willows. To you, guilty sinner, he says, "Look unto me and be ye saved"! "Come unto me, and I will give you rest"! To you, wanderer, he says, "Return unto me, and I will return unto you. I will heal your backslidings, I will love you freely." Sinner, will you not look and live? Backslider, will you not return to Father's house, where there is bread enough and to spare?

Brother, sister, drooping beneath your weight of sorrow, "Consider him that endured such contradictions of sinners against himself, lest ye be wearied and faint in your minds." You have not resisted unto blood, in your strife against sin and error. Go to Gethsemane, and gaze upon the sufferer there. Hear him plead for a removal of the bitter cup. See the bloody drops, forced out through the pores by the dreadful agony within. Behold a little yonder, those sleeping ones, unsympathizing with their best friend in his anguish—resting, while he is suffering.

Mark their cowardly flight, when by a pretended friend he is betrayed to those who thirst for his blood. Listen to a boasting Peter, who declared, though all men forsook his Master, he never would flee! He now with oaths denies their acquaintance. Follow him to the judgment hall. Behold the mockery, the scourgings, the false accusations. Then go to Calvary, and see him bleeding on the cross, derided by the throng. And now what sayest thou? Are your sufferings greater than his? Dost thou now believe he can sympathise with thy sorrows? Remember he bore all of thine, in addition to his own, which thou canst never bear.

Do you say, "I am an invalid,—these long years I have suffered much from divers sicknesses; surely he knows not how to sympathise with my sufferings" Take your Bible, turn to Matt. 8: 17, and read this, "Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses;" and say no more, "Jesus cannot sympathize with me."

Says another, "I am a poor sinner; I suffer from the multitude of my transgressions; my soul is weighed down with its load of guilt, surely He, who was always holy, knows not how to feel for me." Listen! I have a word for thee also. "The Lord hath laid on him the iniquities of us all." You bear only the weight of your own sins—Christ bore the sins of all. He who knew no sin by actual experience, was made to be sin for us. He suffered as a transgressor. He "bore our sins in his own body on the tree."

What infirmities—what sorrows—what temptations—what sins can we therefore plead as an excuse why we may not go to this great High Priest, and commit to him our cause? O, as we kneel at the mercy seat, hardly daring to lift our eyes heavenward, let the words dropped from the lips of the angel of the covenant, distil upon our heart, "Who can be touched with the feeling of your infirmities, for he was tempted in all points like unto you."

Ilium Fuit.

Those who do not read Latin will ask me to translate this. Well, I will tell what it means, both in English, and in theology. The English of it is, "Troy was." Troy is among the things that were. Its splendor and glory are departed, and its very existence has ended. For who would think of calling a little country town, that stands in the same place, [illegible] other houses and for another people—Troy? That city is a ruin, and exists only in the epic that celebrates its overthrow, the Iliad of Homer. Hence the famous and solemn expression, Ilium fuit.

But I have also discovered a theological sense which I think the phrase will bear. Let me explain. Libanius, of Antioch, was an eloquent writer of the fourth century. Basil and Chrysostom were among his pupils, and some of his letters are addressed to them. He was not an orthodox christian; but he certainly understood Greek, and the meaning of Greek words is the point I wish to make.

Now Libanius, speaking of Troy, says: "It lies, an example of the calamity of an eternal fire." The expression is almost identical with that in Jude, verse 7, where Sodom and Gomorrah are said to be "set forth as an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire." But is Troy still burning? or, did Libanius think of the Trojans as suffering torments never to end, when he penned those words? No one will pretend this. By the phrase "eternal fire," then, he must have meant a fire by which Troy was burned down, and destroyed utterly and forever. And this is precisely the sense which orthodox commentators allow in Jude, verse 7. It is the eternity of effect. And since the instance there given is called "an example," the just inference is that such is the meaning of the phrase.

I had hoped this sense of the phrase might be illustrated from the Greek writers; and thanks to Meyer who has cited Libanius. Until it is shown that Libanius used the phrase very improperly, his words must be taken as a valid commentary; and it will be a sufficient reply to all argument for immortality in gehenna from the phrase eternal fire, to say, Ilium fuit. "Faint, yet Pursuing."

AIR.—"Annie Laurie."

I am glad I ever started
To love and serve the Lord,
Though often feeble hearted,
Yet still I love his word;
When I feel weak and faint,
I hear a pleasant voice,—
"I'll be with you, I'll be with you,"
And it makes my heart rejoice.

Sometimes the way looks dreary,
And all is sad around,
And my poor heart is weary,
In sorrow's fetters bound:
'Tis then I shed my tears,
'Tis then I lift the prayer;
Jesus, save me, Jesus, save me,
And these ills he helps me bear.

Those joys have lost their beauty
That used to look so bright;
To walk the path of duty
Is now my chief delight;
Though in this narrow way
With trials oft I meet,
I have Jesus, I have Jesus,—
This makes all my sorrows sweet.

Though oft the scornful finger
Is pointed as I go,
It shall not make me linger,—
They scoffed at Jesus too;
I'll hasten on my way
Up to the pilgrim's home,
Home in heaven, home in heaven,
Where no sin can ever come.

O! leave earth's fading pleasures,
My kindred and my friends,
And seek with me those treasures,
Where friendship never ends
Jesus has often called,
No more his word abuse,
Wait no longer, wait no longer,
Lest you call and he refuse.

O! let us leave our doubting,
Dear pilgrims, on this road,
And cheer, with joyful shouting,
The way to heaven's abode;
Farewell to all our fears,
By which we've been opprest,
Hallelujah! hallelujah!
We are happy, rich and blest.

"Behold I come quickly"—REV. 3: 11

A SPEEDY COMING.—"Even so come, Lord Jesus!" "Why tarry the wheels of thy chariot?" Six thousand years this world has rolled on, getting hoary with age, and wrinkled with sins and sorrows. A waiting church sees the long-drawn shadows of twilight announcing, "The Lord is at hand." Prepare, my soul, to meet him. Oh! happy days, when thine adorable Redeemer, so long dishonored and despised, shall be publicly enthroned, in presence of an assembled universe, crowned Lord of All, glorified in his saints, satisfied in the fruits of his soul's travail, destroying his enemies with the brightness of his coming—the lightning glance of his wrath, —causing the hearts of his exulting people to "rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory." Prepare, my soul, to meet him! Let it be a joyous thought to thee,—thy "blessed hope,"—the meeting of thine Elder Brother. Stand oftentimes on the watch-tower to catch the first streak of that coming brightness,—the first murmur of those chariot wheels. The world is now in preparation! It is rocking on its worn-out axle. There are voices on every side proclaiming, "He cometh! He cometh! to judge the earth." Reader! art thou among the number of those who "love his appearing?" Remember the attitude of his expectant saints: "Blessed are those servants whom the Lord, when he cometh, will find Watching!"

"Remember this word to thy servant, upon which thou hast caused me to hope!" —Faithful Promiser.

"The Angels that Sinned."

"And it came to pass, when men began to multiply on the face of the earth, and daughters were born unto them, that the sons of God saw the daughters of men that they were fair and they took them wives of all whom they chose. . . . And there were giants in the earth in those days and also after that, when the sons of God came in unto the daughters of men, and they bare children unto them, the same became mighty men, which were of old, men of renown."—Gen. 6: 1-4.

Josephus, the Jewish Historian, declares "the sons of God," mentioned in the above quotation, to have been angels. He says, "For many angels of God accompanied with women, and begat sons that proved unjust and despisers of all that was good, on account of the confidence they had in their own strength; for the tradition is, that these men did what resembles the acts of those whom the Grecians called giants." —Antiquity of the Jews, Book I, chap. III. And the translator says, in a marginal note on this passage, 'This notion, that the fallen angels were in some sense the "Fathers of the old giants," was the constant opinion of antiquity."

The testimony of Josephus on this point is important, because he was a man of learning and well acquainted with the doctrines of the Jews, and it is not expected that he would make the assertion that the sons of God were angels, unless it was a well authenticated fact, and fully received among his people. That what he asserts is substantiated by the testimony of the apostles Peter and Jude, is apparent from a candid consideration of their testimony in regard to the sin of angels. Jude, speaking of some who turned the grace of God into lasciviousness, says,—"I will therefore put you in remembrance, though ye once knew this, how that the Lord, having saved the people out of the land of Egypt, afterward destroyed them that believed not [the adulterous followers of Baalam]. And the angels which kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains under darkness, unto the judgment of the great day. Even as Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities about them, in like manner giving themselves over to fornication, and going after strange flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire."

1 Pet. 3: 18—20.—"For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, . . . being put to death in the flesh but quickened by the Spirit, by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison; which some time were disobedient, when once the long-suffering of God waited in the days of Noah." That these were angelic spirits, is apparent from the fact that human beings are not called spirits in the Bible, while of angels it is said, "Who maketh his angels spirits." Here the sin of these angelic spirits is said to have been in the days of Noah, and that Christ went and preached unto them in prison after he had been put to death in the flesh and quickened in the spirit; that is, after he was raised from the dead.

Accordingly, in his second epistle, he speaks of the angels that sinned, in connection with the destruction of the old world, in the same manner that he naturally would have done had he understood the account in Gen. 6, as Josephus did; namely, that the angels sinned in cohabiting with the daughters of men. The sin consisted in the generation of depraved beings, half human, half angelic; who would exist after the destruction of their bodies. Hence, as these beings once existed in the flesh, in their disembodied state, they would be demons; possessing a natural affinity for human bodies; hence, the reason for demoniacal possessions. These demons will be destroyed when the law of generation by which they exist is revoked.

WM. HOBBS.

Position on the Time of the Advent.

We hold, "That the second coming, or appearing of Christ, is indicated to be now emphatically nigh, even at the doors, (Matt. 24: 33,) by the chronology of the prophetic periods, (Dan. 7: 25; 8: 14; 9: 24; 11: 7, 11, 12: Rev. 9: 10, 15; 11: 2, 3; 12: 6, 14; 13: 5,) the fulfillment of the prophecy, (Dan. 2d, 7th, 8th, 9th, 11th, and 12th; Rev. 9th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 14th, and 17th,) and the signs of the times. (Matt. 24: 29; Luke 21: 25, 26.) And that this truth should be preached both to saints and sinners, that the first may rejoice, knowing that their redemption draweth nigh, (Luke 21: 28; 1 Thess. 4: 18,) and the last be warned to flee from the wrath to come, (2 Cor. 5: 11,) before the master of the house shall rise up and shut to the door—Luke 13: 24, 25."

We have held this view of the question of time for the last fifteen years. And every year has given us increased light on the subject.

When, with others, the above position was taken, we had no other light on the termination of the prophetical periods. The light then made it quite clear that they were near their termination; but how near,—whether ten, or twenty years,—we could not determine.

The year 1843, to which a large number had looked as the period at which the prophetical times would terminate, having passed, without the realization of their hope, many honest and devoted christians were left in a state of trial and disappointment. To such, any light that could be given was gratefully and cheerfully received. Just at this time the "Horæ Apocalypticæ" of the Rev. Dr. Elliott appeared, and contributed much light on the prophetic periods and the "signs of the times." The lectures also of the Rev. John Cumming, on the Apocalypse, in Exeter Hall, in 1848, added to this light on the time, and the signs of the near approach of the kingdom of God. This gave us a lively interest in the circulation of Drs. Elliott's and Cumming's views, which we have done for the last ten years to the widest extent possible, both by the pulpit and the press.

Their position on the definite time of the Advent, was 1865 to 1867.

Within the last year a work has been published by the Rev. Mr. Shimeall, of New York, whose position varies one year from their calculations: he fixing upon 1868, as the close of the 6,000 years of creation week. He bases his calculations on the same prophetic periods as Doctors Elliott and Cumming; and, in coming to such a harmonious result, we think the position is materially strengthened.

Besides the above learned advocates of the definite time for the great crisis, we might add a large number to the list,—such as the late Dr. Ramsey, of the Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia; Dr. Rice, of the Presbyterian Church in St. Louis, Mo.; Rev. Mr. Bryant, of the Presbyterian Church in Niles, Mich.; with near one hundred others, whose testimonies may be given in future numbers.

There was a time when we could take the ground that the Advent of Christ was near, based on the prophetic periods, without a knowledge of their exact termination. But that time is past. The last fifteen years, in which "many have run to and fro, and knowledge has increased," have thrown too much light on the chronology of the Bible and the world, for us, as Adventists, to longer hold a position of indefiniteness.

We know, according to the position stated at the head of this article, that the Advent of Christ is nigh, by the prophetic periods. How nigh? We answer, Within seven or eight years, as shown by Messrs. Shimeall, Elliott, and other authorities, who agree in fixing the termination of the great prophetic periods in 1866 to 1868.

What we mean then by "now emphatically nigh, "is not some time in this century, twenty years or more in the future, where it will be impossible to harmonize the periods; or some emphatic indefinite time, which may be nearer, or more remote.

We look then for the end of the Gentile times between the years of 1866 and 1868; when the 6,000 years of the world's history will close, and the great Sabbath of rest will come. And we believe this truth should be preached both to saints and sinners, that the first may rejoice, knowing their redemption draweth nigh, and the last be warned to flee from the wrath to come, before the Master of the house shall rise up and shut to the door.—Luke 13: 24, 25. "Blessed will be that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing."—Matt. 24: 46.

O solemn, dreadful, glorious news!
The Gentile "times" about to close,
And Zion's King appear!
Ah! then what fearfulness shall seize
Those virgins who have lived at ease,
Nor thought the Bridegroom near.

Awake! arise! ye sleepers, all;
'Tis Mercy's latest gracious call;
Sinners, why will ye die?
And ye who have a name to live,
But daily do the Spirit grieve,
For pardon quickly fly!

Modern Preachers.

A great deal of fault has been found with modern preachers, both by critics and the million; but the grand defect of many seems to us to be, that they are wanting in heart. They are icicles. They may argue with logical precision, but they argue coldly. They may convince the understanding, but they have not sensibility enough to touch the warm sympathies, and make a vivid impression upon the feelings of even the devout soul. Even if they touch this chord accidentally, it seems not natural to them, and they are presently back again to their stiff creeds and dry dogmas—coolly untying consequences united in a priori, bundling up inductions a posteriori, and hammering away at cause and effect, original sin, predestination, beings self-existent, and the universal scale of beings. Instead of giving a deep and commanding interest to their arguments by applying them to those feelings which are common to all hearts, and will eagerly answer when appealed to, they endeavor to interest the understandings of men in opposition to their feelings, and to set up the intellect in contemptuous despotism over every generous and glowing sympathy. Who can wonder, when religious truth is enforced in this dry, argumentative, phlegmatic manner,—when the spruce preacher reads his drowsy lucubration without lifting his nose from the text, or venturing to earn the shame of an enthusiast—that the harangues of the pulpit are so destitute of living energy, and fail to alarm the profligate, or animate the desponding? What would be the result if an actor at a theatre, instead of throwing his whole soul into his "counterfeit presentment" of feeling,—his mimicry of "the billowy ecstasy of wo" —should drawl through his part in the freezing manner of many preachers? Would he not be hissed from the stage, or play to empty boxes?

Lord Erskine, who is so greatly celebrated for the delicacy and tenderness with which he sometimes [illegible] of domestic endearment and felicity, and the lofty tone of indignation with which he lashes and scourges their invaders, remarks, in the [illegible] of Fox, that "intellect alone, however exalted, without strong feelings, without even irritable sensibility, would be only like an immense magazine of powder, if there were no such element as fire in the natural world. It is the heart which is the spring and fountain of all eloquence." To be eloquent, a man must himself be affected. He must be sincere. He must be in earnest. In his own heart must burn the fire which he would kindle in the bosoms of others. . . . There must be a certain honesty and open-heartedness of manner—an apparently entire, and thorough conviction of being in the right—an everlasting pursuit of, and entire devotion to the subject, to seeming neglect and unconcern as to everything else—emotion, feeling, passion. Even in discourses of a logical character, where the reasoning approaches almost to mathematical demonstration, the hearers will not be impressed, they will scarcely listen with patience, unless they are persuaded that the conclusions to which the speaker would force them, are the deliberate and solemn convictions of his own mind. A cold-blooded, phlegmatic preacher may produce a discourse irresistible in argument, elaborately perfect in rhetorical embellishment, and painfully correct in style, but nothing can give it that electric fire which darts through and through an audience, kindling each heart into enthusiasm, save natural feeling expressed with the fervor of earnest sensibility.

The only way to be eloquent in the pulpit, is to banish every thought of self—to forget everything but God and duty. The triumphs of true eloquence—touching, grand, sublime, awful as they sometimes have been—are seen, it has been well remarked, only when the orator stands before you in the simple majesty of truth, and, overpowered with the weight of his convictions, forgets himself, and forgets everything but his momentous subject. You think not of who speaks or how he speaks, but of what is spoken; transported by his pathos, your rapt imagination pictures new visions of happiness; subdued by the gushes of his tenderness, your tears mingle with his; determined by the power of his reasoning, you are prompt to admit, if not prepared to yield to the force of his arguments; entering with his whole heart and soul into the subject of his address, you sympathize in those strong emotions which you see are in his bosom, burning and struggling for utterance; and soon find yourself moving onward with him on the same impetuous and resistless current of feeling and passion. "It is amazing," says Goldsmith, "to what heights eloquence of this kind may reach. This is that eloquence the ancients represented as lightning, bearing down every opposer; this the power which has turned whole assemblies into astonishment, admiration, and awe; that is described by the torrent, the flame, and every other instance of irresistible impetuosity."—Christian Recorder.

Recipe for Spiritual Health.

Christians oftentimes expect to grow in grace without any effort upon their part, but God has made it their duty "to watch unto prayer," to be "diligent in season and out of season," and if the spiritual husbandman will not labor, he will be disappointed in looking for a harvest. The pithy suggestions we find in an exchange, may be needed by some of our readers:

Both bodily and spiritual health are desirable. Both are exposed to injury from any causes. When the injury is not too deep and extensive, both may be recovered. What is the course to be pursued in order to secure spiritual health?

1. You must take exercise. You must walk daily in the vineyard of God's church. You must work in the vineyard of God's church. You must bathe in the fountain of redeeming blood. In a word, you must exercise all the graces of the Spirit.

2. You must pay attention to your diet. You must be careful about your food. Bread and water are sufficient; the bread of life and the waters of salvation. These satisfy and sanctify; they make healthy, and keep healthy. You must take sufficient. A little will keep you living, but much is necessary to health. This food must be taken regularly, for regularity is important. You cannot prosper and be in health unless you live upon Christ, and live upon him every day.

3. A little medicine is necessary; in some cases a good deal. This is made up of the bitter herbs of disappointments, losses, crosses, temptations, bereavements, troubles, and trials of various sorts. The medicine is very unpleasant, but very profitable. Unless taken, and taken pretty freely, you will be laid up with idleness, carelessness, anxiety, pride or selfishness. Your heavenly Father prepares this medicine, Divine Providence presents it. You must take it, and expect benefit from it.

4. You must keep your mind free from anxious trouble. In order to this you must live in peace with God, be content with your lot, and trust the promises.

TIME OF LIFE.

The past is a dream,
The future a breath,
The present a gleam
From birth unto death.

☞ Gentility is neither of birth, fashion, wealth or manner—but in the mind. A high sense of honor, a determination never to take a mean advantage of another, an adherence to truth, delicacy, politeness towards those with whom we have dealings, are its essential characteristics.

☞ A man's life does not, and cannot, stand in this or that thing which is external to himself; a man's life stands in his inward character.

Reading for Youth.

A Christian Boy's Influence.

When Frank was twelve years old he had received but little religious instruction. His parents were not christians. His father paid but little regard to the Bible, and argued that conversion was not necessary, in order to go to heaven. He had removed with his family, about five years before, to a new settlement in the wilderness. There were but few families scattered around him. Two of his sons were married and lived near him. They were intelligent and fond of reading, and they did much by [illegible] and circulating bad books and papers, to spread the deadly errors in which they had been brought up. [illegible]

When he was about twelve years old, he went away to spend several [illegible] with relatives, in a place where he was instructed in the Bible, and where he heard the preaching of the gospel. It was all quite new to him. He was anxious to learn about religion. The Holy Spirit convinced him of his sins. He prayed that God would give him a new heart. He found the Savior, and gave very clear evidence that he had become a christian. Soon afterwards he returned to his father's house, where it was not easy for a boy to live as a christian.

About a year after this, there was preaching in that new settlement, and there were several persons who were awakened and hopefully converted. Among the converts were the two married brothers of Frank, who began at once to pray in their families, and destroyed their bad books.

The Father did not attend any of the meetings. But I conversed with him, and endeavored to induce him to attend to the salvation of his soul. But I could not see that any impression was made upon him, till I asked him this question: "What influence has religion had upon Frank? Do you think it has made him any better?" "Yes, sir," said he, "I think it has made him better. I suppose that he was not worse than other boys before. But he is a good boy now. I must say that for him." His feelings choked his utterance, so that he could say no more. In a few days he submitted his heart to God, and was himself rejoicing in the Savior he had found.

No doubt the good conduct of that boy, as a christian, was one means of leading his father to Christ.

Every christian boy can exert a powerful influence for good upon those about him.—Tract Journal.

"Babe of Bethlehem."

[ON A PICTURE OF THE INFANT SAVIOR.]

Babe of Bethlehem,—on my head
Be thy healing influence shed;
Each sweet christian grace impart
To this stubborn, wayward heart.

Babe of Bethlehem,—may I be
Daily more and more like thee,
Till, transformed by heavenly grace,
I behold thee face to face.

Babe of Bethlehem,—when I stand,
Weak and faint, on Jordan's strand,
Be thine arm outstretched to save,
Bear me o'er the swelling wave.

Babe of Bethlehem,—on the day
When earth and heaven shall pass away,
And every heart shall quail with fear
As the judgment hour draws near;

Babe of Bethlehem,—let me see
My Savior and my Judge in thee;
Before thy face with rapture fall,
And hail thee, Jesus, Lord of all.

The Holy Child Jesus.

Did you ever think how lovely Jesus must have been when a child? No mother before Mary had held so sweet an infant in her arms. While in many things he was like all other little children, he was never fretful, never for once lifted his tiny hand in opposition to his mother's will, nor gave her a glance or frown of displeasure. And Oh! how bright must have been the smile of the sinless one, and musical the prattle of his early childhood.

Do you not wish some of the apostles had told us about his infancy and blooming boyhood; whether he ever played as other children, and cried when in pain?

One thing you do know. Because he was a child, he knows just how children feel, and can sympathize with them in all their griefs, and wants their love. Therefore he has said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not." Think when you feel wrong, and are tempted to speak or act wickedly, Jesus when a child never did so; and you then will not sin against him, I am sure. But if you do disobey him, remember he became a child like you, that he might know just what your little heart needs.

"Suffer the little ones to come,"
The blest Redeemer said;
"I'll take them to my heavenly home,"
And give them angel's bread;
My precious blood I'll shed, to save
From sin, from sorrow, and the grave."

—Golden Rule.

☞ Nothing sits so gracefully upon children, nothing makes them so lovely, as habitual respect and dutiful deportment toward their friends and superiors. It makes the plainest face beautiful, and gives to every common action a nameless but peculiar charm.

For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	[illegible]
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

For the Crisis.

We Shall Meet no more to Sever.

There's a world of peace and pleasure,
Where the wicked cannot come;
When the storms of life are over,
It will be the christian's home.

CHORUS.

We shall meet no more to sever
When the night of sorrow's o'er;
Won't it be a happy meeting
When we meet on Canaan's shore?

If we meet with joy and sorrow
In this wilderness of tears,
We will hope for joy to-morrow—
Yes, we'll hope through changing years.

Though our life be dark and toilsome
As we journey here below,
We shall meet our blessed Savior
When life's journey we've passed through.

'Tis the christian's hope of heaven,
And forever being blest;
'Tis the hope of meeting Jesus,
That consoles him when opprest.

If we hope to enter heaven
When the Lord from glory comes,
We must have our lamps well burning,
Then he'll take us to his home.

The Grant and Loveland Discussion.

(FROM NOTES BY J. F. COTTON.)

MR. LOVELAND. I am happy that so many of my propositions have been admitted. As regards Jesus teaching the doctrine of the resurrection in opposition to the Sadducees, that I admit; but i twas in that form which taught immortality in a future life rather than a literal resurrection of the body. After the Sadducees explained their position, Jesus said to them, 'Have you not read in the book of Moses, how in the bush God spake to him and said I am the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob? God" said Christ, "is not the God of the dead but of the living; for all live unto him." Now these patriarchs had been dead many years, as to their bodies, yet lived in the spiritual world, which was denied by the Sadducees.

I did not say that the doctrine of immortality was revealed to man by intuition, but from his dual nature he comprehended that which is the basis of Jew and Christian faith. Perhaps it is owing to the neuter character of the spirit my brother speaks of, that in the resurrection there is neither marrying nor giving in marriage.

In correction I would say, that I consider man as the highest intelligence in this world. His progressive nature is recreative, and man is to himself a surer revelation than that which cometh through words. Desire must have a feeling before it is felt, and ideas must exist before words, else they were incomprehensible. Man's excellence is revealed to himself through his senses; his love for the beautiful, his aspirations after the future, reflect the innate immortality of his nature. All men look to a future life, eternal and glorious,—the exceptions are insanity. Now whence come these lofty desires and aspirations? Can mortals desire immortality? Never! as well might a clam desire to be a man, as man without immortality have any conceptions or desire for it. The stream never rises above its level. The tree yields its own fruit. The lion does not eat straw, nor the lamb revel in blood. Man desires immortality because he is immortal. He could not do otherwise. The desire never could originate in the human heart were not the germs of immortality there. But man includes in himself the capacity for endless life and joy.

My brother denies that man is progressive I am astonished to hear such assertions coming from a man like him. It is universally conceded that philosophy and science have made gigantic strides in our day and generation. Why was the cross not raised in Eden, but that progress must fit in events to each other? Adam and Eve were the potential source from which the human family sprang and all bear the human features. Some children are like the father, some like the mother, and some partake of the likeness of both. If God be immortal then man made in his image must be also immortal. He needs nothing more to make him so, no more carbon, etc., but attains it by the great laws of progress. Man must be immortal to answer the end of his creation. When he has conquered all matter he sits down and weeps over unsatisfied desire. He stretches out his wings, and at every mighty stroke mounts higher and higher, unwearied and aspiring. (Applause.) [Time.]

MR. GRANT. It has been remarked that Christ in speaking to the Sadducees said, "I am not the God of the dead but of the living" and therefore not only taught the resurrrection of the dead but the immortality of the soul. Let us examine the subject a little more. In Luke 20: 27 and onward we read, "Then came unto him certain of the Sadducees which deny that there is any resurrection; and they asked him, saying, Master, Moses wrote unto us, If any man's brother die, having a wife, and he die without children, that his brother should take his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother. There were therefore seven brethren. . . . . Therefore at the resurrection whose wife is she, for seven had her to wife?" The reply of our Saviour showed that the happiness of the blessed did not in any wise depend upon the gratification of the flesh. "And Jesus answering said, the children of this world marry and are given in marriage, but they that shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage: neither can they die any more (meaning that they once died), for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection. Now that the dead are raised." My friend dwells upon the word are as if the resurrection had already taken place. The Syriac, reads, "Will arise." Coverdale, "Rise again." Wicklif, "And that dead men rise again." Tyndale, Cranmer and Geneva, "And that the dead shall rise again;" which makes it all plain and in harmony with Mark 12: 25, 26 and 27, where there is also reference made to the same account. "For when they shall arise from the dead, they neither marry nor are given in marriage: but are as the angels which are in heaven. And as touching the dead that they rise, have ye not read in the book of Moses how in the bush God spake unto him saying, I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob? He is not the God of the dead but of the living." What does our Savior prove by this? Is it not the literal resurrection of the dead? For Abraham, Isaac and Jacob being deceased they need no God while dead; but Christ brings them up, and then He is the God of the living. My friend says that Jesus did not teach the literal resurrection of the dead. I am surprised at this assertion. Hear the words of Christ in John 5: 28 and 29, "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil to the resurrection of condemnation." Christ was himself an example, being the first fruits of them that slept, even the first born from the dead. And Paul says, "For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised: and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain."

My friend asks in ridicule if the spirit be in the neuter gender how shall it be with the woman in the resurrection, as if our Savior had not already answered it. The word rendered spirit does not always mean a being. Pneuma or ruakh, has four uses. 1st. "Spirit," used to represent a being. 2d. A state of mind or disposition, as "haughty of spirit." 3d. An influence proceeding from or forth; as the "Holy Spirit proceedeth from the Father." 4th. And the chief point of the argument, "breath of lives," or the atmosphere which we breathe; which if taken from our planet, animal and vegetable life would soon of necessity be extinct. This term is either misunderstood or misapplied.

Our friend has said that we in speaking of man as a being of progress said, that if he be progressive then is the Bible false. We made no such statement, but we said that if man were getting better the Bible was false. The book says that man shall wax worse and worse, and if the contrary be true then is the Bible false. The records of crime show to the thinking man the retrograde motion of this creature, for which my opponent claims so much perfection.

My friend has made a singular statement,—that man reveals himself to himself. For my part, I cannot understand it, but I wish for no other revelation than that which is contained in this book, (holding up the Bible), and it says, 2 Tim. 1: 10, "But it is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel."

We shall now notice what our friend says about desire. He says that the very fact that a man desires immortality is a proof that he has got it. This is strange logic. Now we think that the more reasonable inference would be, from the fact that a man desired it he had not got it. (Loud applause.)

MR. CHAIRMAN. I hope we shall have no more such demonstrations.

MR. GRANT. The chairman is right. You have applauded my friend once, we will call it even now. We wish no cheering—it is unpleasant to all of us.

We were speaking of man's desire for immortality. We think a man were foolish to desire a thing of which he was already in possession. If I own this book I do not desire it; and if I desire to be rich it surely is no proof that I am so. When I am sick I desire health; but does that make me well? Webster defines the word thus, —"Desire is a wish to obtain some gratification or happiness which is supposed to be obtainable." Therefore so long as we desire a thing there is proof that we have not got it.

My friend again says that "man by the law of progression is susceptible of receiving immortality." He would seem somewhat confused in mind by making such strange remarks. He again says that man is in forward progress. Look back to our first parents in the garden of Eden, when no blurr or jar disturbed the beauty and harmony of creation. Is man better now, we ask, than when he stood there noble, erect in all the dignity of unsullied innocence? We admit that man is susceptible of receiving immortality; but deny that he therefore has it already; else why are we commanded to seek for glory, honor and immortality? Man may obtain all these "by a patient continuance in well doing." My friend says that if man be created in the image of God and is not immortal, then is God not immortal. We are not here to argue the immortality of God, but of man. By his argument man must also be omnipotent. He says that man needs nothing to make him immortal; yet we are told that it is the gift of God. He says that "man's faculties are adapted for more than this life." That is also our belief.

We think that we have met all our opponent's arguments and as it is not our place as the negative to assume any new ones, we cheerfully give the balance of time to our friend, and sit down.

[Divided time.]

MR. LOVELAND. We shall divide. My brother is a poor reporter, else I have a strange faculty of speaking differently from what I mean. When I said that immortality is in the structure of the soul evidenced by his desire for immortality, I did not say man had it because he desired it. It is this desire which distinguishes him above the animals, for their mode of suiting things to their natural convenience is superior to his. Besides man is susceptible of loving his fellows and contributing to their happiness. My brother asks, are we better than our first parents? Yes. All divines admit that sin has wrought out the most glorious results. If man had not fallen there would have been no Christ, no salvation, no praise from the redeemed.

"'Twas great to speak a world from naught.
'Twas greater to redeem."

God is more God, and his glories more resplendent from the fall. [Time]

MR. GRANT.—If we have immortality in us, why seek it. It is our privilege to put it on, for we read that "this mortal shall put on immortality." If we have immortality in us now, there is no faith in believing in a future life. We agree with our opponent that the present existence is insufficient to satisfy man. There is the life to come, in which we believe, because the Bible says so. (Applause.) My friend labors hard to prove that mankind is better now than before Adam fell; and yet methinks there are a great many evils prevalent in the world consequent on that sin; such as death, disease, hate, and a thousand others in their dreadful train. How the mercy of God was shown when he debarred the wretched creature from the tree which if eaten would have perpetuated sin and suffering to all eternity!

My friend attaches a singular value to sin in making it a glorifier of God. That the work of redemption was great who will question? but then, did it not need a great sacrifice? Would it not have been better could the Savior have been spared the tears and blood which he shed in his sorrowful pilgrimage and death of agony? Is man happier in his sweat and toil, the reward of his crime, than in the calm peace of conscious innocence? God says that he should also die. The devil said, "Thou shalt not surely die." Who told the truth? [Time.]

SECOND EVENING.

Meeting called to order by J. V. Himes, Mr. Loveland opens the services by repeating the Lord's prayer. After which the chairman read the question. On the affirmative

MR. LOVELAND. In resuming the discussion this evening, I would recall to your mind that which must have been apparent last evening, namely, the marvellous ease with which my brother disposed of my arguments, seeming forgetful that I had advanced anything deserving the slightest notice. It would be quite refreshing were it not simply ridiculous. But I assure him that no attempt to overlook my arguments will answer his purpose. I promise him attention when he shall lead in the debate. I will not set aside any points which he makes, nor will I suffer him to do so now with the propositions which I advance.

My first position was that man had a dual nature, soul, or spirit and body. This he partly admits, but dodges the consequence by assuming that spirit is breath. Very good; it is the breath of God, for he breathed into man the breath of life, and man became a living SOUL. Besides, he has admitted too much by saying angels are organized beings. I recalled a passage where it says, "He maketh his angels spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire," or as might be more properly said, "who maketh his spirits angels," as angels are not a signification of being, but of an office. Angels are natural men, who, after having laid aside their physical body, live in a spiritual existence. I affirm that there is not a passage in the Bible, from Genesis to Revelations, which intimates that they are a distinct order of beings from men. They have appeared as men, been called men, and eaten and drunk as we do.

My opponent declares that the spirit means breath. Is the Holy Spirit breath? Were the demons breath which were called unclean spirits? According to the Greeks, demons were the spirits of men. And in this instance the Old Testament and Socrates agreed. I would ask my friend, was the spirit that appeared to Job a spirit or real man? We read of "the spirit stirred within us," "a wounded spirit," etc. I think it was David said that "his soul followed after the Lord." Is not, then, this soul or spirit the thinking, acting being? Is the soul in man only the influence of God? In the dual nature of man the soul and spirit are used interchangeably to denote that thinking, unseen, personal something, which is distinct from the body The trance affords evidence that the soul may be absent from the body; Paul says that he knew a man about fourteen years ago; whether in or out of the body he could not tell, God knoweth: who was taken up into paradise, and there showed unutterable things. There is something which can be caught up if Paul's testimony is reliable. The experience of the gifted preacher, Tennent of New Jersey, in the last century, while in a trance, was such as was not allowed to be uttered. (The speaker illustrated his position by the expression of several others while in the trance state, and also brought forth his proof to sustain his position that the world was not created in six days, and that geologists have repudiated the idea that it is not six thousand years old.)

My brother seeks, by a play of words, to turn my position. I affirm that man's desire for immortality shows that the germ is in himself. For instance, one has an ear for music—is there not music in that soul? If for mathematics, is his soul not mathematical? Man desires food. Would he desire food if he had not the digestive apparatus? Neither would man desire immortality if it were not within him. [Time.]

MR. GRANT. In reviewing my friend's remarks, we will notice the subject of "angels." He asserts that angels are the spirits of men. We have Bible proof to the contrary. In Heb. 1: 14 we read, "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" Most certainly we believe in angel manifestations, simply because the Bible teaches it, and also that they have tangible bodies and organizations which can make use of food, as when Lot entertained those on their way to Sodom. We are also commanded (Heb. 13: 2)—"Be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares." Now we fearlessly make the assertion that these angels "are not the spirits of men, that no spirit ever could communicate with man. The thing is impossible—absurd. (Applause and hisses.) Man was made a little lower than the angels. What? lower than himself? That hardly looks sensible. But at the resurrection he shall be made "equal unto the angels." If angels are the departed spirits of men, where did these come from which were set to guard the tree of life before the first man died? Angels have always in their communication with mankind assumed the likeness of the species, and have often been mistaken for men. Daniel speaks of one that appeared unto him as the appearance of a man and strengthened him. They have power to do woodrous things, such as rolling away the stone from the door of the sepulchre; but not in a single instance have they exercised their miraculous strength through a "medium." Neither have we ever known a disembodied spirit sit down to eat bread or wash its feet.

Our opponent asks, are demons breath? No, sir. The word spirit has four significations in the Bible. First, a being, as God, who is a spirit. Second, an influence proceeding from a being, such as mesmerism or psychology, or the Holy Spirit coming from God. Nor was it a breath that passed before Job, but an angel—a "spirit." And I would here repeat the remark that this word should never be confounded with soul. My friend mentions the trance phenomena as a proof of the soul's immortality.

MR. LOVELAND. I did not bring it as a proof.

MR. GRANT. Then it should not have been mentioned. There are several instances where it is recorded that men have been taken up in vision, and, as in the case of Paul, where he was in doubt as to whether it was a vision or not. In Ezek. 8: 3—"And he put forth the form of an hand and took me by a lock of mine head, and the spirit lifted me up between the earth and the heaven, and brought me in the vision of God to Jerusalem," etc. And in Ezek. 11: 24.—"Afterward the spirit took me up, and brought me in a vision by the spirit of God into Chaldea to them of the captivity. So the vision that I had seen went up from me." Now angels can do this, and we believe demons have also power to do it, but we are not prepared to admit that spirits could do it. Paul says, "I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago, (whether in the body I cannot tell, or whether out of the body I cannot tell God knoweth;) such an one caught up to the third heaven." Now this happened before Paul died, consequently it does not prove the existence of a conscious, disembodied entity, and as the apostle was in doubt about it, it proves as much for me as for my friend. I am asked, Is life a being or an attribute?" We might question his definition of life. Spirit may be essential life, yet not essential being. As to the Christians' belief that this earth was the centre of the universe, the Bible does not teach Astronomy or Geometry, and every one believed it till science corrected the error. We think that we have proved that desiring a thing is no proof that we have it, but the contrary. The argument here is "that the soul has immortality because it desires it, or that it desires it because it has it not." Will my friend admit this?

MR. L. Yes.

MR. GRANT. Well, then, we prove that it has not got it. We can bring full proof from the Scriptures that man is dead between death and the resurrection, and that if there be no resurrection from the dead, "they that are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." Was it not the widow's son who lay stretched dead upon the bier, and was carried through the gate at Nain? Was it not Lazarus himself which the commanding voice of Christ called forth from his grave where he had lain four days? We are told that that which dies is not the real man, against which monstrous assertion we have the testimony of God, angels and inspired men. [Time.]

(To be continued.)

For the Crisis.

Prayer Authorized and Demanded in our Social and Public Meetings.

There are a few—very few, perhaps—who call in question the propriety of prayer in our meetings. The pretence is, that praying is too holy, or somehow too good, for "promiscuous assemblies;" as if they could judge the heart and determine when all present may be good enough and holy enough to pray—to ask something of God. The primary thought of this, when put into practice, involves the sin of self-sufficiency, and of judging others against the plainest precepts of the gospel to the contrary. It may involve Phariseeism and presumption also—for "the whole need not a physician, but they that are sick." It is written, "Ye receive not because ye ask not." It is the sin and shame of "the Laodiceans" that they have nothing for which to pray.

But my object is to state the truth of God, which these questioners of public prayer overlook or undervalue.

1st. Christ the great Teacher taught us how to pray,—"Our Father," etc.—to pray "always," (which must take in their long meetings.) And he himself gave the very example "to pray," against which they object.—Luke 11: 1–13; 18: 1–14; 3: 21; John 11: 33–46; John 12: 27–34. "The people heard—thought it thundered;" or that an angel spake to them in reply; and so some believed. This example is authority enough to pray so that "the people" may hear.

2d. The highest forms and examples of inspired praying were of old, in the presence of the (miscalled) "promiscuous assembly."—Num. 6: 22–27. The authorized blessing on Israel took the form of public prayer. "The Lord bless thee and keep thee," etc. This included all who so far acknowledged God as to constitute a part of the congregation of Israel; the mass of them perished. The apostolic benedictions are of somewhat the same character, embracing all those who composed the christian assemblies—however erring and apostate some proved to be. The prayer of Samuel was a public prayer, in the presence of the erring people.—1 Sam. 12: 18–19. Solomon, the type of Jesus, our coming King, prayed publicly.—1 Kings 8: 26; 2 Chron. 7: 1.

3d. Prayer in the church is but the promise desired and expressed. Prayer is commensurate with the promise—praying takes the same range that the promise does precisely, so far as the promise is apprehended by the faith of the prayerful. The prayer for the Kingdom is the expressed desire for the Kingdom, which "the Gospel of the Kingdom" inspires. "The promise of God," in all its parts, taken into the heart by faith, must incite prayer for its fulfillment. Amen.

4th. Thus Jesus prayed as well as "died for that nation" which God had purposed and promised to bless.—Matt. 5: 44: Lk. 23: 34. Stephen so prayed publicly in the Holy Ghost. Acts 7: 60. "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." Paul's heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is recorded in Rom. 10: 1. This prayer is but the believing response of the church to God's indwelling promise. Rom. 11: 26–30, Heb. 8: 8–12, Jer. 31, Ezek. 36.

5th. The apostle of the Gentiles was inspired to record the will of God as to prayer in this dispensation "for all men." "I exhort that supplications, prayers, intercessions and giving of thanks be made for all men."—1 Tim. 2: 1. Of course they may hear and ought to hear such prayers.

6th. The prayer of Jesus comprehends and crowns all praying.—John 17. It is for his apostles—for all believers and "the world." Should the prayer for "the Kingdom" fail to embrace this, (in his esteem) yet this praying of Jesus does name "the world"—"that the world may know," etc. Prayer is thus authorized—it is demanded.

Thus we find that Jew, Gentile, and the church of God—the kingdom and the world —are the subjects of inspired praying. Prayer is authorized and highly honored. The subjects of prayer should be allowed, like Israel, to hear the prayer for them. The objector indicates his ignorance of the subject, or his indisposition to pray, in his every objection. Anti-Baptist objecting to baptism, is like anti-prayerful objecting to prayer.

Closet prayer is pleaded as the substitute, or the essential, for the "all prayer" demanded of the christian. So they shut up prayer—"restrain prayer." Thus the plea that "charity begins at home," is often so applied as to confine it there; but both are too shallow to mislead any save those who are disposed to the sin of restraining prayer.

The Lord having taught us to pray, let us pray for men as well as preach to them the kingdom.

J. R. C.

The Night-Watch.

We are not of the world, though we are in the world. So "we are not of the night," though we are in the night. We are "children of the day;" we belong to the day, and the day belongs to us, as our true heritage, though it has not yet dawned. Hope rests there; and, though deferred, 'will not always tarry, nor when it comes will it shame our trust. "When the desire cometh it shall be a tree of life."

Night is around us still; but it is not merely one of weeping, it is also one of watching. No sorrow is to make us less watchful; nay, much more. So far from tribulation throwing us off our guard, it should lead to added vigilance. It prevents our falling asleep, as we should certainly do were all peaceful and prosperous. It makes the night more cold and bitter to us, thereby rendering us more weary of it, and more eager for the day. Were the night air mild, and the night sky clear, we should grow contented with it, and cease to watch for daybreak.

This is our night-watch. To this the Master has appointed us during his absence. "Watch ye, therefore; for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning: lest coming suddenly, he find you sleeping. And what I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch." (Mark 13: 35–37.) It is the prospect of morning and of the Master's return that keeps us watching, —especially in these last days, when watch after watch has come and gone, and he has not yet arrived. "His going forth is prepared as the morning," (Hos. 6: 3;) and that morning cannot now be distant.

The church must fulfill her night-watch. Whether long or short, perilous or easy, she must fulfill it. It is watching to which she is specially called; and sadly will she belie her profession, as well as disobey her Lord, if she watches not. She need not think to substitute other duties for this, as more needful, more important, or more in character. She dare not say, "I love, I believe, I pray, I praise, why should I also watch? will not these do instead of watching, or is not watching included in these?" Her Lord has bidden her watch, and no other duty, no other grace, can be a substitute or an excuse for this.

She is to believe; but that is not all; she is also to watch. She is to rejoice; but that is not all; she is also to watch. She is to love; but that is not all; she is also to watch. She is to wait; but that is not all; she is to watch. She is to long; but that is not all; she is also to watch. This is to be her special attitude, and nothing can compensate for it. By this she is to be known in all ages, as the watching one. By this, the world is to be made to feel the difference between itself and her. By this she is specially to show how truly she feels herself to be a stranger here.

Men ask her, Why stand ye gazing up into heaven? Her reply is, "I am watching." Men taunt her, and say, Why this unrestfulness? Her reply is, "I am watching." Men think it strange that she runs not with them to the same excess of riot. (1 Peter 4: 4.) She tells them, "I am watching." They ask her to come forth and join their gayety, to come forth and sing their songs, to come forth and taste their pleasures, that thus they may teach her to forget her sorrows. She refuses, saying, "I dare not, I am watching." The scoffer mocks her, and says, Where is the promise of his coming? She heeds not, but continues watching, and clasps her hope more firmly.

Sometimes, too, a feeble, doubting, or, it may be, inconsistent saint, asks in wonder, How are you so strong, so hardy, so able for the struggle, so successful in the battle? She answers, "I watch." Or he asks, How do you keep up a tone so elevated, and maintain a walk so close, so consistent, so unearthly? She answers, "I watch." Or he asks, How do you overcome sloth, and selfishness, and love of ease; or check fretfulness and anxiety, or gain the victory over a delaying spirit? She answers, "I watch." Or he asks, How do you make head against your fears, and challenge danger, and defy enemies, and keep under the flesh? She replies, "I watch." Or he asks, How do you wrestle with your griefs, and dry up your tears, and heal your wounds, nay, glory in tribulation? She answers, "I watch."

Oh, what this watching can do, to one who understands it aright! Faith alone will not do. Love alone will not do. Expectation alone will not do. Obedience alone will not do. There must be watching.

And this watching takes for granted the suddenness and uncertainty of the day of the Lord. It does not say, the Lord must come in my day; but it says, the Lord may come in my day, therefore I must be on the outlook. This may come is the secret of a watchful spirit. Without it we cannot watch. We may love, and hope, and wait; but we cannot watch. Our lamps are to be always trimmed. Why? Not merely because the Bridegroom is to come, but because we know not how soon he may come. Our loins are to be always girt up. Why? Not simply because we know that there is to be a coming; but because we know not when that coming is to be.

The Lord foresaw the spirit of unwatchfulness into which his people would be apt to fall, while he tarried, and he warns us against it. He would have us always to remember that there will be a danger of our becoming easy-minded, and entirely content with his absence instead of mourning because of it; content with his delay instead of joining in the primitive cry, "How long?" He saw that the world would throw us off our guard; that few would really keep awake and watch; that many would get tired with watching, and find out some excuse for not watching; [illegible] sit down and try to make themselves comfortable here without him. Hence he so

We Shall Meet no more to Sever.

There's a world of peace and pleasure,
Where the wicked cannot come;
When the storms of life are over,
It will be the christian's home.

CHORUS.

We shall meet no more to sever
When the night of sorrow's o'er;
Won't it be a happy meeting
When we meet on Canaan's shore?

If we meet with joy and sorrow
In this wilderness of tears,
We will hope for joy to-morrow—
Yes, we'll hope through changing years.

Though our life be dark and toilsome
As we journey here below,
We shall meet our blessed Savior
When life's journey we've passed through.

'Tis the christian's hope of heaven,
And forever being blest;
'Tis the hope of meeting Jesus,
That consoles him when opprest.

If we hope to enter heaven
When the Lord from glory comes,
We must have our lamps well burning,
Then he'll take us to his home.

The Grant and Loveland Discussion.

(FROM NOTES BY J. F. COTTON.)

MR. LOVELAND. I am happy that so many of my propositions have been admitted. As regards Jesus teaching the doctrine of the resurrection in opposition to the Sadducees, that I admit; but i twas in that form which taught immortality in a future life rather than a literal resurrection of the body. After the Sadducees explained their position, Jesus said to them, 'Have you not read in the book of Moses, how in the bush God spake to him and said I am the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob? God" said Christ, "is not the God of the dead but of the living; for all live unto him." Now these patriarchs had been dead many years, as to their bodies, yet lived in the spiritual world, which was denied by the Sadducees.

I did not say that the doctrine of immortality was revealed to man by intuition, but from his dual nature he comprehended that which is the basis of Jew and Christian faith. Perhaps it is owing to the neuter character of the spirit my brother speaks of, that in the resurrection there is neither marrying nor giving in marriage.

In correction I would say, that I consider man as the highest intelligence in this world. His progressive nature is recreative, and man is to himself a surer revelation than that which cometh through words. Desire must have a feeling before it is felt, and ideas must exist before words, else they were incomprehensible. Man's excellence is revealed to himself through his senses; his love for the beautiful, his aspirations after the future, reflect the innate immortality of his nature. All men look to a future life, eternal and glorious,—the exceptions are insanity. Now whence come these lofty desires and aspirations? Can mortals desire immortality? Never! as well might a clam desire to be a man, as man without immortality have any conceptions or desire for it. The stream never rises above its level. The tree yields its own fruit. The lion does not eat straw, nor the lamb revel in blood. Man desires immortality because he is immortal. He could not do otherwise. The desire never could originate in the human heart were not the germs of immortality there. But man includes in himself the capacity for endless life and joy.

My brother denies that man is progressive. I am astonished to hear such assertions coming from a man like him. It is universally conceded that philosophy and science have made gigantic strides in our day and generation. Why was the cross not raised in Eden, but that progress must fit in events to each other? Adam and [illegible] partake of the likeness of both. If God be immortal then man made in his image must be also immortal. He needs nothing more to make him so, no more carbon, etc., but attains it by the great laws of progress. Man must be immortal to answer the end of his creation. When he has conquered all matter he sits down and weeps over unsatisfied desire. He stretches out his wings, and at every mighty stroke mounts higher and higher, unwearied and aspiring. (Applause.) [Time.]

MR. GRANT. It has been remarked that Christ in speaking to the Sadducees said, "I am not the God of the dead but of the living" and therefore not only taught the resurrection of the dead but the immortality of the soul. Let us examine the subject a little more. In Luke 20: 27 and onward we read, "Then came unto him certain of the Sadducees which deny that there is any resurrection; and they asked him, saying, Master, Moses wrote unto us, If any man's brother die, having a wife, and he die without children, that his brother should take his wife, and raise up seed unto his brother. There were therefore seven brethren. . . . . Therefore at the resurrection whose wife is she, for seven had her to wife?" The reply of our Saviour showed that the happiness of the blessed did not in any wise depend upon the gratification of the flesh. "And Jesus answering said, the children of this world marry and are given in marriage, but they that shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage: neither can they die any more (meaning that they once died), for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection. Now that the dead are raised." My friend dwells upon the word are as if the resurrection had already taken place. The Syriac, reads, "Will arise." Coverdale, "Rise again." Wicklif, "And that dead men rise again." Tyndale, Cranmer and Geneva, "And that the dead shall rise again;" which makes it all plain and in harmony with Mark 12: 25, 26 and 27, where there is also reference made to the same account. "For when they shall arise from the dead, they neither marry nor are given in marriage: but are as the angels which are in heaven. And as touching the dead that they rise, have ye not read in the book of Moses how in the bush God spake unto him saying, I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob? He is not the God of the dead but of the living." What does our Savior prove by this? Is it not the literal resurrection of the dead? For Abraham, Isaac and Jacob being deceased they need no God while dead; but Christ brings them up, and then He is the God of the living. My friend says that Jesus did not teach the literal resurrection of the dead. I am surprised at this assertion. Hear the words of Christ in John 5: 28 and 29, "Marvel not at this: for the hour is coming, in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil to the resurrection of condemnation." Christ was himself an example, being the first fruits of them that slept, even the first born from the dead. And Paul says, "For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised: and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain."

My friend asks in ridicule if the spirit be in the neuter gender how shall it be with the woman in the resurrection, as if our Savior had not already answered it. The word rendered spirit does not always mean a being. Pneuma or ruakh, has four uses. 1st. "Spirit," used to represent a being. 2d. A state of mind or disposition, as "haughty of spirit." 3d. An influence proceeding from or forth; as the "Holy Spirit proceedeth from the Father." 4th. And the chief point of the argument, "breath of lives," or the atmosphere which we breathe; which if taken from our planet, animal and vegetable life would soon of necessity be extinct. This term is either misunderstood or misapplied.

Our friend has said that we in speaking of man as a being of progress said, that if he be progressive then is the Bible false. We made no such statement, but we said that if man were getting better the Bible was false. The book says that man shall wax worse and worse, and if the contrary be true then is the Bible false. The records of crime show to the thinking man the retrograde motion of this creature, for which my opponent claims so much perfection.

My friend has made a singular statement,—that man reveals himself to himself. For my part, I cannot understand it, but I [illegible]

our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel."

We shall now notice what our friend says about desire. He says that the very fact that a man desires immortality is a proof that he has got it. This is strange logic. Now we think that the more reasonable inference would be, from the fact that a man desired it he had not got it. (Loud applause.)

MR. CHAIRMAN. I hope we shall have no more such demonstrations.

MR. GRANT. The chairman is right. You have applauded my friend once, we will call it even now. We wish no cheering—it is unpleasant to all of us.

We were speaking of man's desire for immortality. We think a man were foolish to desire a thing of which he was already in possession. If I own this book I do not desire it; and if I desire to be rich it surely is no proof that I am so. When I am sick I desire health; but does that make me well? Webster defines the word thus, —"Desire is a wish to obtain some gratification or happiness which is supposed to be obtainable." Therefore so long as we desire a thing there is proof that we have not got it.

My friend again says that "man by the law of progression is susceptible of receiving immortality." He would seem somewhat confused in mind by making such strange remarks. He again says that man is in forward progress. Look back to our first parents in the garden of Eden, when no blurr or jar disturbed the beauty and harmony of creation. Is man better now, we ask, than when he stood there noble, erect in all the dignity of unsullied innocence? We admit that man is susceptible of receiving immortality; but deny that he therefore has it already; else why are we commanded to seek for glory, honor and immortality? Man may obtain all these "by a patient continuance in well doing." My friend says that if man be created in the image of God and is not immortal, then is God not immortal. We are not here to argue the immortality of God, but of man. By his argument man must also be omnipotent. He says that man needs nothing to make him immortal; yet we are told that it is the gift of God. He says that "man's faculties are adapted for more than this life." That is also our belief.

We think that we have met all our opponent's arguments and as it is not our place as the negative to assume any new ones, we cheerfully give the balance of time to our friend, and sit down.

[Divided time.]

MR. LOVELAND. We shall divide. My brother is a poor reporter, else I have a strange faculty of speaking differently from what I mean. When I said that immortality is in the structure of the soul evidenced by his desire for immortality, I did not say man had it because he desired it. It is this desire which distinguishes him above the animals, for their mode of suiting things to their natural convenience is superior to his. Besides man is susceptible of loving his fellows and contributing to their happiness. My brother asks, are we better than our first parents? Yes. All divines admit that sin has wrought out the most glorious results. If man had not fallen there would have been no Christ, no salvation, no praise from the redeemed.

"'Twas great to speak a world from naught.
'Twas greater to redeem."

God is more God, and his glories more resplendent from the fall. [Time]

MR. GRANT.—If we have immortality in us, why seek it. It is our privilege to put it on, for we read that "this mortal shall put on immortality." If we have immortality in us now, there is no faith in believing in a future life. We agree with our opponent that the present existence is insufficient to satisfy man. There is the life to come, in which we believe, because the Bible says so. (Applause.) My friend labors hard to prove that mankind is better now than before Adam fell; and yet methinks there are a great many evils prevalent in the world consequent on that sin; such as death, disease, hate, and a thousand others in their dreadful train. How the mercy of God was shown when he debarred the wretched creature from the tree which if eaten would have perpetuated sin and suffering to all eternity!

My friend attaches a singular value to sin in making it a glorifier of God. That the work of redemption was great who will question? but then, did it not need a great sacrifice? Would it not have been better could the Savior have been spared the tears and blood which he shed in his sorrowful pilgrimage and death of agony? Is man happier in his sweat and toil, the reward of his crime, than in the calm peace of conscious innocence? God says that he should [illegible]

SECOND EVENING.

Meeting called to order by J. V. Himes, Mr. Loveland opens the services by repeating the Lord's prayer. After which the chairman read the question. On the affirmative

MR. LOVELAND. In resuming the discussion this evening, I would recall to your mind that which must have been apparent last evening, namely, the marvellous ease with which my brother disposed of my arguments, seeming forgetful that I had advanced anything deserving the slightest notice. It would be quite refreshing were it not simply ridiculous. But I assure him that no attempt to overlook my arguments will answer his purpose. I promise him attention when he shall lead in the debate. I will not set aside any points which he makes, nor will I suffer him to do so now with the propositions which I advance.

My first position was that man had a dual nature, soul, or spirit and body. This he partly admits, but dodges the consequence by assuming that spirit is breath. Very good; it is the breath of God, for he breathed into man the breath of life, and man became a living SOUL. Besides, he has admitted too much by saying angels are organized beings. I recalled a passage where it says, "He maketh his angels spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire;" or as might be more properly said, "who maketh his spirits angels," as angels are not a signification of being, but of an office. Angels are natural men, who, after having laid aside their physical body, live in a spiritual existence. I affirm that there is not a passage in the Bible, from Genesis to Revelations, which intimates that they are a distinct order of beings from men. They have appeared as men, been called men, and eaten and drunk as we do.

My opponent declares that the spirit means breath. Is the Holy Spirit breath? Were the demons breath which were called unclean spirits? According to the Greeks, demons were the spirits of men. And in this instance the Old Testament and Socrates agreed. I would ask my friend, was the spirit that appeared to Job a spirit or real man? We read of "the spirit stirred within us," "a wounded spirit," etc. I think it was David said that "his soul followed after the Lord." Is not, then, this soul or spirit the thinking, acting being? Is the soul in man only the influence of God? In the dual nature of man the soul and spirit are used interchangeably to denote that thinking, unseen, personal something, which is distinct from the body. The trance affords evidence that the soul may be absent from the body; Paul says that he knew a man about fourteen years ago; whether in or out of the body he could not tell; God knoweth: who was taken up into paradise, and there showed unutterable things. There is something which can be caught up if Paul's testimony is reliable. The experience of the gifted preacher, Tennent of New Jersey, in the last century, while in a trance, was such as was not allowed to be uttered. (The speaker illustrated his position by the expression of several others while in the trance state, and also brought forth his proof to sustain his position that the world was not created in six days, and that geologists have repudiated the idea that it is not six thousand years old.)

My brother seeks, by a play of words, to turn my position. I affirm that man's desire for immortality shows that the germ is in himself. For instance, one has an ear for music—is there not music in that soul? If for mathematics, is his soul not mathematical? Man desires food. Would he desire food if he had not the digestive apparatus? Neither would man desire immortality if it were not within him. [Time.]

MR. GRANT. In reviewing my friend's remarks, we will notice the subject of "angels." He asserts that angels are the spirits of men. We have Bible proof to the contrary. In Heb. 1: 14 we read, "Are they not all ministering spirits, sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation?" Most certainly we believe in angel manifestations, simply because the Bible teaches it, and also that they have tangible bodies and organizations which can make use of food, as when Lot entertained those on their way to Sodom. We are also commanded (Heb. 13: 2)—"Be not forgetful to entertain strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares." Now we fearlessly make the assertion that these angels "are not the spirits of men, that no spirit ever could communicate with man. The thing is impossible—absurd. (Applause and hisses.) Man was made a little lower than the angels. What! lower than himself? That hardly looks sensible. But at the resurrection he shall be made "equal unto the angels." If angels are the departed spirits of [illegible] man died. Angels have always in their communication with mankind assumed the likeness of the species, and have often been mistaken for men. Daniel speaks of one that appeared unto him as the appearance of a man and strengthened him. They have power to do wondrous things, such as rolling away the stone from the door of the sepulchre; but not in a single instance have they exercised their miraculous strength through a "medium." Neither have we ever known a disembodied spirit sit down to eat bread or wash its feet.

Our opponent asks, are demons breath? No, sir. The word spirit has four significations in the Bible. First, a being, as God, who is a spirit. Second, an influence proceeding from a being, such as mesmerism or psychology, or the Holy Spirit coming from God. Nor was it a breath that passed before Job, but an angel—a "spirit." And I would here repeat the remark that this word should never be confounded with soul. My friend mentions the trance phenomena as a proof of the soul's immortality.

MR. LOVELAND. I did not bring it as a proof.

MR. GRANT. Then it should not have been mentioned. There are several instances where it is recorded that men have been taken up in vision, and, as in the case of Paul, where he was in doubt as to whether it was a vision or not. In Ezek. 8: 3.—"And he put forth the form of an hand and took me by a lock of mine head; and the spirit lifted me up between the earth and the heaven, and brought me in the vision of God to Jerusalem," etc. And in Ezek. 11: 24.—"Afterward the spirit took me up, and brought me in a vision by the spirit of God into Chaldea to them of the captivity. So the vision that I had seen went up from me." Now angels can do this, and we believe demons have also power to do it, but we are not prepared to admit that spirits could do it. Paul says, "I knew a man in Christ above fourteen years ago, (whether in the body I cannot tell, or whether out of the body I cannot tell: God knoweth;) such an one caught up to the third heaven." Now this happened before Paul died, consequently it does not prove the existence of a conscious, disembodied entity; and as the apostle was in doubt about it, it proves as much for me as for my friend. I am asked, Is life a being or an attribute?" We might question his definition of life. Spirit may be essential life, yet not essential being. As to the Christians' belief that this earth was the centre of the universe, the Bible does not teach Astronomy or Geometry, and every one believed it till science corrected the error. We think that we have proved that desiring a thing is no proof that we have it, but the contrary. The argument here is "that the soul has immortality because it desires it, or that it desires it because it has it not." Will my friend admit this?

MR. L. Yes.

MR. GRANT. Well, then, we prove that it has not got it. We can bring full proof from the Scriptures that man is dead between death and the resurrection, and that if there be no resurrection from the dead, "they that are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." Was it not the widow's son who lay stretched dead upon the bier, and was carried through the gate at Nain? Was it not Lazarus himself which the commanding voice of Christ called forth from his grave where he had lain four days? We are told that that which dies is not the real man, against which monstrous assertion we have the testimony of God, angels and inspired men. [Time.]

(To be continued.)

For the Crisis.

Prayer Authorized and Demanded in our Social and Public Meetings.

There are a few—very few, perhaps—who call in question the propriety of prayer in our meetings. The pretence is, that praying is too holy, or somehow too good, for "promiscuous assemblies;" as if they could judge the heart and determine when all present may be good enough and holy enough to pray—to ask something of God. The primary thought of this, when put into practice, involves the sin of self-sufficiency, and of judging others against the plainest precepts of the gospel to the contrary. It may involve Phariseeism and presumption also—for "the whole need not a physician, but they that are sick." It is written, "Ye receive not because ye ask not." It is the sin and shame of "the Laodiceans" that they have nothing for which to pray.

But my object is to state the truth of God, which these questioners of public prayer overlook or undervalue.

1st. Christ the great Teacher taught us [illegible] meetings.) And he himself gave the very example "to pray," against which they object.—Luke 11: 1–13; 18: 1–14; 3: 21; John 11: 33–46; John 12: 27–34. "The people heard—thought it thundered;" or that an angel spake to them in reply; and so some believed. This example is authority enough to pray so that "the people" may hear.

2d. The highest forms and examples of inspired praying were of old, in the presence of the (miscalled) "promiscuous assembly."—Num. 6: 22–27. The authorized blessing on Israel took the form of public prayer. "The Lord bless thee and keep thee," etc. This included all who so far acknowledged God as to constitute a part of the congregation of Israel; the mass of them perished. The apostolic benedictions are of somewhat the same character, embracing all those who composed the christian assemblies—however erring and apostate some proved to be. The prayer of Samuel was a public prayer, in the presence of the erring people.—1 Sam. 12: 18–19. Solomon, the type of Jesus, our coming King, prayed publicly.—1 Kings 8: 26; 2 Chron. 7: 1.

3d. Prayer in the church is but the promise desired and expressed. Prayer is commensurate with the promise—praying takes the same range that the promise does precisely, so far as the promise is apprehended by the faith of the prayerful. The prayer for the Kingdom is the expressed desire for the Kingdom, which "the Gospel of the Kingdom" inspires. "The promise of God," in all its parts, taken into the heart by faith, must incite prayer for its fulfillment. Amen.

4th. Thus Jesus prayed as well as "died for that nation" which God had purposed and promised to bless.—Matt. 5: 44: Lk. 23: 34. Stephen so prayed publicly in the Holy Ghost. Acts 7: 60. "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge." Paul's heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel is recorded in Rom. 10: 1. This prayer is but the believing response of the church to God's indwelling promise. Rom. 11: 26–30; Heb. 8: 8–12; Jer. 31; Ezek. 36.

5th. The apostle of the Gentiles was inspired to record the will of God as to prayer in this dispensation "for all men." "I exhort that supplications, prayers, intercessions and giving of thanks be made for all men."—1 Tim. 2: 1. Of course they may hear and ought to hear such prayers.

6th. The prayer of Jesus comprehends and crowns all praying.—John 17. It is for his apostles—for all believers and "the world." Should the prayer for "the Kingdom" fail to embrace this, (in his esteem) yet this praying of Jesus does name "the world"—"that the world may know," etc. Prayer is thus authorized—it is demanded.

Thus we find that Jew, Gentile, and the church of God—the kingdom and the world—are the subjects of inspired praying. Prayer is authorised and highly honored. The subjects of prayer should be allowed, like Israel, to hear the prayer for them. The objector indicates his ignorance of the subject, or his indisposition to pray, in his every objection. Anti-Baptist objecting to baptism, is like anti-prayerful objecting to prayer.

Closet prayer is pleaded as the substitute, or the essential, for the "all prayer" demanded of the christian. So they shut up prayer—"restrain prayer." Thus the plea that "charity begins at home," is often so applied as to confine it there; but both are too shallow to mislead any save those who are disposed to the sin of restraining prayer.

The Lord having taught us to pray, let us pray for men as well as preach to them the kingdom.

J. B. C.

The Night-Watch.

We are not of the world, though we are in the world. So "we are not of the night," though we are in the night. We are "children of the day;" we belong to the day, and the day belongs to us, as our true heritage, though it has not yet dawned. Hope rests there; and, though deferred, will not always tarry, nor when it comes will it shame our trust. "When the desire cometh it shall be a tree of life."

Night is around us still; but it is not merely one of weeping, it is also one of watching. No sorrow is to make us less watchful; nay, much more. So far from tribulation throwing us off our guard, it should lead to added vigilance. It prevents our falling asleep, as we should certainly do were all peaceful and prosperous. It makes the night more cold and bitter to us, thereby rendering us more weary of it, and more eager for the day. Were the night air mild, and the night sky clear, we should grow contented with [illegible]

Master has appointed us during his absence "Watch ye, therefore; for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning: lest coming suddenly, he find you sleeping. And what I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch." (Mark 13: 35–37.) It is the prospect of morning and of the Master's return that keeps us watching, —especially in these last days, when watch after watch has come and gone, and he has not yet arrived. "His going forth is prepared as the morning." (Hos. 6: 3;) and that morning cannot now be distant.

The church must fulfill her night-watch. Whether long or short, perilous or easy, she must fulfill it. It is watching to which she is specially called; and sadly will she belie her profession, as well as disobey her Lord, if she watches not. She need not think to substitute other duties for this, as more needful, more important, or more in character. She dare not say, "I love, I believe, I pray, I praise, why should I also watch? will not these do instead of watching, or is not watching included in these?" Her Lord has bidden her watch, and no other duty, no other grace, can be a substitute or an excuse for this.

She is to believe; but that is not all; she is also to watch. She is to rejoice; but that is not all; she is also to watch. She is to love; but that is not all; she is also to watch. She is to wait; but that is not all; she is to watch. She is to long; but that is not all; she is also to watch. This is to be her special attitude, and nothing can compensate for it. By this she is to be known in all ages, as the watching one. By this, the world is to be made to feel the difference between itself and her. By this she is specially to show how truly she feels herself to be a stranger here.

Men ask her, Why stand ye gazing up into heaven? Her reply is, "I am watching." Men taunt her, and say, Why this unrestfulness? Her reply is, "I am watching." Men think it strange that she runs not with them to the same excess of riot. (1 Peter 4: 4.) She tells them, "I am watching." They ask her to come forth and join their gayety, to come forth and sing their songs, to come forth and taste their pleasures, that thus they may teach her to forget her sorrows. She refuses, saying, "I dare not, I am watching." The scoffer mocks her, and says, Where is the promise of his coming? She heeds not, but continues watching, and clasps her hope more firmly.

Sometimes, too, a feeble, doubting, or, it may be, inconsistent saint, asks in wonder, How are you so strong, so hardy, so able for the struggle, so successful in the battle? She answers, "I watch." Or he asks, How do you keep up a tone so elevated, and maintain a walk so close, so consistent, so unearthly? She answers, "I watch." Or he asks, How do you overcome sloth, and selfishness, and love of ease; or check fretfulness and anxiety, or gain the victory over a delaying spirit? She answers, "I watch." Or he asks, How do you make head against your fears, and challenge danger, and defy enemies, and keep under the flesh? She replies, "I watch." Or he asks, How do you wrestle with your griefs, and dry up your tears, and heal your wounds, nay, glory in tribulation? She answers, "I watch."

Oh, what this watching can do, to one who understands it aright! Faith alone will not do. Love alone will not do. Expectation alone will not do. Obedience alone will not do. There must be watching.

And this watching takes for granted the suddenness and uncertainty of the day of the Lord. It does not say, the Lord must come in my day; but it says, the Lord may come in my day, therefore I must be on the outlook. This may come in the secret of a watchful spirit. Without it we cannot watch. We may love, and hope, and wait; but we cannot watch. Our lamps are to be always trimmed. Why? Not merely because the Bridegroom is to come, but because we know not how soon he may come. Our loins are to be always girt up. Why? Not simply because we know that there is to be a coming, but because we know not when that coming is to be.

The Lord foresaw the spirit of unwatchfulness into which his people would be apt to fall, while he tarried, and he warns us against it. He would have us always to remember that there will be a danger of our becoming easy-minded, and [illegible] often repeated the warning—WATCH! Hence he added, "lest, coming suddenly, he find you sleeping."

During this our night-watch, faith is to be ever vigorous and in motion. For it is the root of watchfulness. Without faith, one can hardly have the idea of what it is to watch. For all the objects towards which watchfulness turns, are connected with things unseen,—an unseen Savior, and an unseen kingdom.

We watch; for the night is far spent. Not only do we know of nought before us ere the Lord arrive; but we know of much behind us. Hours, years, ages have gone by. And if the whole night was to be brief, only "a little while," then surely very much of it must now be over. "The night is far spent," says the apostle; literally, it is "cut off," it is fore-shortened, that is, it is becoming shorter, it is drawing to a close. Behind us are lying centuries of tears and shadows; the greater part of the little while must be past; the day must be at hand. The nearness makes the thought of day doubly welcome. We bend towards it with warm longings; we strain our eyes to catch the first token of it; we rouse ourselves to vigilance, knowing that now is our salvation nearer than when we believed.

How it disappoints, how it damps, to be told, there are centuries more of this night-watching still to come! Could that be proved, it would sadly chill our hope. We might at once come down from our watch-tower and give up our expectations. To "look for and haste unto the coming of the day of God," would be no longer a duty. The last generation of the church, living at the close of the millennium, might get up into the watch-tower, but for us, watching would be a name, a mere attitude of form or show.

It has ever been Satan's object to interpose some object between the Church and her Lord's arrival; but never did he light upon a more specious, more successful device than that of making the interposed object a glorious and blessed one. To no other would the Church have listened. She would have shrunk and turned away from a thousand years' sorrow; but she is attracted and dazzled by the promise of a thousand years' rest and joy. Yet, is the interposition of any fixed interval (be it sad or joyous) lawful or scriptural? If the Lord's advent be thrust into the distance, it matters not what may be introduced to fill the interval. If the Hope of the church be hidden, it is of small moment whether it be by a shroud of sackcloth or by a veil of woven gold—Rev. H. Bonar.

For the Crisis.

Words.

A word is a single part of speech, yet what importance there is attached to some of the most simple of words when placed in relative positions. A word is the substance of an idea, and he whose ideas are the most perfect, uses the most perfect words to express those ideas, and thus we judge or determine the merit or demerit of all things in which ideas are set forth. So it is that one man is able to clothe his ideas in language which pleases, but does not instruct; another, probably unable to please to the gratification of the ear, is able to instruct through other of the senses; thus each man has his own way, and each man his own manner, and we are enabled to come to an understanding of after whose style one man writes or another talks. We are creatures of imitation, and the human mind is to-day what it was yesterday, what it was the day before, and ever has been since the violation of God's law given to the first pair; and I may venture the assertion, it will ever so remain until a new language, coming from a new creation, shall be instituted.

I have said that the human mind is the same to-day it ever was. This is so self-evident I need not perhaps have said it; but there is current a very foolish idea, viz: that the thoughts of men of to-day are so far superior to those of former times that it is not as I have stated. I am not going to contend against the fact that as far as human wisdom is concerned it has not progressed. Oh yes! the world and church are full of the wisdom of this world; in it is all their boast. That the rising generation may give to the world the product of thought, we send our sons where all the higher branches of education are taught; our daughters are taught all the accomplishments of the lady,—how they shall carry themselves going to church, how, when they are there; and out of this grows a terrible and growing evil; how so and so looked, whether the minister made a nice prayer, and also gave a nice sermon. The endless variety of thoughts and those taking the form of words suggested by this system of things, brings very forcibly to my mind the words of the apostle James,—"Let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak;" and as Paul also has said, "Let no man deceive you with vain words." Would that the advice of these two were [illegible] and well heeded, even in a moral point of view; how much sorrow would be avoided; how much valuable time saved. But how vastly more important is it that we heed them when we come to look into God's ideas as he has made them into words and then revealed through holy men of [illegible]

This train of thinking was provoked by hearing some of the foolish words used by some to whom I have been presenting the words of God in opposition to those of flesh and blood. One says, "I hope I have a hope," another, "I hope when I die I shall go to heaven." One thinks this, and another thinks something the opposite; both think they are the favored of heaven, and when they die their immortal souls will be wafted on the wings of angels to mansions beyond the bounds of time and space. This is part of the fleshly thinking to which we have been educated; the belief of our inherent immortality; of our dwelling eternally in undefined localities; of salvation independent of the truth being immaterial whether we obey the requisitions of the truth or not; and so I might go on and fill page after page in enumerating the endless contrariety of opinion which has grown out of the lax manner in which men have used the word of God.

David has said, "The entrance of thy word giveth light"; it giveth understanding to the simple. Now in order to know the mind of God we have first to understand his words, then obey in doing whatsoever he has commanded, whether it be uttered by prophets, apostles, or the Son of God. They all spoke the one thing they all told the truth; they all spoke as the Holy Spirit power gave them utterance, and there can be no difference of quality to be attached to their words.

Let us look for a moment over what is called Christendom—miscalled, certainly, and what do we see? Commence at Rome. There sits enthroned in ecclesiastical and political power, a Pope. What is he there for? As the vicegerent of Jesus Christ. Through him the oracles of God are to be explained. This is his office? Aye. Let us see; does he speak the words of God or his own words? Analyze them and see. Where in the writings of God's witnesses do we find a command to bow down to an image in the likeness of a man or woman? Where in the same writings do we read about "apostolic succession," or of "apostolic benedictions" being objects of prayer, or of the "praying for departed souls," with a host of other actions as foreign to the teachings of the "holy men of old" as the hieroglyphics of Egypt would be to a Sandwich Islander.

Let us go further—into the Greek church, English church, Scotch church, and in fact into any and all of these systems supported by the sword and bayonet, and what do we find? Babylon the great! The simple words of the Eternal Spirit are passed over; men in their greed for power have corrupted by their traditions the word of truth, and the whole thing is resolved, as by them fabricated, into a mass of inconsistencies from which, "Good Lord, deliver us!"

Seeing then that we are surrounded with such things, is it strange (when we know what the tendencies of flesh and blood are) to think as others do? I trow not; hence the great importance of our adhesion to words of inspiration lest we become part of the "great transgression," and speak our own words, which are lies and vanity, or, as Paul has expressed it, "Let God be true and every man a liar." This we may depend upon, if we attempt to tinker the words of the "living God" we shall be found among those who, to support a theory, have "added" to the words of God, which act places them in the relationship of "whoremongers," "adulterers," "fearful," "abominable" and all "liars." Query. Is it more sinful to tell a lie in the ordinary acceptation of that word, than to tell a religious lie, i. e., in the sense of not teaching what God has been (to use a common phrase,) to so much pains to tell us is the truth?

By taking heed to the words of God, a young man may cleanse his way. By taking heed thereto, the man of more matured years may keep himself unspotted from the world. By taking heed thereto the old man can say when about to leave the busy scenes of life's turmoil, "I have kept the faith," "I have finished my course," and for me a crown of life with eternal glory is awaiting; and he cries, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly!" Let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end; let the new heavens and new earth appear, be thou established in Zion the hill of thy holiness, and rule thou over the nations! For this glorious era the church of God in all ages have waited; the prophets and patriarchs have waited; martyrs have waited; apostles have waited, and Jesus, the Son of God endured the cross, despising the shame, that he might reign as king over all the earth in the time when Jerusalem shall blossom as the rose, which land is now in desert ruins, but which is to become "the glory of all lands," even a "quiet habitation." In praying "thy kingdom come," we pray for peace upon "Jerusalem, the city of the great King."

"Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, oh Lord, my strength, and my Redeemer." Let the time soon come when the people will be of pure language, and shall call upon the name of Jehovah our Righteousness in very truth, and shall serve him with one consent. Amen and amen.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MAY 23, 1860.

Notes of Travel.

Friday, May 11th, we left Bridgeport in the early train for New York, arriving about 9 o'clock, A. M. We spent some time in the conference at Cooper Institute, called by Bro. Himes, to arouse the people on the subject of the Lord's coming between the present time and 1868. He is well satisfied, as well as many others, that 1866–8 will wind up the present dispensation. It is evident that great interest is to be awakened again upon the subject of time. If this be the true time, we think it will be made so plain that the real children of the Lord will see and embrace it. We would not dare say Jesus will not come earlier than 1868. Let us all prepare to meet him, and keep ready. It is high time every christian was wide awake in the discharge of his duties. No time now to waste in idle pursuits. Let us that love Jesus be more watchful than ever, lest we be taken in the snares of the devil.

We called on Bro. S. H. Platt, No. 5 Beekman St., Room No. 14. He is the editor of the Household Magazine, an excellent religious monthly. We were pleased to learn that this periodical is having a wide circulation. Bro. Platt is a live christian,—indeed there are no others. He is awake to the signs of the times.

At 6 o'clock, P. M., we sailed from New York for Albany, in the "New World," a large and splendid steamer, and had a very pleasant time on the noble Hudson, passing between its verdant banks and romantic villas. The scenery on the Hudson is probably unsurpassed in picturesque beauty by any river in America.

After a pleasant night's sleep, we awoke and went forth again to witness the blooming cherry, peach and apple trees, on the river banks, and bathe in the soft air of a beautiful May morning. The lovely scenes around us were well calculated to make us think of the coming "new world" that will be something more than a steamer on the Hudson. When within some ten miles of Albany, the river gave out and let us drop upon a sand-bar. After it had rested about an hour, it became recruited and bore us safely into harbor.

We found Bro. Rufus Wendell, who is still somewhat fettered with business, but expects to be free in about three weeks to go and preach the word. We shall expect to hear of happy results from his labors in the Lord's vineyard.

In the middle of the afternoon, we found ourselves pleasantly situated at our happy home, Bro. Sherman's, in Castleton, Vt. This is a pleasant village, especially at this season. Nature has clothed herself in her most lovely dress, as if to please all her admirers. In the evening we met with the dear saints and had an excellent prayer meeting, that was truly refreshing to weary pilgrims. They are getting along well in the christian warfare.

Lord's day, May 13th. This was a very pleasant day—the most lovely of the spring cluster. We had another of our soul-cheering love-feasts in the morning. The Lord has accomplished some glorious things here during the last two weeks, notwithstanding the earnest opposing efforts of some professors of religion, who exhibit the real Pharisaical spirit. Four more were buried with Christ in baptism; making seventy-two in all. Others intend to obey the Lord in this ordinance next Lord's day. Pray for us.

Queries.

A brother wishes for light on Col. 1: 13, and Rev. 1: 9. The first reads: "Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son;" the second, "I, John, who also am your brother and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus."

These two portions of Scripture are sometimes introduced to show that the kingdom of God is already set up, notwithstanding the many plain passages to the contrary. The word "translated," in Col. 1: 13, is from methisteemi, which is defined by Greenfield as follows: "To move from one place to another, remove, transfer; met, to cause to pass from one mode of thinking to another, cause to change SIDES." The latter, we think, is the application in the text.

In, the word rendered into, when used, as in this verse, "to denote purpose or object," is properly translated FOR. We cite a few examples where it is thus rendered: "For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning."—Rom. 15: 4. "And Jesus said unto him, No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God."—Luke 9: 62. "The same came for a witness."—John 1: 7. "I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that shouldest be for salvation unto the ends of the earth."—Acts 13: 47. "Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught."—Luke 5: 4. "I am set for the defence of the gospel."—Phil. 1: 17. "He is profitable to me for the ministry."—2 Tim. 4: 11. "By faith, Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed."—Heb. 11: 8. "And the four angels were loosed, which were prepared for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year."—Rev. 9: 15. "The leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations."—Rev. 22: 2. All can see what nonsense it would make to translate is by the word into, in the examples just cited.

In Col. 13, Paul tells the Colossian brethren that by the help of our heavenly Father they have been delivered from the power of darkness, and have changed sides for the kingdom of his dear Son; i. e. for this "purpose or object," they have changed sides; to obtain the coming kingdom.

We pass to Rev. 1: 9. An old translation reads, "I, John, your fellow expectant of the future glorious kingdom of Jesus Christ." The Syriac reads: "In the affliction and suffering that are in Jesus the Messiah." John was a companion in affliction with those who expected the coming kingdom. We shall not have the kingdom before the King comes. Signs now indicate that the kingdom is NEAR.

A B. o. B. sends us the following:—

"What is your opinion of the prophecy found in Jer. 16; 14–16; particularly the 16th ver. Has this latter verse been fulfilled? if so, how? when and where? Who are the "fishers?" and where shall we find the hunters?"

The verses read as follows:

"Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be said, The Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt;

But, the Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the lands whither he had driven them: and I will bring them again into their land that I gave unto their fathers.

Behold, I will send for many fishers, saith the Lord, and they shall fish them; and after will I send for many hunters, and they shall hunt them from every mountain, and from every hill, and out of the holes of the rocks."

In order to understand these verses, we must read the context. The whole chapter is a denunciation against the children of Israel for their wickedness; hence the "fishers" and "hunters" are the agents employed to execute judgments upon them, instead of gathering them for blessings. Before the Lord sends out the "fishers" and "hunters" after them, he says,

"Ye have done worse than your fathers; for, behold, ye walk every one after the imagination of his evil heart, that they may not hearken unto me:

Therefore will I cast you out of this land into a land that ye know not, neither ye nor your fathers; and there shall ye serve other gods day and night; where I will not shew you favor." Verses 12–13. Mine eyes are upon all their ways; they are not hid from my face, neither is their iniquity hid from mine eyes. And first I will recompense their iniquity and their sin double; because they have defiled my land, they have filled mine inheritance with the carcasses of their detestable and abominable things."—Verses 17–18.

With such a terrible wall about this people, on all sides, it is certain that the "fishers" and "hunters" are not trying to catch them to do them kind deeds. "Fishers" and "hunters" usually take the life of their game. Their work is a destructive one. So in this case. These "hunters" and "fishers" were sent to hunt and fish out these wicked ones, who had forsaken the Lord. We think this scripture was long since fulfilled.

Sayings of Spirits and Spiritualists.

OR, "WHAT DOES MODERN SPIRITUALISM TEACH?"

In answer to this inquiry, a spirit says:

"The first, the greatest, and the grandest truth, coming through Modern Spiritualism, is the immortality of the soul."

Again: "It takes away the fear of death; and the believers in Modern Spiritualism or the communion of angels, may well cry out, 'Oh, death, where is thy sting? oh, grave, where is thy victory?' for thou, oh death, hast set me free from the ills of material life. The grave is the resting-place of the form I no more require." "Spiritualism . . . is the pearl of great price." "It cries out, come and drink of the waters of life freely. Come, casting off the fear of death, and robe yourself in a garment of immortality." "Within the bosom of every man and woman there is a judgment seat, a throne of God; and before that, and that alone, should men bow down and worship. By that alone they are to be guided."

Says Mrs. Spence: "We refuse to make use of the term God, because it has been falsely applied as significant of personality. We can only speak of the Divine principle. . . . As Christianity took the place of Judaism, so Spiritualism will take the place of Christianity; and Christianity, having had its day, will go and lie down in the tomb beside Judaism, and its name be recorded in the category among the things that were. . . . There are no people in the world so well prepared to receive Spiritualism as the Christian sects. But they dislike the source from whence it comes. . . . . . The phenomenal Spiritualism of this nineteenth century is only a continuation of the miracles of the day of Jesus, and the same hidden law governs both . . . Miracles are being performed under the new dispensation which far supersede those of Moses or of the apostles. . . . One result of Spiritualism will be, the spreading of reason—of reason so strong, and yet so refined and gentle, that we may not be afraid to trust every thing to its keeping."

Says Dr. Gardner: "The soul is a part of God, and cannot be destroyed nor disorganized."

Mr. Elmer says: "We have no proof of immortality aside from Spiritual communications. The theory of christianity on this subject is mere speculation."

Miss Lizzie Doten says: "A new heaven and a new earth are coming, so quietly and yet so surely, in which thoughts will become things. Men are particles of Deity, become individualized, and to live through all eternity."

Says a spirit: "The Holy Ghost is to us the holy law of life; whether spiritual or natural, human or divine, the holy law of life is to us the Holy Ghost, or holy spirit of all things." "God is a LAW."

Another spirit says: "Every thing in nature tells us that one portion of the book (Bible) is good for nothing."

CONVALESCENT.—We are happy to learn that Bro. Burnham is being somewhat eased of his sufferings, can get some natural sleep, and gradually gains in strength.

For the Crisis.

My New Book,

Which Bro. Hastings kindly recommended last week, is now printed, and will be bound in a day or two. Of its merits I cannot judge. I can only say I have tried to make it a convenient manual, or Vade mecum, of the Scriptural argument for Life in Christ only; and I think I have in it some authorities, facts, and other matters, which may be new and interesting. Some of these I have thrown out in the Crisis.

I write to say a word or two about the cost of the book, both in expense and price. It will consist of 168 pages, having required more time and money than I expected. It is a hundred pages larger than the corresponding chapter in "Debt and Grace." I shall nevertheless put it at the price announced; 50 cents bound, and 30 cents in paper covers. To those who buy to sell again, a discount will be made of 30 per cent. That is, 35 cts. bound, and 21 cts. in paper covers. The "trade price" may be made still lower when I have paid the debt it has incurred. But that will require a sale of about 1200 copies, to say nothing of my time. I shall not refuse cash orders, at least.

As to postage, I shall observe the general custom of booksellers, i. e., pre-pay, when the price of the book is sent. There is a reason for this custom. A publisher may even prefer deducting postage, to selling at the trade discount. And in this way there is a uniform retail price; and all books, by dint of Uncle Sam, are equally within the reach of all buyers. Still I have so much respect for other customs, that if any choose to add the postage, which will be about nine cents, I shall not quarrel with them. I shall simply convert such gifts to the supply of those who would read the book as a gift.

The book is published by J. P. Jewett & Co., 20 Washington Street, which is my P. O. address, and sold at the Crisis office.

"Give me Light—More Light."

BRO. GRANT:—Perhaps you and most of your readers are always rejoiced to hear of the escape of a prisoner from the dismal cells of "Doubting Castle." If so, I feel desirous of saying that I believe I now am "free." It is but a very short time since I was enabled to escape. I did not occupy a very dark dungeon. I had some light, and a little freedom. I belonged to the department called Universal Restorationists, the near relative (first cousin, I believe,) of universal salvation; indeed, some of the "Faculty" claim it as being the offspring of the latter; at all events it is a kind of universal salvation. Before I had fully left the "enchanted" ground, I heard Eld. Hastings preach—became acquainted with him, and he has helped me greatly in obtaining "light and liberty." He gave me some books and tracts which have been of great benefit. His generosity and love have endeared him to my heart.

I feel to rejoice in being brought by the "Father of lights" to see that whilst I thought I had the truth and was walking in the light, I was still in the "dark." I was led to question the Scriptural ground of my belief in universal restoration, while debating with a friend who was leaning toward the "destruction of the wicked." From a little superior knowledge of the Bible I was enabled to answer most of his objections. I am now striving to confirm him in the "faith."

I feel that I occupy an unenviable position at present, for until a few weeks ago I declared again and again that all men were destined to live forever, and that their condition in the next world depended upon the manner in which they lived in this; now I must tell these same people that in Christ only there is eternal life, and that there is no other eternal life but that of happiness, of honor, of glory, of peace. But with the assistance of the Spirit I will search for the truth, and having found it, I will declare it at any cost.

If I had some searching tracts on the end of the wicked, life only in Christ, etc., etc., I think I could do some good with them. O, may the pure, unadulterated word of God have its free course, and God will be glorified. Brethren, pray for us.

The Maine Mission Fund.

As I have a few more items to acknowledge in favor of the mission, I continue my notices. Since my last notice appeared, a brother J. gave $2. for the mission, while at Rome conference. This is not the first evidence that this brother loves the truth, and wishes others to learn it and be benefited by it. It is not all he will do either. While on my return home from B. a Bro. H. subscribed $20, for himself and the brethren in his place. This looks like a true interest in the cause we call the best of all causes. He is one who will do what he agrees, and is always ready to act in the cause.

While in S——, a brother in that town subscribed $5. for the mission, and will do more when it is in operation. He is ready to devote of his substance to spread the gospel of the coming kingdom and save men. A Bro. C. subscribed $4. for the mission, and will do as the Lord prospers him, for his heart is as deep as his pocket, and he not only talks, but acts for God and truth. The way now looks clear to raise means to sustain an evangelist. Several promise to aid when the man is in the field. This work is slow, but we believe it will begin and go forward.

Report of the R. I. Conference.

Wednesday, 2 o'clock, P. M. Conference met according to adjournment from River Point. The Moderator not being present, Bro. Geo. Champlin was chosen Moderator pro tem. The session was opened by singing and prayer. Bro. Huntington leading in prayer. The minutes of the last Conference were called for and read. There was no business to do, and the afternoon was spent in devotional exercises. Adjourned with appointments for preaching in the evening at 7 1-2 o'clock, and a business meeting at 9 o'clock A. M. next day.

Evening, 7 1-2 o'clock. Bro. Huntington preached from Jno. 1: 51. Very interesting and profitable discourse on "Christ as the only way," convincing the unconverted of the reasonableness of coming to God by him. After preaching, a season of exhortation, during which a sister interested in the 1860 time, gave an exhortation, saying, "We believe the Lord is coming in 1860." A brother said he wished the sister would say I and not "we," for he did not want to be identified as believing that time, till he was convinced of it and identified himself. There was quite a number of brethren spoke of their feeling in regard to time, expressing their adhesion, or dissent, until the time came to close, when the meeting was dissolved.

Thursday morn. 9 o'clock. Met as adjoured. Bro. Bellows in the chair. Prayer by Bro. Champlin. The Exeter church requested admission to the Conference; voted in, Jona. Spencer, Del. Foster church was received, Jona. S. Eldridge, Del. There was some conversation on the objection of some in the Plains church to joining the Conference. One brother was afraid that if the church joined the Conference, the Conference would interfere with their church matters and take away their freedom. Several members spoke of the action of the Conference at River Point, at the first meeting (Dec. 1858), in which they plainly denied that they had any desire to rule the churches, and only claimed the privilege to advise, the churches being free to accept or reject the advice as they saw fit. There came up a discussion in regard to the circumstance of disagreement on the time matter which came up last evening. Bro. Bishop did not wish to have his name called in a public assembly. He disapproved of public controversy among brethren, did not know what the churches in R. I. were made of, but it had killed those in N. H. He would have no part in discussion unless forced to, etc., etc. Bro. Dixon thought that when a man wrote a pamphlet and signed his name to it, he was a public character, and might expect to hear his name used. He did not think that discussion would do us any harm if we kept good-natured. He thought that if a person believed the Lord was coming in a year, they ought to speak of it, or discuss it. He wanted all to feel free in that house (the Chapel) for it was a free house, etc. There was considerable more said in regard to the matter, and it finally led to a proposition that Bro. Bishop be invited to preach before the Conference in the afternoon, on his time argument. Motion to this effect was made, seconded and passed. Then a proposition was made to discuss the question, "What is the best course of action to be taken on the matter of having and distributing free tracts?" and to take action recommending some course to the churches in the Conference. Before the matter could be settled time came to adjourn.

Thursday afternoon, 2 o'clock. Bro. Bishop preached from Rev. 17: 9. The discourse was intended to give reasons for the 1860 time. Afterwards there was considerable discussion, and some objections urged which Bro. Bishop tried to answer. He finally demanded as his right to preach again before the Conference dissolved.

Thursday evening. Preaching by Bro. Champlin from Luke 14: 24; a searching discourse, and the conference following was very lively.

Friday morn. 9 o'clock. Met again, Bro. Bellows presiding. Bro. Huntington led in prayer. The discussion on the tract business was taken up, and resulted in the following resolution:

Resolved, That we instruct the delegates of the churches to recommend to the churches which they represent, to form in each church a tract society with the proper officers; and that they take up penny collections for the purpose of scattering tracts free, and that, if they please, they should contribute tracts to the Conference, so that we may be able to carry out the design of article 7 of our Constitution.

If any churches thus favor us, they may send them to Bro. J. P. Babcock, treasurer, at River Point, R. I. The Conference had invitations from Central church and Foster church to hold the next meeting with them. After deliberation it was decided best to visit the Central church, and it was then voted to adjourn as a business meeting until the last Wednesday in June, 1860, to meet in Central village, Coventry, R. I. The remainder of the forenoon was spent in a love feast.

Friday afternoon. Bro. Bishop again preached on the time; afterwards there was some discussion on some points which he had presented. Although most present doubted that the time argument was true, yet all were edified by Bro. Bishop's closing practical remarks and exhortations, and the meeting was dismissed with good feelings on all hands, notwithstanding our disagreement.

Friday evening. Bro. Huntington preached on "Christ our worthiness." A good evangelical discourse; followed by a season of exhortation which was very interesting. This was the last meeting of the present Conference. JOSEPH D. BROWN, Clerk.

From Bro. R. Willard.

BRO. GRANT:—We are about to leave this field of labor, and do so with emotions of joy and regret. Of joy, through anticipation of better success in aiding in the good cause of our divine Master; and regret, having to leave the dear friends and brethren here; but we have so apprehended the hand of providence as to turn our faces thitherward, not knowing what may betide us, but trusting in God to make manifest his will through us, assuredly gathering, that under his divine approval we must of necessity prove a savor of good to some. Our talent is small, but if improved will gain a proportionable increase, and claim the applaudit of "well done, good and faithful servants," etc.

Through this medium, we wish to advertise our christian friends and correspondents of our removal, that we may hereafter be addressed through the proper post office.

We leave dear ones here who have labored with us in the Lord, and who with us have been permitted to see some fruit in return for our faithfulness. The stigma of the Advent cross is being less offensive among us, and it is ardently hoped that prevailing prejudices will give way to the genial influences of revealed truth. Hitherto we have endeavored to keep up the ordinances, and manifest to the world that our faith and works correspond, but notwithstanding we have to confess our leanness.

In view of our new home, we ardently anticipate the pleasure of making personal acquaintances among the dear ones East, whom we have only known through correspondence. The New England camp-meetings, of which we have so often heard and felt an interest, we hope to be permitted to participate in person.

Let me here say, that should any of our preaching brethren chance to come into the vicinity of Hammonton, that they will find a pilgrim's lodging with us and hearty welcome.

Warsaw, Ill., May 13th.

From Benjamin Spaulding.

BRO. GRANT:—We left Orington with hearts overflowing with gratitude for God's goodness to us, and for the hospitality of the brethren and sisters. The Lord bless and reward them an hundred fold. We traveled eleven miles to Newburgh, had to stop several times and bathe our feet to keep them from blistering; found families to comfort and instruct on the way. This is the way we get at the hearts of the people. Scattered tracts frequently the whole length of the way. Gave notice of a lecture for the evening as we went, and in the evening met a few. Had three evening lectures, and quite an interest was manifested.

Bro. Morrill lives here; he is an old tried friend of the cause; has done much and is still doing much for the cause. He helped us on our way after a godly sort. The Lord bless him and his kind companion and children.

Leaving Newburgh we came to Hermon. Here we found the brethren discouraged; a root of bitterness was also springing up troubling them, and we commenced our meetings under very discouraging circumstances; had but ten at first meeting, and twelve the second; the third had increased four-fold. The meeting on Sabbath day was well attended and rather interesting often repeated the warning—WATCH! Hence he added, "lest, coming suddenly, he find you sleeping."

During this our night-watch, faith is to be ever vigorous and in motion. For it is the root of watchfulness. Without faith, one can hardly have the idea of what it is to watch. For all the objects towards which watchfulness turns, are connected with things unseen,—an unseen Savior, and an unseen kingdom.

We watch; for the night is far spent. Not only do we know of nought before us ere the Lord arrive; but we know of much behind us. Hours, years, ages have gone by. And if the whole night was to be brief, only "a little while," then surely very much of it must now be over. "The night is far spent," says the apostle; literally, it is "cut off," it is fore-shortened, that is, it is becoming shorter, it is drawing to a close. Behind us are lying centuries of tears and shadows; the greater part of the little while must be past; the day must be at hand. The nearness makes the thought of day doubly welcome. We bend towards it with warm longings; we strain our eyes to catch the first token of it; we rouse ourselves to vigilance, knowing that now is our salvation nearer than when we believed.

How it disappoints, how it damps, to be told, there are centuries more of this night-watching still to come! Could that be proved, it would sadly chill our hope. We might at once come down from our watch-tower and give up our expectations. To "look for and haste unto the coming of the day of God," would be no longer a duty. The last generation of the church, living at the close of the millennium, might get up into the watch-tower, but for us, watching would be a name, a mere attitude of form or show.

It has ever been Satan's object to interpose some object between the Church and her Lord's arrival; but never did he light upon a more specious, more successful device than that of making the interposed object a glorious and blessed one. To no other would the Church have listened. She would have shrunk and turned away from a thousand years' sorrow; but she is attracted and dazzled by the promise of a thousand years' rest and joy. Yet, is the interposition of any fixed interval (be it sad or joyous) lawful or scriptural? If the Lord's advent be thrust into the distance, it matters not what may be introduced to fill the interval. If the Hope of the church be hidden, it is of small moment whether it be by a shroud of sackcloth or by a veil of woven gold—Rev. H. Bonar.

For the Crisis.

Words.

A word is a single part of speech, yet what importance there is attached to some of the most simple of words when placed in relative positions. A word is the substance of an idea, and he whose ideas are the most perfect, uses the most perfect words to express those ideas, and thus we judge or determine the merit or demerit of all things in which ideas are set forth. So it is that one man is able to clothe his ideas in language which pleases, but does not instruct; another, probably unable to please to the gratification of the ear, is able to instruct through other of the senses; thus each man has his own way, and each man his own manner. And we are enabled to come to an understanding of after whose style one man writes or another talks. We are creatures of imitation, and the human mind is to-day what it was yesterday, what it was the day before, and ever has been since the violation of God's law given to the first pair; and I may venture the assertion, it will ever so remain until a new language, coming from a new creation, shall be instituted.

I have said that the human mind is the same to-day it ever was. This is so self-evident I need not perhaps have said it; but there is current a very foolish idea, viz: that the thoughts of men of to-day are so far superior to those of former times that it is not as I have stated. I am not going to contend against the fact that as far as human wisdom is concerned it has not progressed. Oh yes! the world and church are full of the wisdom of this world; in it is all their boast. That the rising generation may give to the world the product of thought, we send our sons where all the higher branches of education are taught; our daughters are taught all the accomplishments of the lady,—how they shall carry themselves going to church, how, when they are there; and out of this grows a terrible and growing evil; how so and so looked, whether the minister made a nice prayer, and also gave a nice sermon. The endless variety of thoughts and those taking the form of words suggested by this system of things, brings very forcibly to my mind the words of the apostle James,—"Let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak;" and as Paul also has said, "Let no man deceive you with vain words." Would that the advice of these two were taken and well heeded, even in a moral point of view! how much sorrow would be avoided! how much valuable time saved. [illegible]

This train of thinking was provoked by hearing some of the foolish words used by some to whom I have been presenting the words of God in opposition to those of flesh and blood. One says, "I hope I have a hope," another, "I hope when I die I shall go to heaven." One thinks this, and another thinks something the opposite; both think they are the favored of heaven, and when they die their immortal souls will be wafted on the wings of angels to mansions beyond the bounds of time and space. This is part of the fleshly thinking to which we have been educated; the belief of our inherent immortality; of our dwelling eternally in undefined localities; of salvation independent of the truth being immaterial whether we obey the requisitions of the truth or not; and so I might go on and fill page after page in enumerating the endless contrariety of opinion which has grown out of the lax manner in which men have used the word of God.

David has said, "The entrance of thy word giveth light"; it giveth understanding to the simple. Now in order to know the mind of God we have first to understand his words, then obey in doing whatsoever he has commanded, whether it be uttered by prophets, apostles, or the Son of God. They all spoke the one thing they all told the truth; they all spoke as the Holy Spirit power gave them utterance, and there can be no difference of quality to be attached to their words.

Let us look for a moment over what is called Christendom—miscalled, certainly, and what do we see? Commence at Rome. There sits enthroned in ecclesiastical and political power, a Pope. What is he there for? As the vicegerent of Jesus Christ. Through him the oracles of God are to be explained. This is his office? Aye. Let us see; does he speak the words of God or his own words? Analyze them and see. Where in the writings of God's witnesses do we find a command to bow down to an image in the likeness of a man or woman? Where in the same writings do we read about "apostolic succession," or of "apostolic benedictions" being objects of prayer, or of the "praying for departed souls," with a host of other actions as foreign to the teachings of the "holy men of old" as the hieroglyphics of Egypt would be to a Sandwich Islander.

Let us go further—into the Greek church, English church, Scotch church, and in fact into any and all of these systems supported by the sword and bayonet, and what do we find? Babylon the great! The simple words of the Eternal Spirit are passed over; men in their greed for power have corrupted by their traditions the word of truth, and the whole thing is resolved, as by them fabricated, into a mass of inconsistencies from which, "Good Lord, deliver us!"

Seeing then that we are surrounded with such things, is it strange (when we know what the tendencies of flesh and blood are) to think as others do? I trow not; hence the great importance of our adhesion to words of inspiration lest we become part of the "great transgression," and speak our own words, which are lies and vanity, or, as Paul has expressed it, "Let God be true and every man a liar." This we may depend upon, if we attempt to tinker the words of the "living God" we shall be found among those who, to support a theory, have "added" to the words of God, which act places them in the relationship of "whoremongers," "adulterers," "fearful," "abominable" and all "liars." Query. Is it more sinful to tell a lie in the ordinary acceptation of that word, than to tell a religious lie, i. e., in the sense of not teaching what God has been (to use a common phrase,) to so much pains to tell us is the truth?

By taking heed to the words of God, a young man may cleanse his way. By taking heed thereto, the man of more matured years may keep himself unspotted from the world. By taking heed thereto the old man can say when about to leave the busy scenes of life's turmoil, "I have kept the faith," "I have finished my course," and for me a crown of life with eternal glory is awaiting; and he cries, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly!" Let the wickedness of the wicked come to an end; let the new heavens and new earth appear, be thou established in Zion the hill of thy holiness, and rule thou over the nations! For this glorious era the church of God in all ages have waited; the prophets and patriarchs have waited; martyrs have waited; apostles have waited, and Jesus, the Son of God endured the cross, despising the shame, that he might reign as king over all the earth in the time when Jerusalem shall blossom as the rose, which land is now in desert ruins, but which is to become "the glory of all lands," even a "quiet habitation." In praying "thy kingdom come," we pray for peace upon "Jerusalem, the city of the great King."

"Let the words of my mouth, and the meditation of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, oh Lord, my strength, and my Redeemer." Let the time soon come when the people will be of pure language, and shall call upon the name of Jehovah our Righteousness in very truth, and shall serve him with one consent. Amen and amen. G. W. YOUNG.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MAY 23, 1860.

Notes of Travel.

Friday, May 11th, we left Bridgeport in the early train for New York, arriving about 9 o'clock, A. M. We spent some time in the conference at Cooper Institute, called by Bro. Himes, to arouse the people on the subject of the Lord's coming between the present time and 1868. He is well satisfied, as well as many others, that 1866–8 will wind up the present dispensation. It is evident that great interest is to be awakened again upon the subject of time. If this be the true time, we think it will be made so plain that the real children of the Lord will see and embrace it. We would not dare say Jesus will not come earlier than 1868. Let us all prepare to meet him, and keep ready. It is high time every christian was wide awake in the discharge of his duties. No time now to waste in idle pursuits. Let us that love Jesus be more watchful than ever, lest we be taken in the snares of the devil.

We called on Bro. S. H. Platt, No. 5 Beekman St., Room No. 14. He is the editor of the Household Magazine, an excellent religious monthly. We were pleased to learn that this periodical is having a wide circulation. Bro. Platt is a live christian,—indeed there are no others. He is awake to the signs of the times.

At 6 o'clock, P. M., we sailed from New York for Albany, in the "New World," a large and splendid steamer, and had a very pleasant time on the noble Hudson, passing between its verdant banks and romantic villas. The scenery on the Hudson is probably unsurpassed in picturesque beauty by any river in America.

After a pleasant night's sleep, we awoke and went forth again to witness the blooming cherry, peach and apple trees, on the river banks, and bathe in the soft air of a beautiful May morning. The lovely scenes around us were well calculated to make us think of the coming "new world" that will be something more than a steamer on the Hudson. When within some ten miles of Albany, the river gave out and let us drop upon a sand-bar. After it had rested about an hour, it became recruited and bore us safely into harbor.

We found Bro. Rufus Wendell, who is still somewhat fettered with business, but expects to be free in about three weeks to go and preach the word. We shall expect to hear of happy results from his labors in the Lord's vineyard.

In the middle of the afternoon, we found ourselves pleasantly situated at our happy home, Bro. Sherman's, in Castleton, Vt. This is a pleasant village, especially at this season. Nature has clothed herself in her most lovely dress, as if to please all her admirers. In the evening we met with the dear saints and had an excellent prayer meeting, that was truly refreshing to weary pilgrims. They are getting along well in the christian warfare.

Lord's day, May 13th. This was a very pleasant day—the most lovely of the spring cluster. We had another of our soul-cheering love-feasts in the morning. The Lord has accomplished some glorious things here during the last two weeks, notwithstanding the earnest opposing efforts of some professors of religion, who exhibit the real Pharisaical spirit. Four more were buried with Christ in baptism; making seventy-two in all. Others intend to obey the Lord in this ordinance next Lord's day. Pray for us.

Queries.

A brother wishes for light on Col. 1: 13, and Rev. 1: 9. The first reads: "Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and hath translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son;" the second, "I, John, who also am your brother and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus."

These two portions of Scripture are sometimes introduced to show that the kingdom of God is already set up, notwithstanding the many plain passages to the contrary. The word "translated," in Col. 1: 13, is from methisteemi, which is defined by Greenfield as follows: "To move from one place to another, remove, transfer; met, to cause to pass from one mode of thinking to another, cause to change SIDES." The latter, we think, is the application in the text.

Is, the word rendered into, when used, as in this verse, "to denote purpose or object," is properly translated FOR. We cite a few examples where it is thus rendered: "For whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning."—Rom. 15: 4. "And Jesus said unto him, No man, having put his hand to the plough, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God,"—Luke 9: 62. "The same came for a witness."—John 1: 7. "I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that shouldest be for salvation unto the ends of the earth."—Acts 13: 47. "Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught."—Luke 5: 4. "I am set for the defence of the gospel."—Phil. 1: 17. "He is profitable to me for the ministry."—2 Tim. 4: 11. "By faith, Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed."—Heb. 11: 8. "And the four angels were loosed, which were prepared for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year."—Rev. 9: 15. "The leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations."—Rev. 22: 2. All can see what nonsense it would make to translate is by the word into, in the examples just cited.

In Col. 13, Paul tells the Colossian brethren that by the help of our heavenly Father they have been delivered from the power of darkness, and have changed sides for the kingdom of his dear Son; i. e. for this "purpose or object," they have changed sides; to obtain the coming kingdom.

We pass to Rev. 1: 9. An old translation reads, "I, John, your fellow expectant of the future glorious kingdom of Jesus Christ." The Syriac reads: "In the affliction and suffering that are in Jesus the Messiah." John was a companion in affliction with those who expected the coming kingdom. We shall not have the kingdom before the King comes. Signs now indicate that the kingdom is NEAR.

A B. o. B. sends us the following:—

"What is your opinion of the prophecy found in Jer. 16; 14–16; particularly the 16th ver. Has this latter verse been fulfilled? if so, how? when and where? Who are the "fishers?" and where shall we find the hunters?"

The verses read as follows:

"Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be said, The Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt;

But, the Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel from the land of the north, and from all the lands whither he had driven them: and I will bring them again into their land that I gave unto their fathers.

Behold, I will send for many fishers, saith the Lord, and they shall fish them; and after will I send for many hunters, and they shall hunt them from every mountain, and from every hill, and out of the holes of the rocks."

In order to understand these verses, we must read the context. The whole chapter is a denunciation against the children of Israel for their wickedness; hence the "fishers" and "hunters" are the agents employed to execute judgments upon them, instead of gathering them for blessings. Before the Lord sends out the "fishers" and "hunters" after them, he says,

"Ye have done worse than your fathers; for, behold, ye walk every one after the imagination of his evil heart, that they may not hearken unto me:

Therefore will I cast you out of this land into a land that ye know not, neither ye nor your fathers; and there shall ye serve other gods day and night; where I will not shew you favor." Verses 12–18. Mine eyes are upon all their ways; they are not hid from my face, neither is their iniquity hid from mine eyes. And first I will recompense their iniquity and their sin double; because they have defiled my land, they have filled mine inheritance with the carcasses of their detestable and abominable things."—Verses 17–18.

With such a terrible wall about this people, on all sides, it is certain that the "fishers" and "hunters" are not trying to catch them to do them kind deeds. "Fishers" and "hunters" usually take the life of their game. Their work is a destructive one. So in this case. These "hunters" and "fishers" were sent to hunt and fish out these wicked ones, who had forsaken the Lord. We think this scripture was long since fulfilled.

Sayings of Spirits and Spiritualists.

OR, "WHAT DOES MODERN SPIRITUALISM TEACH?"

In answer to this inquiry, a spirit says:

"The first, the greatest, and the grandest truth, coming through Modern Spiritualism, is the immortality of the soul."

Again: "It takes away the fear of death; and the believers in Modern Spiritualism or the communion of angels, may well cry out, 'Oh, death, where is thy sting? oh, grave, where is thy victory?' for thou, oh death, hast set me free from the ills of material life. The grave is the resting-place of the form I no more require." "Spiritualism . . . is the pearl of great price." "It cries out, come and drink of the waters of life freely. Come, casting off the fear of death, and robe yourself in a garment of immortality." "Within the bosom of every man and woman there is a judgment seat, a throne of God; and before that, and that alone, should men bow down and worship. By that alone they are to be guided."

Says Mrs. Spence: "We refuse to make use of the term God, because it has been falsely applied as significant of personality. We can only speak of the Divine principle. . . . As Christianity took the place of Judaism, so Spiritualism will take the place of Christianity; and Christianity, having had its day, will go and lie down in the tomb beside Judaism, and its name be recorded in the category among the things that were. . . . There are no people in the world so well prepared to receive Spiritualism as the Christian sects. But they dislike the source from whence it comes. . . . The phenomenal Spiritualism of this nineteenth century is only a continuation of the miracles of the day of Jesus, and the same hidden law governs both. . . . Miracles are being performed under the new dispensation which far supersede those of Moses or of the apostles. . . . One result of Spiritualism will be, the spreading of reason—of reason so strong, and yet so refined and gentle, that we may not be afraid to trust every thing to its keeping."

Says Dr. Gardner: "The soul is a part of God, and cannot be destroyed nor disorganized; [illegible]

Mr. Elmer says: "We have no proof of immortality aside from Spiritual communications. The theory of christianity on this subject is mere speculation."

Miss Lizzie Doten says: "A new heaven and a new earth are coming, so quietly and yet so surely, in which thoughts will become things. Men are particles of Deity, become individualized, and to live through all eternity."

Says a spirit: "The Holy Ghost is to us the holy law of life; whether spiritual or natural, human or divine, the holy law of life is to us the Holy Ghost, or holy spirit of all things." "God is a LAW."

Another spirit says: "Every thing in nature tells us that one portion of the book (Bible) is good for nothing."

CONVALESCENT.—We are happy to learn that Bro. Burnham is being somewhat eased of his sufferings, can get some natural sleep, and gradually gains in strength.

For the Crisis.

My New Book,

Which Bro. Hastings kindly recommended last week, is now printed, and will be bound in a day or two. Of its merits I cannot judge. I can only say I have tried to make it a convenient manual, or Vade mecum, of the Scriptural argument for Life in Christ only; and I think I have in it some authorities, facts, and other matters, which may be new and interesting. Some of these I have thrown out in the Crisis.

I write to say a word or two about the cost of the book, both in expense and price. It will consist of 168 pages, having required more time and money than I expected. It is a hundred pages larger than the corresponding chapter in "Debt and Grace." I shall nevertheless put it at the price announced; 50 cents bound, and 30 cents in paper covers. To those who buy to sell again, a discount will be made of 30 per cent. That is, 35 cts. bound, and 21 cts. in paper covers. The "trade price" may be made still lower when I have paid the debt it has incurred. But that will require a sale of about 1200 copies, to say nothing of my time. I shall not refuse cash orders, at least.

As to postage, I shall observe the general custom of booksellers, i. e., pre-pay, when the price of the book is sent. There is a reason for this custom. A publisher may even prefer deducting postage, to selling at the trade discount. And in this way there is a uniform retail price; and all books, by dint of Uncle Sam, are equally within the reach of all buyers. Still I have so much respect for other customs, that if any choose to add the postage, which will be about nine cents, I shall not quarrel with them. I shall simply convert such gifts to the supply of those who would read the book as a gift.

The book is published by J. P. Jewett & Co., 20 Washington Street, which is my P. O. address, and sold at the Crisis office.

For the Crisis.

"Give me Light—More Light."

BRO. GRANT:—Perhaps you and most of your readers are always rejoiced to hear of the escape of a prisoner from the dismal cells of "Doubting Castle." If so, I feel desirous of saying that I believe I now am "free." It is but a very short time since I was enabled to escape. I did not occupy a very dark dungeon. I had some light, and a little freedom. I belonged to the department called Universal Restorationists, the near relative (first cousin, I believe,) of universal salvation; indeed, some of the "Faculty" claim it as being the offspring of the latter; at all events it is a kind of universal salvation. Before I had fully left the "enchanted" ground, I heard Eld. Hastings preach—became acquainted with him, and he has helped me greatly in obtaining "light and liberty." He gave me some books and tracts which have been of great benefit. His generosity and love have endeared him to my heart.

I feel to rejoice in being brought by the "Father of lights" to see that whilst I thought I had the truth and was walking in the light, I was still in the "dark." I was led to question the Scriptural ground of my belief in universal restoration, while debating with a friend who was leaning toward the "destruction of the wicked." From a little superior knowledge of the Bible I was enabled to answer most of his objections. I am now striving to confirm him in the "faith."

I feel that I occupy an unenviable position at present, for until a few weeks ago I declared again and again that all men were destined to live forever, and that their condition in the next world depended upon the manner in which they lived in this; now I must tell these same people that in Christ only there is eternal life, and that there is no other eternal life but that of happiness, of honor, of glory, of peace. But with the assistance of the Spirit I will search for the truth, and having found it, I will declare it at any cost.

If I had some searching tracts on the end of the wicked, life only in Christ, etc., etc., I think I could do some good with them. O, may the pure, unadulterated word of God have its free course, and God will be glorified. Brethren, pray for us.

The Maine Mission Fund.

As I have a few more items to acknowledge in favor of the mission, I continue my notices. Since my last notice appeared, a brother J. gave $2. for the mission, while at Rome conference. This is not the first evidence that this brother loves the truth, and wishes others to learn it and be benefited by it. It is not all he will do either. While on my return home from B. a Bro. H. subscribed $20, for himself and the brethren in his place. This looks like a true interest in the cause we call the best of all causes. He is one who will do what he agrees, and is always ready to act in the cause.

While in S——, a brother in that town subscribed $5. for the mission, and will do more when it is in operation. He is ready to devote of his substance to spread the gospel of the coming kingdom and save men. A Bro. C. subscribed $4. for the mission, and will do as the Lord prospers him, for his heart is as deep as his pocket, and he not only talks, but acts for God and truth. The way now looks clear to raise means to sustain an evangelist. Several promise to aid when the man is in the field. This work is slow, but we believe it will begin and go forward.

For the Crisis.

Report of the R. I. Conference.

Wednesday, 2 o'clock, P. M. Conference met according to adjournment from River Point. The Moderator not being present, Bro. Geo. Champlin was chosen Moderator pro tem. The session was opened by singing and prayer. Bro. Huntington leading in prayer. The minutes of the last Conference were called for and read. There was no business to do, and the afternoon was spent in devotional exercises. Adjourned with appointments for preaching in the evening at 7 1-2 o'clock, and a business meeting at 9 o'clock A. M. next day.

Evening, 7 1-2 o'clock. Bro. Huntington preached from Jno. 1: 51. Very interesting and profitable discourse on "Christ as the only way," convincing the unconverted of the reasonableness of coming to God by him. After preaching, a season of exhortation, during which a sister interested in the 1860 time, gave an exhortation, saying, "We believe the Lord is coming in 1860." A brother said he wished the sister would say I and not "we," for he did not want to be identified as believing that time, till he was convinced of it and identified himself. There was quite a number of brethren spoke of their feeling in regard to time, expressing their adhesion, or dissent, until the time came to close, when the meeting was dissolved.

Thursday morn. 9 o'clock. Met as adjoured. Bro. Bellows in the chair. Prayer by Bro. Champlin. The Exeter church requested admission to the Conference; voted in, Jona. Spencer, Del. Foster church was received, Jona. S. Eldridge, Del. There was some conversation on the objection of some in the Plains church to joining the Conference. One brother was afraid that if the church joined the Conference, the Conference would interfere with their church matters and take away their freedom. Several members spoke of the action of the Conference at River Point, at the first meeting (Dec. 1858), in which they plainly denied that they had any desire to rule the churches, and only claimed the privilege to advise, the churches being free to accept or reject the advice as they saw fit. There came up a discussion in regard to the circumstance of disagreement on the time matter which came up last evening. Bro. Bishop did not wish to have his name called in a public assembly. He disapproved of public controversy among brethren, did not know what the churches in R. I. were made of, but it had killed those in N. H. He would have no part in discussion unless forced to, etc., etc. Bro. Dixon thought that when a man wrote a pamphlet and signed his name to it, he was a public character, and might expect to hear his name used. He did not think that discussion would do us any harm if we kept good-natured. He thought that if a person believed the Lord was coming in a year, they ought to speak of it, or discuss it. He wanted all to feel free in that house (the Chapel) for it was a free house, etc. There was considerable more said in regard to the matter, and it finally led to a proposition that Bro. Bishop be invited to preach before the Conference in the afternoon, on his time argument. Motion to this effect was made, seconded and passed. Then a proposition was made to discuss the question, "What is the best course of action to be taken on the matter of having and distributing free tracts?" and to take action recommending some course to the churches in the Conference. Before the matter could be settled time came to adjourn.

Thursday afternoon, 2 o'clock. Bro. Bishop preached from Rev. 17: 9. The discourse was intended to give reasons for the 1860 time. Afterwards there was considerable discussion, [illegible]

Thursday evening. Preaching by Bro. [illegible] Champlin from Luke 14: 24; a searching discourse, and the conference following was very lively.

Friday morn. 9 o'clock. Met again, Bro. Bellows presiding. Bro. Huntington led in prayer. The discussion on the tract business was taken up, and resulted in the following resolution:

Resolved, That we instruct the delegates of the churches to recommend to the churches which they represent, to form in each church a tract society with the proper officers; and that they take up penny collections for the purpose of scattering tracts free, and that, if they please, they should contribute tracts to the Conference, so that we may be able to carry out the design of article 7 of our Constitution.

If any churches thus favor us, they may send them to Bro. J. P. Babcock, treasurer, at River Point, R. I. The Conference had invitations from Central church and Foster church to hold the next meeting with them. After deliberation it was decided best to visit the Central church, and it was then voted to adjourn as a business meeting until the last Wednesday in June, 1860, to meet in Central village, Coventry, R. I. The remainder of the forenoon was spent in a love feast.

Friday afternoon. Bro. Bishop again preached on the time; afterwards there was some discussion on some points which he had presented. Although most present doubted that the time argument was true, yet all were edified by Bro. Bishop's closing practical remarks and exhortations, and the meeting was dismissed with good feelings on all hands, notwithstanding our disagreement.

Friday evening. Bro. Huntington preached on "Christ our worthiness." A good evangelical discourse; followed by a season of exhortation which was very interesting. This was the last meeting of the present Conference. JOSEPH D. BROWN, Clerk.

Providence, R. I.

Correspondence.

From Bro. R. Willard.

BRO. GRANT:—We are about to leave this field of labor, and do so with emotions of joy and regret. Of joy, through anticipation of better success in aiding in the good cause of our divine Master; and regret, having to leave the dear friends and brethren here; but we have so apprehended the hand of providence as to turn our faces thitherward, not knowing what may betide us, but trusting in God to make manifest his will through us, assuredly gathering, that under his divine approval we must of necessity prove a savor of good to some. Our talent is small, but if improved will gain a proportionable increase, and claim the applaudit of "well done, good and faithful servants," etc.

Through this medium, we wish to advertise our christian friends and correspondents of our removal, that we may hereafter be addressed through the proper post office.

We leave dear ones here who have labored with us in the Lord, and who with us have been permitted to see some fruit in return for our faithfulness. The stigma of the Advent cross is being less offensive among us, and it is ardently hoped that prevailing prejudices will give way to the genial influences of revealed truth. Hitherto we have endeavored to keep up the ordinances, and manifest to the world that our faith and works correspond, but notwithstanding we have to confess our leanness.

In view of our new home, we ardently anticipate the pleasure of making personal acquaintances among the dear ones East, whom we have only known through correspondence. The New England camp-meetings, of which we have so often heard and felt an interest, we hope to be permitted to participate in person.

Let me here say, that should any of our preaching brethren chance to come into the vicinity of Hammonton, that they will find a pilgrim's lodging with us and hearty welcome.

Warsaw, Ill., May 13th.

From Benjamin Spaulding.

BRO. GRANT:—We left Orington with hearts overflowing with gratitude for God's goodness to us, and for the hospitality of the brethren and sisters. The Lord bless and reward them an hundred fold. We traveled eleven miles to Newburgh, had to stop several times and bathe our feet to keep them from blistering; found families to comfort and instruct on the way. This is the way we get at the hearts of the people. Scattered tracts frequently the whole length of the way. Gave notice of a lecture for the evening as we went, and in the evening met a few. Had three evening lectures, and quite an interest was manifested.

Bro. Morrill lives here; he is an old tried friend of the cause; has done much and is still doing much for the cause. He helped us on our way after a godly sort. The Lord bless him and his kind companion and children.

Leaving Newburgh we came to Hermon. Here we found the brethren discouraged; a root of bitterness was also springing up [illegible]

Bro. Corliss preached. The brethren generally are sound in the faith, holding on to the promises; but they need stirring up.

I left Bro. Corliss at Hermon, and spent the Sabbath at Bangor, where we had a good season. The brethren at B. are doing well; union, harmony, brotherly love and kindness prevail here. The Lord increase this good spirit everywhere. I rejoice to see it is prevailing generally among the brethren wherever I have been.

To-morrow we start up the river for the Aroostook Country. I long to be in those back woods, among the log houses, to enjoy the hospitalities of those kind-hearted squatters. They are an open-hearted, candid, kind people. I have a true yoke-fellow in Bro. Corliss; our hearts burn within us as we walk by the way, singing, praying, shouting alternately, while the woods resound with God's praise, and our hearts are full of joy, though occasionally labor and anxiety take the place of joy for the time being.

Brethren and sisters, pray much for us; we have a great travail for souls; and then we are laden with a large amount of tracts, little messengers of truth, which we put into the hands of every family, and we need the wisdom which comes from above; we need strength of body, strength of limbs to walk, and of lungs to speak; strength of faith in the promises of God.

I feel like casting myself upon the Lord, like trusting in him, and leaning upon his strong arm. His past goodness and mercies lead me still to trust in him. Some tell me I shall leave my bones in Aroostook; well, it may be so, I do not fear; only let me die at my post in my Master's service, and I will praise God for the privilege.

Bangor, April 30.

From Bro. R. York.

Bro. Grant:—All who know anything about this place know that it is one of the hardest under the sun; and that little, if any, good can be done, with but little prospect of doing much to get people to receive the truth and obey it. A few of us started meetings here some two years ago. Soon some began to feel an interest, and their hearts became tender and submitted to God. This waked up the "Old Roarer" (1 Pet. 5: 8), and he set the "Cain family" to work against us. This we had anticipated, but when they were joined by many professing better things, and aided in their wicked course by those bearing the name of "Ministers of the gospel," we were really astonished. Every thing that could be said or done seemed to be hurled at us; but we kept on, laboring and praying, believing that the "Lord God of Elijah" would sustain and carry us through; and truly we have found him a present help in trouble.

We have had meetings nearly every Sunday since we started; and from two to four prayer meetings each week besides. Soon after we commenced our meetings all the evangelical (so called) denominations started a "Union prayer meeting." The invitation was given out for all christians to join in these meetings and labor for the salvation of souls. Knowing that all is not gold that shines, I thought I would test their liberality. I went to the Baptist preacher and asked him if the invitation was for us, as well as others. He said "he supposed it was not." This led me to give him some hints on true christian union which he did not care about hearing. The Congregational preacher was then consulted. His first answer was, "Yes," but he wanted time to think of it. He finally thought we were not invited. These two controlled the other ministers, and so we were "shut out."

But, thank God, we were not so much "penned up" but that we had access to the great "telegraphic line" that runs from earth to heaven. Our messages were important and importunate, and on they went, without cost, and immediate answers received. We have had frequent and free access to "this line," ever since, and God has blessed us abundantly. O praise his holy name. When we contrast our position and prospects now, with what they were two years ago; we can exclaim as one of old did, "What hath God wrought!" Within the time named above, I have had the blessed privilege of baptizing over fifty in the very place where about twenty years ago I was "planted in the likeness of Christ's death." O! my heart is rejoicing now as I think of the goodness of the Lord, and I feel much more like "shouting" than writing.

Many incidents have occurred in our short history that would be interesting to your readers, but I have not time nor "tact" for giving them. I will however relate one thing before I close. Under the labors of Bro. H. Munger, who spent a few days with us recently, a young man, belonging to one of the first families in the place, and just through with college studies, became interested in the truth and gave his heart to God. At our social meetings he took an active part. This created no small stir among his friends and associates, I assure you. To have him meet with us, study his Bible and embrace its truth, was more than they could bear; and if the earnest entreaties of kindred and friends, and their "hard arguments" against us in the shape of scoffs, sneers and ridicule can effect anything, it does seem as though he would be overcome; but as yet he remains good and firm in the truth. Our prayer is that he may go on and be of great service in the cause of the Lord.

We have had many happy seasons; but none more interesting and profitable than yesterday. Ten happy souls were "buried with Christ in baptism" and "arose to newness of life," among whom was my only daughter, not yet thirteen years of age. None but a parent can know the joy such a scene occasioned; and to have one so frail give all for Christ, and bear the cross so cheerfully was enough to make the hardest heart tender. Never have I witnessed a scene so affecting as this. May God use it for the good of some souls.

After baptism, at our meeting at the Hall, between forty and fifty mutually agreed to walk together as a church of God in this place, to be governed by the Bible alone. Some sixty or seventy then sat down to commemorate the sufferings, death, and resurrection of our blessed Jesus, rejoicing in hope of his speedy coming again to give us a seat at his table in his kingdom. It was a foretaste of the enjoyments of the better country.

The work of God is on the increase here. Several are seeking Jesus, and there seems to be a serious impression on many minds. Pray for us. Persecution rages strong against us, but amid it all we can sing—

Though in the fiery furnace, no harm have we received,
For our faith and love is stronger than when we first believed.

From Eld. F. Douglas.

Bro. Grant:—Feeling that many would like to hear through the "Crisis" how poor, afflicted Jennie is, I am sorry to have no better news, than to tell them, still sick, very sick. I never before witnessed so much suffering for so long a time from rheumatic causes. When she read Bro. Burnham's account of his illness in last week's "Crisis," she having experienced somewhat kindred feelings, expressed great sympathy for him, and would doubtless have written to him, if it had been in her power to do so. I know in sickness a cheering word from a true heart will be to the mind what balm is to the wound. Since my last communication to the "Crisis" I have experienced this attended with substantial aid.

When I look upon my companion's wasted form, I cannot repress the inquiry, why is it that mortals thus suffer? My mind then reverts to the Bible, the only sure explanator, and there I find that the fatal seed was sown in Eden's beautiful groves. From thence it has spread until every part of creation's surface bears evidence of its sad presence. The query arises, will it thus be forever? No! a restituted state for faithful, suffering ones is in reserve. It is this that cheers the hoping ones, though sorrow-laden they journey in mortality. The cloud of sin darkens earth's pathway and nought but the sunlight of God's word can warm chilled hopes or reanimate moral deadness. I find its light daily beneficial, and I expect to grow in moral stature as long as its rays penetrate my heart.

I am anxious about the future of earth's mortals sailing in philosophy's channel, or easily gliding upon all-sufficiency's stream. Their hopes will prove vapory, when He who is called "Faithful" shall come in his brightness. Sound the alarm! trumpeters of God. Lift the flag of gospel peace! and so wave it as to cause many to look and yield.

Duty calls upon me to spend my energies in the sick room, unless a substitute can be found. I look for a recuperating day, and to me one of deliverance; but it may not come until Christ brings it. Would be glad to have an interchange of christian feeling with any of the brethren. A word of exhortation from any will be kindly received. The prayers of all who pray in sincerity are requested.

Syracuse, May 18th.

From W. H. Hill.

Bro. Grant:—Eld. Barnes is at work here in Wis. proclaiming the gospel of the kingdom of God. I attended a week's meeting with him at Merrimack, in Sauk Co., the week before Christmas. Had a full house. The people are beginning to see the light of the gospel. The preachers cannot keep them from the truth much longer. We are gaining more and more, praise the Lord.

I feel that ere long our Lord and Master will come to set up his kingdom on the earth. Brothers and sisters, may we all have the hope that when Christ who is our life shall appear we also may appear with him in glory.

Caledonia, Wis.

☞"I have just said 'good night' to a young man who tells me he intended preaching the gospel. He now rejects it—the cause—that 'damnable heresy,' eternal torment. O brother, how fearful the position—misrepresenting the character of our heavenly Father. J. B."—Extract of a letter to H. L. H.

☞ As he cannot be wise who speaks much, so he cannot be known for a fool who says nothing. There are many wise fools in the world. There are many silly souls who, by holding their tongues, gain the credit and honor of being discreet men.

Obituary Notices.

Fell asleep in Christ, peacefully and sweetly, in Portsmouth, N. H., May 10th, of consumption, Sister Elizabeth Frances Sheafe, aged twenty-three years and six months.

Sister Frances about two years since became interested in the Bible doctrine, which she listened to at the Advent Chapel in Portsmouth; and being convinced of repentance toward God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, she yielded submission to Him who was precious to her in after life. While able, with pleasure she attended meeting, feasting joyfully upon the word of life. For the last two or three months she was unable to go out, but with humble resignation she submitted to her lot. Her short life here had been one of affliction and suffering, but having fled for refuge and laid hold on that good hope through grace, she was enabled not only to be patient, but cheerful amid all her suffering.

"The blessed hope" that if a man sleep he will awake, that if he die he will live again, was so comforting, so much like an anchor to her in her last hours, she wanted whoever might attend the funeral to give full expression to her faith. I attended funeral service in the chapel, May 12th, and spake words of consolation to the bereaved and church from the words of Paul; "If ye believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." I could but desire that all the afflicted might lay hold of the same good hope, with full assurance, and be saved in the same kingdom.

L. Boutell.

Died, in Oxford, April 14th, 1860, Reuben Rich, aged ninety-one years and three months.

He experienced religion in his thirty-third year—was a constant reader of the Bible, and received much satisfaction in claiming the promises therein contained. He died in full faith of meeting his Savior when he comes to bring forth his sleeping saints. His funeral sermon was preached by the writer from Rom. 5: 21. Four children and a large circle of friends are left to mourn.

"Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep!
From which none ever wake to weep;
A calm and undisturbed repose,
Unbroken by the dread of foes.

Asleep in Jesus! far from thee
Thy kindred and their graves may be;
But thine is still a blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep."

Joseph T. Jordan.

Died, in Kennebunk, Me., May 9th, of consumption, Sister Lucy Vaughn, aged forty-one.

She was converted more than twenty years ago, under the labors of Bro. E. Burnham, and by him baptized. In her last sickness she was joyful in hope, and although not triumphing over death, yet with full assurance of faith she could meet the last enemy, knowing that if conquered she should triumph over death and the grave at the coming of Jesus, when eternal life would be hers.

Bro. Wm. H. Mitchell attended the funeral, giving consolation to a large number who came together to show their respect for the dead.

L. Boutell.

Died, in Bridgewater, Mass., April 22d, 1860, Bro V. Russell, aged thirty-two years

The subject of this notice embraced Christ by living faith about two years ago, and soon after was baptized. He remained firm to the last, believing the Lord had led his people, and would in due time vindicate his cause and deliver his chosen. It is some two months since his health began to decline. The skill of the physician was tried, but all failed. Our brother has gone down to the grave expecting to sleep until Jesus comes, then to have a part in the first resurrection and gain immortality.

He leaves a wife. He attended the last conference in Boston, and partook of the sacrament for the first time.

Then sleep, dear Vincent, rest awhile,
The grave can't hold thee long;
Soon thou'lt awake with joyful smile,
To join the blood-washed throng.

GARIBALDI'S EXPEDITION TO SICILY.

The Paris Patrie of the 8th says:—"Gen. Garibaldi's departure for Sicily has been fully confirmed. He left during the night from the 5th to the 6th inst.

The Piedmontese Government had ordered all arms and ammunition which had been deposited at Quarto, near Genoa, to be seized, and had also given orders for the port of Genoa to be watched.

The expeditionary vessel, which had taken her papers for Malta, had put out to sea two days previously. Gen. Garibaldi joined the vessel immediately afterward, and she, instead of proceeding to Malta, went to Sicily. The Piedmontese government made every possible protest against this act of Gen. Garibaldi, which may involve the new Italian State in serious difficulties.

Gen. Garibaldi, being in connection with the committee in London undertaking the collection of English subscriptions for Sicily, had, in order to replace the arms which he feared would be seized by the Sardinian Government, received other arms, which had not passed through Piedmont.

The Opinion Nationale says: "The different vessels belonging to General Garibaldi's expedition will unite off the Island of Capraja, they will then direct their course toward Sicily."

Marseilles, Tuesday, May 8. No news has been received direct from Sicily, but letters from Naples to the 5th inst. state that the insurrection continued in the interior of the island.

Government had raised the state of siege at Palermo, but the court-martial was to sit permanently.

Business had not been resumed.

General Balzano had demanded a reinforcement of 5000 men, in consequence of Garibaldi's expedition.

FRANCE.

The London Herald's Paris correspondent says, with whom we are going to war next, is the general question in French military circles.

The camp at Chalons will consist of Cavalry, infantry and artillery complete, amounting to 40,000 men, under Marshal McMahon, and will in reality be the centre of an army of observation for forming along the Rhine frontier, the right wing being echeloned from Besancon to Strasburg, and the left wing from Ers Ne Luneville, the whole force amounting to 90,000 men, to be under the command in chief of the Emperor. The writer says the last year's events prove the source of his information to be reliable.

ENGLAND.

The Times says: "The gun factories are now at work night and day on a prodigious scale, forging Armstrong guns of all sizes, from 6 to 100 pounders. It is expected that 1200 guns, chiefly of the larger description, will be made this year. During the nine months since the factory has been in operation, forty-eight complete batteries of field artillery have been turned out and equipped for service, as well as two hundred 40-pounders in progress of manufacture, and which will be ready by the 1st of August next."

MAZZINI AND KING VICTOR EMMANUEL.

The following is the text of the proclamation addressed by Mazzini to the Sicilians.

Sicilians—When I, almost thirty years ago, inscribed on the banner of young Italy the word "Unity;" when I said that a popular insurrection might expel Austria from Lombardy, and overthrow the thrones of the despots of Florence, Rome and Naples, practical men laughed at me for thinking of impossible dreams, and declared as a Utopian scheme what is now the most ardent wish of every Italian—the political unity of that peninsula.

Facts have justified my assertions; the revolutions of 1848 have proved that not a throne, even when supported by foreign bayonets, could stand against the will of the people; the events which have taken place in Italy during the last twelve months clearly show that that unity will be no longer a dream, but a reality, when the people who still groan in chains give a strong and fresh impulse to events, and resume a vigorous initiative.

Sicilians! Be you the first; show that you have not degenerated since the days of your ancestors. Revolution is permanent in Sicily, says old Europe; let it be once more right, and let this time be the last. Let insurrection spread from one end to another of your island; fight like heroes, as you are in the habit of doing, and you will be victorious.

The government of the Bourbons having been broken down, we will proclaim that which Central Italy has already chosen; the only one that can be called Italian, that of the brave and gallant King. Let us, therefore, inscribe on our banners the word "annexation."

Before being a republican I was in favor of unity, for it appeared to me that a republic alone could lead to it. I was mistaken. Victor Emmanuel made Italy progress toward that object; he will lead her to it, if the people will assist him. I thus sacrifice old ideas to old principles; and with you, Sicilians, and with all the other people of the Italian peninsula, who will henceforth form only one nation—with you I cry, "Long live Victor Emmanuel, King of Italy!"

Sicilians, the hour has struck. In the name of Italy, to arms!

Joseph Mazzini.

Napoleon's Intentions.—"If," said the Emperor Napoleon, "I created so many princes and kings, it was that I might present to the world a specimen of my power. I should have acted very differently, but for the reverses I experienced at Moscow. To have kept the English in subjection for three or four years would have sufficiently answered my views. I would have given liberty to all nations, and directed their views to elevated and noble principles. Honor should have been the basis of all. But fate thwarted my plans: this was the greatest calamity that could have befallen the nations of Europe.

Advent Meeting in Boston

Anniversary Week, May 30th, and over the Sabbath. It will be held in the Advent Chapel, corner of Hudson and Kneeland Streets.

All interested in the speedy coming of Christ, and all who wish to hear on the subject, without distinction of party or sect, are cordially invited. The meeting will be devoted to religious exercises, aside from business or controversy. It is to be hoped we shall see the beginning of a glorious revival, that shall spread far and wide. Let us pray for this.

Joshua V. Himes.

Boston, May 19th, 1860.

Notice.

Reports being in circulation that I am preaching the doctrine known as the non-resurrection of the wicked, I wish to say I have not preached it, and do not believe it; for Paul says there shall be a resurrection of the just and unjust; and Christ says all shall hear his voice and come forth. All are resuscitated to the life they laid down, all are awakened out of their sleep; they that have the spirit of Christ will be changed with us who are alive and remain, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, and caught up to meet the Lord in the air, and the wicked left to perish.

Grove Meeting.

There will be a Grove Meeting, the Lord willing, at Pine Swamp, Sharon, Ct., about three miles from West Cornwall Depot, on the Housatonic R. R., to commence the 21st of June, and continue over Sunday. Provision will be made to accommodate brethren and sisters from abroad. Come in the name of the Lord. We pray the Lord to send such preaching brethren as are adapted to the wants of the people there.

In behalf of the brethren,
S. B. Munn.

Grove Meeting.

A Grove Meeting will be held (D. V.) on the farm of Bro. Lyman Orcutt, in Farnham, C. E., if the weather will allow at the time; if not, in Bro. C.'s barn near by; to commence June 9th, 1860, at 10 o'clock, A. M., and continue over the Sabbath ensuing. Three sermons each day. Ministerial help from abroad is invited and expected. Let the appointment be well circulated in the vicinity, and many prayers be offered to God for his blessing upon the effort.

O. P. Dow.

Notice.

There will be a quarterly conference at Viroqua, Badaxe Co., Wis., commencing June 15th, at 2 o'clock, P. M., to continue over the Lord's day following.

Also there will be a conference in Harding, Clayton Co., Iowa, commencing June 22d, at 2 o'clock, P. M., to continue over the Lord's day, as Bro. L. Lyons may arrange.

There will be a conference holden in Strawberry Point, Clayton Co., Iowa, commencing June 28th, at 2 o'clock, P. M., to continue over the Lord's day, as Bro. Deyo may arrange. Brother and Sister Mansfield will be present at the above conferences, with the writer, to preach the word. We hope there will be a general attendance at the above meetings. Friends will remember that Bro. and Sr. Mansfield cannot travel without means. A word to the wise is sufficient.

Y. Himes, Evangelist.

Expositor please copy.

Notice.

There will be a Tent Meeting in Warren Co., Ill., near Shanghai, where our conference was held last year, commencing Wednesday, May 30th, 1860, at 7 1-2 P. M., and continue over the Lord's day. Brother and Sister Mansfield are expected to be there to preach the word, and other preaching brethren. We give a general invitation to all preachers and people to come and enjoy the feast. Provision will be made for all who come. A wagon will be at the depot in Galesburg Wednesday and Thursday, to meet the noon trains from east and west, to take all that come in the cars to the meeting, free of charge.

Also a Tent Meeting at Walker's Neck, Brown Co., Ill., commencing Thursday evening, June 7th, at 7 1-2 o'clock, and continue over the Lord's day. Brother and Sister Mansfield are expected to attend. We hope there will be a general gathering of the saints at this meeting. Provision will be made for all that come.

Moses Chandler,
In behalf of the brethren.

Notice.

There will be a conference in North Hermon, (Maine), Bracket neighborhood, to commence Saturday, May 26th, at 10 1-2 o'clock, and continue over the Sabbath. Let there be a general turnout.

F. H. Berick.
James Hemenway.

New York Annual Conference.

The Western New York Annual Conference will be held at Seneca Falls, N. Y., commencing Friday evening, June 1st, at 7 1-2 o'clock, and continuing over the following Sunday. Elder S. H. Collings, R. V. Lyon, and many other preaching brethren are expected to be present, and we invite all, far and near,—east, west, north and south, to come. Cannot Bro. Grant attend? Let there be a general gathering of those that love the appearing of our King, for the time is at hand. Let as many as can, be on hand on Friday, so that the conference may be organized at the first meeting, and give time to do the business, there being considerable to be done, and only one day to do it in (Saturday.)

A. Guthrie, C. W. Low, C. F. Sweet, } Committee of Arrangements.

By C. F. Sweet, Evangelist.

Seneca Falls can be reached by railroad from any point of compass, and there are warm-hearted brethren and sisters there who will receive all who will come. Inquire for T. G. Newman. We say again, come!

Grove Meetings in Wisconsin.

A grove meeting will be held at Springville, Badaxe Co., Wis., commencing Friday, at 2 P. M., June 1st. Call on Bro. Wm. A. Morse for further information. Several ministers are expected.

Also one at Ironton, Sauk Co., Wis., commencing Friday, June 7th, at 2 P. M. A number of preachers will attend. Call on Eld. G. W. Turner for particulars.

Also one at Fairfield, Sauk Co., Wis., commencing Friday, June 14th, at 2 P. M. Inquire for Eld. G. W. Barnes.

Also one at West Point, Columbia Co., Wis., commencing at 2 P. M., Friday, June 21st. Call on Bro. Ira Polley.

Also one at Kingston, Sauk Co., Wis., commencing June 28th, at 2 P. M. Inquire for Bro. Parley Bush.

All these meetings will continue over the Lord's day. Several ministers will be present.

Wm. Sheldon.

Conference at Burlington, Mich.

Providence permitting, there will be a conference at Burlington, Calhoun Co., Mich., commencing Friday, June 1st, 1860, and continue over Lord's day following. Bro. and Sr. Seymour, Brn. E. Miller, Jr., and Cheesbrough will be present to preach the word. We also extend a cordial invitation to Bro. and Sr. Mansfield to meet with us and assist in preaching the word of life. We expect brethren and sisters from the surrounding country will meet with us. Come! Brn., lay by your work and meet us at Burlington. What we do must be done quickly, for the Lord is nigh at hand. For the church,

J. A. Sober.

A Proposition.

To any one who will send us a new subscriber for one year, we will forward, post paid, a copy of our late discussion with Eld. W. W. Clayton, on the conscious state of the spirit after death, and the destruction of the wicked. And for a new subscriber for six months, we will send a copy of the pamphlets on "Soul" and "Spirit." With a little effort, a thousand names may be added to our list. Let every reader try to aid in scattering the light and truth. Now is the time to work.

Twilight Musings.

I saw an old man wandering
Beside a placid stream,
His brow was marked with furrowed lines,
No ray of hope did gleam;
He murmured forth in accents wild,—
"How calm this river flows!
Oh would I were again a child,
That I might yet repose."

An angel stood beside him;
"Why wish you were a child?
A child without his innocence
Could not have pleasure's smile.
Go through all earth's dominion,
'Twill bring no peace to thee;
Wafted on golden pinions,
Its flight you'll upward see.

Go, view in yon proud palace,
Where luxury reclines,
And ask that dying victim
Has he a tranquil mind?
And in agony of soul,
Stretched on the bed of death,
With a wicked murmur on his lips,
He'll close his eyes in death.

See yonder in the festive throng
Young faces sweet and fair,
Wafting their gay and joyous song
Along the stilly air.
Go, gaze again upon that scene—
Its mirthfulness has fled,
For the happiest one among them
Is numbered with the dead.

Then go to yonder lowly cot,
And view the inmates there;
Seated beside the holy book
You'll see the man of prayer:
He has within a happy heart,
For blessings God bestows;
And in the book of God he's found
Peace, which like the river flows."

Dialogue.—No. 4.

"Riches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt."—Eccl. 5: 13.

Smith. Brother Brown, I have often been led to wonder how you and others who appear to go with us in sentiment on the scriptural doctrines of the sleep of the dead till the resurrection, the destruction of the wicked after the general judgment, and the personal reign of Christ over a renovated earth, still keep aloof from us, and so long refuse to throw in your lot with this little dispersed flock of Christ, who, in these last days, are striving earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. I cannot believe it is really because you think these subjects of little importance, because I have frequently heard you express a different sentiment. Neither can I think it is want of moral courage, or the fear of ridicule, or persecution from a time serving church or an ungodly world; for I know you despise such meanness in others, and have been always ready, in the face of all opposition, to vindicate what you know and feel to be right and true. Come, brother, you and I are old and tried friends, make a clean breast of it, and tell me if there is not some "Achan in the camp," some idol in the heart, some easily besetting sin, dear as a right hand, and precious as a right eye, that Christ requires you to sacrifice for his cause, and you beg to be excused?

Brown. Bro. Smith, I will not pretend to misunderstand your meaning. I appreciate your long tried friendship, and hope to profit by it; I feel also that it is easy to deceive ourselves with regard to the motives by which we are actuated; and I will not deny that there may be some reason for your suspicion, that my undecided conduct in regard to the doctrines you mention is in some measure attributable to the undue influence of covetousness in my heart. I will confess that you have touched a tender spot, and there is a feeling of repugnance from the use of the probe; yet I will not shrink from an examination of the subject in the light of God's word; and if I am in error, may be set right.

Smith. I am truly glad that you appreciate my motives, and that you take my suggestions in such a friendly part. It is good in this world of sham to have to deal with one honest man, especially if he is disposed to be honest with himself; a species of honesty not very common in these last days, when the love of self so effectually blinds us to our real condition as sinners in the sight of God. If, however, my slight touch has discovered a tender spot, does not this fact suggest a probe is necessary in order to effect a perfect cure?

Brown. Where there is sensation there is hope of a cure. But I have yet to be convinced that I have the disease in question to any dangerous degree. I have never refused to give what I consider my share towards the support of religion, and this has not been confined to my own denomination; but you know I have occasionally given a trifle to sustain the cause you advocate; and I do it cheerfully and freely. I do not consider it my duty to make any great sacrifice for the cause; I know your people are mostly poor, and are able to do but little, and I suppose if I came out and identified myself wholly with you, it would be expected I should do much more for the cause than I do at present. I have thought of this, and I will not say that this has not been one motive in keeping me where I am. I consider the gospel dispensation not so burthensome as that of old, where sacrifices were made daily on the Jewish altar. The religion of Christ is free without money, and without price; all that God requires of his people now is, to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with God. If I do all this, it is all God requires of me, and I shall not fail in the last great day of account.

Smith. Ah! brother, do not be too confident in this matter; God may require more of you than you are willing to give, and this may be the very test by which your sincerity is to be tried. To whom much is given of them is the more required. Have you inquired of the Lord—"What wilt thou have me to do?" And are you willing to do all that he requires? God has placed you where you are; he has given you the means of doing good for his cause; he has given you to see that his truth needs the aid that you have it in your power to give. You know that his people are poor, and unable to sustain the cause they love, and is it not probable, if not certain, that God has fixed your lot just in this place, to try and prove your love to him. Does he not in his providence say to you, as he did to Peter, "Simon, son of Jonas, lovest thou me?" Then feed my sheep. Will he need to repeat the question three times before you will understand its meaning? You remember the young man in the gospel. He had kept all the commandments from his youth; but now came the trial;—"One thing thou lackest; sell all thou hast, and give to the poor, and come and follow me." Here was his test, and it failed. He went away sorrowful; he would not give up all for Christ, and his great possessions proved his ruin. How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God. Do not imagine God requires less of his people now, than he did in ages past—he requires more—he has given us more light; and as the time is short, he says to us, "What thou doest, do quickly"—"the night is far spent, the day is at hand."

You say the gospel is free—to whom is it free? To the poor and needy. "Ho! every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money, come ye, buy wine and milk without money and without price." You do not make the right application of this passage; it is spoken to those who have "no money," not to the rich. If you and I are not willing to give up all we have for Christ and his cause, we cannot be his disciples. If we love our earthly treasures more than we love Christ, they will surely prove our ruin; the love of money is the root of all evil. Mammon is the golden idol men worship in these last days, and he has more votaries won amongst God's professing children than the image once set up on the plains of Dura.

I would, dear brother, have you prayerfully think over this subject—inquire of the Lord what he will have you to do, with a determination to do your whole duty, and he will give you grace and strength to do it. The very thing that your will and inclination most revolts at, may be the touchstone to try your faith and love to the Master; and your hope of eternal life may be brought to this same test, where so many stumble and fall to rise no more. May it not be so with you. Eternal life is worth all we can possibly sacrifice for it. Let us make a full, perfect, and constant surrender of all we have and all we are to Christ; and we may then be assured that he will remember us when he comes to call his ransomed people home and redeem them from the power of the enemy.

Brown. Brother Smith, I must confess you have set this subject in a new light, and very different from that which is commonly received. If your views are correct, and I do not doubt the Scriptures bear you out in them, it is no wonder that God places so few of his people in such a critical position as to give them much of this world's goods; and it appears to me that nothing less than power from on high can save such an one from shipwreck. I will look into this matter more carefully. It is enough to make us all tremble that we are to give an account of our stewardship, when God will render to every man according to his works.

Facts and a Question.

It is a fact that Jesus Christ told Nicodemus that he "came down from heaven"—John 3: 13.

It is a fact that, in one conversation with the Jews, he told them four times that he "came down from heaven."—John 6: 33, 38, 51, 58.

It is a fact that in the same conversation, he asked them, "What and if ye shall see the Son of man ascend where he was before?"—John 6: 62. Also, that he told his disciples, "I came forth from the Father, and am come into the world: again, I leave the world, and go to the Father;" to which they replied, "Lo, now speakest thou plainly and speakest no proverb."—John 16: 28.

It is a fact that he prayed for "the glory which he had with (the Father) before the world was."—John 17: 5.

It is a fact that when the Jews told him, "Thou art not yet fifty years old," that he said, "Verily, verily I say unto you, before Abraham was, I am."—John 8: 58.

It is a fact that the inspired apostle John declared that he was "in the beginning with God," and that "all things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made."—John 1: 2, 3.

It is a fact that the inspired apostle Paul confirms this by declaring that God, by him, made the worlds," Heb 1: 2, and "created all things by Jesus Christ;" Eph. 3: 9; proving him to be the "first born of every creature," by the fact, that "by him were all things created," etc.—Col. 1: 15, 16.

It is a fact that Jesus Christ himself declared that he was "the beginning of the creation of God.—Rev. 3: 14.

It is a fact that his harbinger, John the Baptist, announced him as he that "cometh form above," "cometh from heaven."—John 3: 31. See also Micah 5: 2.

It is a fact that the inspired apostle teaches us, that it was only "according to the flesh, or concerning the flesh," that he was made of the seed of David," and that in respect to his antecedent holy spirit, or "spirit of holiness" (the Greek term for which is never applied to the Holy Spirit of God) he was "the Son of God;" and so "declared—by the resurrection from the dead."—Rom 1: 3, 4; Rom. 9: 5. "The second man is the Lord from heaven."—1 Cor. 15: 47.

QUESTION.—If these divine testimonies do not prove that our blessed Lord actually existed before he was born of Mary, can any proposition whatever be proved by the testimonies of Jesus Christ and his apostles? Can we learn anything from the sacred Scriptures?

Cometh a Blessing Down.

Not to the man of dollars,
Not to the man of deeds;
Not to the man of cunning,
Not to the man of creeds;
Not to the one whose passion
Is for a world's renown;
Not in the form of fashion,
Cometh a blessing down.

Not unto land's expansion,
Not to the miser's chest,
Not to the princely mansion,
Not to the blazoned crest,
Not to the sordid worldling,
Not to the knavish clown,
Not to the haughty tyrant,
Cometh a blessing down.

Not to the folly blinded,
Not to the steeped in shame,
Not to the carnal minded,
Not to the unholy fame,
Not in neglect of duty,
Not in the monarch's crown,
Not at the smile of beauty,
Cometh a blessing down.

But to the one whose spirit
Yearns for the great and good;
Unto the one whose store-house
Yieldeth the hungry food;
Unto the one who labors,
Fearless of foe or frown;
Unto the kindly hearted,
Cometh a blessing down.

The Lady and the Robber.

A REMARKABLE STORY.

In a large, lonely house, situated in the south of England, there once lived a lady and her two maid servants. They were far away from all human habitations, but they seemed to have felt no fear, but to have dwelt there peacefully and happily. It was the lady's custom with her maids, to go round the house every evening, to see that all the windows and doors were properly secured. One night she had accompanied them as usual, and ascertained that all was safe. They left her in the passage close to her room, and then went to their own, which was quite at the other side of the house. As the lady opened the door, she distinctly saw a man under her bed. What could she do? Her servants were far away, and could not hear her if she screamed for help, and even if they had come to her assistance, these three weak women were no match for a desperate housebreaker. How, then, did she act? She trusted in God. Quietly she closed the door, and locked it on the inside, which she was always in the habit of doing. She then leisurely brushed her hair, and putting on her dressing gown, she took her Bible and sat down to read. She read aloud, and chose a chapter that had peculiar reference to God's watchfulness over us, and constant care of us by night and by day. When it was finished she knelt and prayed at great length, still uttering her words aloud, especially commending herself and servants to God's protection, and dwelling upon their utter helplessness, and dependence upon Him to preserve them from all dangers. At last she rose from her knees, put out her candle, and laid down in bed; but she did not sleep. After a few minutes had elapsed, she was conscious that the man was standing by her bedside. He begged of her not to be alarmed. "I came here to rob you, but after the words you have read, and the prayers you have uttered, no power on earth could induce me to hurt you, or to touch a thing in your house. But you must remain perfectly quiet and not attempt to interfere with me. I shall now give a signal to my companions, which they will understand, and then we will go away and you may sleep in peace, for I give you my solemn word no one shall harm you, and not the smallest thing belonging to you shall be disturbed." He then went to the window, opened it, and whistled softly. Returning to the lady's side, (who had not spoken or moved) he said, "Now I am going. Your prayer has been heard, and no disaster will befall you." He left the room, and soon all was quiet, and the lady fell asleep, still upheld by that calm and beautiful faith and trust. When the morning dawned, and she awoke, we may feel she poured out her thanksgivings and praises to Him who had "defended" her "under his wings" and "kept" her "safe under his feathers," so that she was not "afraid of any terror by night." The man was true to his word, and not a thing in the house had been taken. O! shall we not hope that his heart was changed from that day forth, and that he forsook his evil courses, and cried to that Savior "Who came to seek and to save that which is lost," and even on the cross did not reject the penitent thief. From this story let us learn to put our whole trust and confidence in God. This lady's courage was indeed wonderful; but "the Lord was her defense upon her right hand," and "with Him all things are possible."—London Packet.

ADDITIONAL.

We have received an extract from a letter fully corroborating the remarkable anecdote of "The Lady and the Robber" in our October number, and adding some facts that enhance the wonder and mercy of her escape. We quote the words of the letter: "In the first place the robber told told her that if she had given the slightest alarm or token of resistance, he had fully determined to murder her; so that it was God's good guidance that told her to follow the course she took." Then before he went away, he said "I never heard such words before; I must have the book you read out of," and carried off her Bible, willingly enough given, you may be sure. This happened many years ago, and only comparatively recently did the lady hear any more of him. She was attending a religious meeting in Yorkshire, where, after several noted clergy and others had spoken, a man arose, stating that he was employed as one of the book-hawkers of the Society, and told the story of the midnight adventure, as a testimony of the wonderful power of the word of God. He concluded with, "I was that man." The lady rose from her seat in the hall, and said, quietly, "It it all quite true; I was the lady," and sat down again.—London Packet.

The Men we Need.

Now is the time when every soldier of Jesus should be at his post, should be a full man, should have on the whole armor, should do valiant battle for the Lord. See how God has honored us,—what a breach he has given us to fill! Oh that we may feel our mission, and rise up and gird ourselves to honor it! Now the world wants men, full-grown christian men, not babes or dwarfs. The man who will dignify his position at this crisis, or even hereafter, must be worthy of it. If you would do anything, men of God; if you would not be ciphers in the glorious strife; if you would not die without issue,—prepare for the portentous day in which God has seen fit to give you existence. Behold your work! Behold your privilege! Do not come short, be animated to duty; and may God make of us such a people as, in his providence, the wants of the age and race require! See, what a work is before us! It hastens. We need to be up, in earnest. The universe is in earnest. Quick time, is the watch-word. What we do must be done quickly: a moment, and the opportunity rushes past us; a moment, and we are gone; a step, and the grave contains us. If we would make impression for God, for man, we must strike now. Oh that we could awake and see and feel the mighty verities thronging around us, and display for once that noble and glorious spirit which becomes sons and daughters of the Most High! Everything else will perish. Our fortunes, our heroic deeds, our distinctions,—these all sink down to be remembered no more; what we do here, and in this cause, will live forever; the waves we create here will roll on in widening circles through eternity.

A Happy Family.

A minister was directed to go to a certain place, where he would find an instructor. When he came to the place, he found a man in ordinary attire, to whom he wished a good morning. "I never had a bad morning," replied the man. "That is very singular. I wish you may always be so fortunate." "I was never unfortunate," said he. "I hope you will always be as happy," said the divine. "I am never unhappy," said the other. "I wish," said the divine, "that you would explain yourself a little." "That I will cheerfully do," said he. "I said that I never had a bad morning; for every morning, even if I am pinched with hunger, I praise God. If it rains, or snows, or hails; whether the weather be serene or tempestuous, I am still thankful to God; and therefore I never have a joyless morning. If I am miserable in outward circumstances, and despised, I still praise God. You wished that I might always be fortunate; but I cannot be unfortunate, because nothing befalls me but according to the will of God; and I believe that his will is always good, in whatever he does or permits to be done. You wished me always happy; but I cannot be unhappy, because my will is always resigned to the will of God."

Song.

I.

Through night to light! And though to mortal eyes
Creation's face a pall of horror wear,
Good cheer! good cheer! The gloom of midnight flies;
Then shall a sunrise follow, mild and fair.

II.

Through storm to calm! And though his thunder-car,
The rumbling tempest, drive through earth and sky,
Good cheer! good cheer! The elemental war
Tells that a blessed healing hour is nigh.

III.

Through cross to crown! And though thy spirit's life
Trials untold assail with giant strength,
Good cheer! good cheer! Soon ends the bitter strife,
And thou shalt reign in peace with Christ at length.

IV.

Through woe to joy! And though at morn thou weep,
And though the midnight finds thee weeping still,
Good cheer! good cheer! The Shepherd loves his sheep;
Resign thee to the watchful Father's will.

"THIS IS FOR YOUR HEALTH."—Paul.

For the Crisis.

Salt Eating.

"Salt is good." Yes, no doubt, but to find out when and where it is good, and what it is good for, is another question.

1. Is salt good for MEDICINE? So some say. It is used by Homeopathists in infinitesimal quantities, and I have no special reason to deny that it is sometimes of use in the healing of diseases. It may be used as an emetic;—a spoonful of salt in water, it is said, will vomit a child at once. If so, we are apt to suppose an emetic is rejected by the stomach because it is not fit to be retained in it. So the stomach turns itself wrong side out to empty an interloper out of doors. I do not believe much in emetics, and I think that a pint or quart of lukewarm water is about as good as anything, generally. Ground mustard is said to act promptly when administered to relieve the stomach of poisons, etc.

2. Is salt good for FOOD? Doubtful, I think. Whatever is food can be eaten as food. Who eats SALT alone? Now and then some little girl goes to the salt-box and gets a lump and eats it, but another will eat clay under a similar morbid craving; another chews up slate pencils; another eats charcoal, as one lady with ruined health informed me she had eaten, she presumed, bushels of it, and a friend of hers killed herself by it, and it tasted better than anything else in the world. No healthy person eats salt thus. A hungry man may go to the sugar-bowl, but does he ever go to the salt-cellar for food? Did you ever know a man sit down to a meal of SALT? You can have it in great variety. Rock salt, sea salt, Turk's Island salt, fine salt, coarse salt, dissolved salt, but who ever regarded it as an article of food?

How long can a man live on any one article of wholesome food? A long time,—perhaps months or years. How long can a man live on sugar? A good while. He would not starve on sugar soon, I assure you. How long can you live on SALT? Shut a man up in a salt mine, or in prison, with bags, and bins, and boxes of salt, and no other food, how long can he live on it? Would he eat a pound of it? I think not. To live, he must have chyle, and chyme, and blood,—food must be decomposed to furnish the elements of life. Can he get blood out of SALT? Can he get fibre, or tissue, or fat, out of salt? Could a mouse live on salt? Can a man? Who will try it a week and report to me?

Vegetables are food. Animals are food. Why? Because they have in them the things that we use in our bodies. Vegetables and animals have mineral substances in their structure, but they are organized. That is, the root takes up the mineral and makes it into plant, and we eat the plant and so get it. But minerals in an inorganic state, without passing through nature's laboratory,—are they fit for our sustenance?

Can that sustain life which has no element of life in it? That which sustains life is that which has, or has had, life in it. Bones, ground and sprinkled on soil, will do ten times as much good in manuring the soil as the elements of which bones are composed, which have never been organized. Nature has used them and fitted them for use. Plants and animals are food. Are minerals? Can a man breakfast on granite, iron ore and quartz; dine on marble, platinum and copper; sup on asbestos, soapstone and antimony? Of course not. Why? Because these things are neither animal or vegetable, and therefore none of them can sustain animal life in any form.

What is salt? Does it grow? Where? Is it a vegetable? No, nor an animal. What is it? Simply a mineral substance. What is its action on vegetable life? Pour a peck around a peach tree or other small tree and see. You might as well girdle it at once. How do you kill weeds? Scatter salt among them. How do you root out Canada thistles? Cut them and sow salt on them. How do you rid your land of any vegetable pest and nuisance? Pour brine, salt brine on them, that finishes them. What was the curse denounced against Israel if they were disobedient? The whole land was to be "brimstone, and SALT, and burning, that it is not sown, nor beareth, nor any grass groweth thereon, like the overthrow of Sodom," etc.—Deut. 29: 23. What did Abimelech do when he wished to utterly desolate Shechem. "He beat down the city and sowed it with SALT."—Judges 9: 45. What is the curse upon him who trusteth in man? "He shall inhabit the parched places in the wilderness, in a SALT land and not inhabited."—Jer. 17: 6. How was Moab to be under God's curse? As Sodom and Gomorrah, "even the breeding of nettles and salt-pits, and a perpetual desolation."—Zeph. 2: 9. So much for the effect of salt on vegetable life. Can that which blasts, withers and desolates vegetation, be good for man's health or for the sustenance of animal life?

Can salt be used in the human body? Can you work it into blood, or muscle, or bone, or cartilage, or tendon, or fat? Digestion changes the nature of every digestible substance. It is not when digested what it was when eaten. It is what it never was before. It undergoes chemical changes. All digested food leaves the body again somehow. It never leaves unaltered as it entered. Sugar is dissolved, used up and thrown off; bread, vegetables and meats, all these are worked up into blood, bones, muscles, excrementitious material, and finally all thrown off in waste and wear that other materials may come in. Sugar is not sweet when it is worked up and leaves the body. Its nature is changed. The capillaries suck all the good out of it and toss the bad away.

Can you digest salt? How? Boil it and what is it? Salt. Bake it? Salt. Stew it? Salt. Grind it? Salt. Dissolve it? Salt. Dry it? Salt. Eat it and what is it? Salt. Drink water by the pailfull to dissolve it and what have you? Salt and water. You sweat—what comes out? Salt. You weep—what are the tears? Salt as brine. How are the urinary secretions? Salt. How are the mucus secretions—catarrh of throat and head? Salt, salt, salt! So the salt you eat is not used up, is not worked up, but nature gets up a fire and calls for a bucket,—"Water water, water!" till at last every grain of it is washed out of you, as far as is possible. Is salt food? Will it satisfy the hungry? Will it strengthen the weak? Can you make a meal out of a pint or a peck of it? Can you live on it a month? Is it better to eat for food than sand, stone, iron, or any other mineral, only in the fact that it can be dissolved in water? Manifestly no one regards salt as FOOD in the proper sense of the term—something to live upon—to sustain animal nature.

3. Salt is used as a CONDIMENT. As a palate-tickler, as an appetite-sharpener. That's it. Job said, "Can that which is unsavory be eaten without salt? or is there any taste in the white of an egg?"—Job 6: 6. Salt was used to get unsavory things down with. But how large a portion of food is unsavory? The "white of an egg" is rather tasteless, yet I think a sprinkling of sugar much better than salt to season it. But admitting the use of salt occasionally, as a condiment, let us see how it is used.

It is not unsavory food merely that is salted, but almost every article of food that persons eat. Salt in bread, salt in butter, salt in fish, flesh and red herring; salt in cake, salt in puddings, salt in pies, salt in potatoes, salt in about every thing that is cooked, except an egg boiled with the shell on, and that is salted as soon as it is opened. "But food does not taste good without salt." Did you ever try it? Doubtful. Any taste may be acquired. I like my food without salt as well as you do yours with it. Taste is a matter of culture. "The "Indians," says Cotton Mather, "had not a grain of salt, I think, till we bestowed it on them." They ate their food, nevertheless, and were they not healthy? "But cattle and deer eat salt." Some do, and hosts do not. I have seen cows chew an old bone for hours, and run with it in their mouths to keep others from getting it. I do not know as it is good for food on that account, is it?

Let us trace the progress of salt in the human system as an article of food, or rather as a condiment. If you cut your hand, or have raw flesh from any cause, different things affect it differently. Drop water on it, or oil, or milk, and how it is soothed, but put on salt or brine,—"how it smarts!" Salt, then, is an irritant, most clearly. Now let us follow its course.

1. Taken into the mouth it touches the tongue. If there is a sore in the mouth, it smarts; if not, there is a pungent taste as it dissolves. Now if your tongue has been heated with peppers, spices, and condiments, and scalded three times a day with hot tea, coffee, etc., till the covering is tough as leather and the nervous sensations are blunted, salt tastes very good, though at once there is an increase of saliva, as if to flood the interloper out.

2. With this salivary flow it floats down the throat, and men fling a glass of water after it to keep it from stopping by the way. Still it sticks about the throat and glands, setting them on fire with fever and provoking the constant cry—"Water, water."

3. It gets into the stomach; a pungent, fiery stimulant, mixed all up with the food. The stomach feels it and smarts, and says, "What's all this? Fire! fire! water! water. We must flood this stuff out of the food. Man the pumps!" "Mother, I want some water!" says the little child. "Please give me a drink of water. I'm so dry." "I do not know what makes me so thirsty," says another child. Grandma pushes up her specs on her forehead and says, "Do not drink too much cold water. I guess you have been eating SALT FISH!" So water runs in cooling streams down the hissing throats of salt eaters. Persons who do not use salt never feel burning thirst, and never think of drinking water, as others do who eat salt.

4. By this time the food is digested, the salt dissolved, and so it is set afloat through the various channels to run its race. The chyle becomes chyme, and the chyme blood, and the salt becomes SALT as it always was. Then it is pumped all over the system; spirted along the delicate tissues, pushed through every fibre of the body and irritates the whole. The absorbents say, "We want fat, but not such heaps of salt; what can we do with that? We cannot make nerves or tissues of it. We cannot make fire of it to heat the rest up with. Out of the house, you useless mineral!" Well, the blood boils, the house gets heated,—more water is wanted and so everything is out of joint. The man is feverish, chafed and nervous.

5. The excretory organs say, "We'll put that salt out doors." So they go at it with might and main. Let us see how they work.

1. The skin. Here most of it goes. Ten thousand little canals lead to the surface laden with filth, decay and SALT. Out it comes—the fight waxes hot.—"Out! out! you interloper!" and out the salt comes all over the body. The man gets warm. He sweats. Touch your tongue to his skin—what's there? Salt; just the same substance you took in your mouth comes out on your skin, burning, pungent, fiery salt. Is salt and water good for a wash? Will it make a smooth skin? Does it do your salt rheum any good?

2. The nose. You have a coryza. Look in homeopathic books for the symptoms caused by "NATRUM MURIATICUM," i. e. SALT, and you find this is one. A thin stream of fire-water runs down your nose—an everlasting drizzle into the throat or through the back passages. What is it? Salt. Salt. "Can't be cured," the doctor says. Why not? It's the waste pipe to get salt out of you. You put it in at your mouth and, like the quails in the desert, it comes out at your nose.

3. The eyes. Delicate beyond all machinery is the eye. A grain of sand sets the whole out of order. The softest fluid in the world, perhaps, lubricates the eye. But there are glands there, they must work—they do. They fill, the surplus passes down through the nose a stream of salt. By and by you cry with grief or pain—what do you weep? Brine, salt brine, nothing else. You rub your eyes dry and they swell, grow red, inflamed and poisoned. You keep on weeping in some great sorrow, a stream of salt runs over the eyes, by and by you have sore eyes, weak eyes, poor eyes, and BLIND EYES. What did it?

6. The most of the salt yet remains. If you have a wound it exudes there, inflaming it most cruelly. But the great waste pipe is through the bowels and urinary organs. It passes off, no doubt, in the evacuations of the bowels. You have bowels irritated, and catharticised, and scourged by it, till they come to be dull and torpid, and then comes chronic constipation, that will stick by you, perhaps, till some one persuades you to let salt alone, and then you will probably get over it. Meanwhile you need not wonder at occasional diarrhoeas, piles, and sundry other grumblings on the part of nature, at the load of salt which you have eaten and which she is called to bear.

7. One other great channel is through the urinary organs. You eat salt. It is dissolved. It passes through the kidneys, burning and inflaming in its course. You have kidney complaint after you have poured a stream of hot, SALT BRINE through them for forty years. What caused it? You have urinary difficulties, and pains, and weaknesses, and inflammations, too numerous to mention, and so nature turns out what you take in, namely, SALT.

Before all this is done you call for more SALT. Nature cries for "water!" You bring salt with it. You fill yourself full of it. You eat a peck, a bushel, a barrel, a sack! You get pickled, salted down. You have a sore mouth, full of little ulcers. Your doctor tells you not to eat so much SALT. You take a voyage at sea. You live on salt beef boiled in salt water; it shines with salt like polished mahogany when you cut through it;—by and by you find yourself dying with humor and with SCURVY. What did it? SALT. What will cure it? Nothing but FRESH provisions. A raw potatoe,—anything that has no salt in it. You keep up the salt struggle. You have aches, pains, rheums, stiff joints, eruptions, and the whole machinery gets rough, stiff, and out of gear, and you die. What helped you to pay that last debt? Was it a bushel of salt?

So much for salt. I do not use it. I could tell a story of personal experience in the matter, but I forbear. I may write again. For the present this club will be enough to throw into the hornet's nest. Salt was anciently used in sacrifices, but I do not know as it was a general article of food. Let our "conversation be with grace, seasoned with salt," and as for my food I prefer it without it. I speak from experience of its effects.

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,
Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$2.00
For a single copy 6 months	1.00
For a single copy 3 months	.50
Five copies to one address for 6 months	4.50
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	8.00
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 50 cts., which will bring the papers within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

For the Crisis.

Adieu!

Placed on the brink of death I stand,
While I survey life's shortest span;
Before me swells the gaping tomb,
Now soon that house must be my home.

But brightest hopes my heart doth cheer,
My Savior's voice I soon shall hear;
Awake! ye saints, arise and bring
Your joyful harps—with angels sing.

Farewell to you, my parents dear,
Christ's kingdom now will soon appear;
Prepare to meet me in that place
Where we shall see our Savior's face.

O sisters dear, still watch and pray,
Jesus will guide you in the way,
Until we meet on Canaan's shore,
Where parting will be known no more.

Go, tell my young companions dear,
From Mary who must leave them here,
To meet me in that heavenly place,
Where we each other can embrace;

Where we again with smiles can meet,
In Jesus' arms, who will us greet;
Where cruel death, with pain severe,
Cannot break up our union dear.

There shall we see our Lord and King,
With saints and angels we will sing,
And join th' assembled heavenly throng
Of earth's redeemed with praise and song.

Spring.

"Awake; oh north wind; and come thou south; blow upon my garden, that the spices thereof may flow out."—Solomon's Song 4: 16.

The beauties and melodies of Spring have been again awakened, and delight the eye and ear and senses with their charms. "For, lo! the winter is past and gone, the flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing of birds is come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land;" under the influence of the "north wind," and the "south wind," the gardens and orchards, put forth their plants, buds, blossoms, and leaves; and the pleasant fruits begin to appear. There is no season of the year so welcome, so delightful, so inspiring to the senses, as that of the lovely spring.

"There seems a voice in every gale,
A tongue in every opening flower,
Which tells, oh Lord, the wondrous tale
Of thy indulgence, love, and power."

Other seasons have their charms, pleasures and mysteries, but none are so pleasing, and so interest us as the spring. The Winter, with its cold, its snows and crystal ice covering the earth and waters with their white and crystalline mantle; the merry sleigh-bells mingling with the happy and cheerful voices of youth in the enjoyment of winter's innocent sports; the pleasant home-circles drawn in closer union around the bright and cheerful fire (in chimney or grate), and social friendship cultivated in its long and inviting evening hours,—all is pleasant. The Summer, with its sunny days, richly adorned fields of young grasses and grains,—with fertile mountains, hills and dales,—and beautiful orchards, gardens, and vineyards, covered with green foliage, flowers, and growing fruits—present an enchanting scenery inviting us for a season away from our homes to roam abroad. The Autumn, with its golden fruits and golden harvest, rewarding the toil of the husbandman,—the merry voices of the laborers gathering and putting in store the fruits of their labors,—the variegated scenery of forest and landscape, touched by burning suns and early frosts,—the seared and falling leaves, and the pale and sombre hues of nature, betokening that the summer of nature is ended, and cold, chill frosts of winter are nigh,—is agreeable, pleasing, and solemn; and leads us to reflections of profit concerning the close of the summer of life—the winter of death—and the coming spring-time again of a better life. All these seasons have their interest and peculiar instruction.

But Spring above all! It is the resurrection of nature by nature's God! When all animate nature bursts into new life; and when the cold, chilling storms and winding sheet of winter, are removed, and nature anew comes forth to life from her tomb, under the changing breezes of the [illegible] and the south, which blow upon and fan her into new being. The whole landscape is quickened into joyful life, under a returning sun, congenial showers and balmy breezes;—beautiful birds of every hue and enchanting note, visit us, and sing their merry carols in the branches;—the silvery stream, the meandering brook, the distant waterfall, the sparkling fountains—the heart and blood-vessels of nature, send forth their waters everywhere to fertilize the earth; and nature, under the rainbow of promise,—"While the earth remaineth, seed time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night, shall not cease," revives again in the beauty and vigor of youth.

I. The seasons have their moral lessons. Let us learn some of them.

1. They teach God's goodness to man.

"The earth hath He given to the children of men," therefore, whatever care He takes of it, and blessing He bestows upon it, is for man's benefit. It is His mercy that crowns the revolving year, and brings about its varied seasons. He has "made everything beautiful in his time." His goodness begins the year, fills its passing months and daily and weekly hours—and brings its timely and faithful close. Ten thousand, thousand are His mercies to earth and all its animated existences, annually and daily conferred, of infinite variety, and the best adapted to our state and nature. Recount His mercies for a single day or hour, and how surprising! For a season, and how wonderful! For a year, and they are manifold and of exceeding magnitude! For centuries, and we are lost in their infinitude, and the contemplation of their continued and unremitting bestowal! What then are they for ages past, and ages yet to come! The same sun shines upon us that did upon Adam and the patriarchs. The same daily mercies, and blessings of the seasons are enjoyed by us as in the generations of the past. And He who has thus been mindful of our race will still be mindful of us, even in our sinful and rebel state, unto the end of the world; and greater mercies has He in store for all them who have served Him during their earthly existence; even a new existence in a renewed world! Amen, so let it be.

2. They teach His wisdom.

What must be the wisdom of the Creator, who has not only made all worlds, garnished them with beauty, and suspended them in their orbits, but established laws so perfect as to revolve and control them in infinite and immeasurable space—as they fly at the most rapid rates, traveling millions of miles in their circuit annually! What wisdom to create them from nothing, with all their dependent existences great and small; and make them to revolve in their several orbits, and upon their axes,—to give them their varied seasons, with day and night in regular succession; and all in their utmost harmony! How unsearchable such wisdom! His ways are past finding out! "Canst thou by searching find out God? Canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?"

3. They teach His power.

If by the fiat of His word a universe came into being, and the laws projected and established which so perfectly govern them; and by His Almighty power all worlds, and all system of worlds, and all intelligences and existences peopling them are preserved in being; what must be his power? Who can calculate or measure it? We speak of a motive power of 100 or 1,000 tons, or 100,000 tons, capable of moving that weight. But think of this globe with all its vast mountains, hills, valleys and seas; its immense weight, suspended on nothing; and projected and moving in infinite space at the rate of 60,000 miles an hour. And not only this, one of the smallest of globes, but a whole universe of worlds of inconceivable magnitude thus suspended and moved, and all in perfect harmony and regularity, without the slightest variation ages on ages!

"His power who can understand?" Who shall limit it? Compare it with the strength of man or angels, and what is it? "Hast thou an arm like God? or canst thou thunder with a voice like him?" There is no comparison! His power is infinite,—illimitable! As he declares, "I am the Almighty God." This Almighty Jehovah brings the changing seasons by sending the earth in its regular annual rounds in its circuit round the sun, and by the inclination of its axis. This Almighty Jehovah too, calls 80,000,000 of worlds a thousand times larger than our earth, and within the visible firmament by telescope, all by their names, and governs them. And we have reason to conclude as many and more outside of our vision! And giving them all their beautiful and varied seasons of longer or shorter intervals.

4. They teach his faithfulness.

The seasons come at their appointed time, and in their regular order. The Lord has affirmed in promise to our race,—"While the earth remaineth, seed-time and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease." A promise verified in respect to our earth now over 5000 years. The spring is sure to come, with its seed-time,—the summer with its growth and maturity of the grains and fruits:—"When the fig-tree," says our Lord, "putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh." There is a reliable certainty in this while time continues. And autumn follows summer; and winter the autumn. He hath "established the ordinances of the heavens forever, and made a decree which shall not pass." Upon these facts we not only calculate in respect to the coming seasons with certainty, but astronomers make their calculations respecting the movements of the heavenly bodies and our earth with the utmost precision.

5. They teach His existence.

And I do not know how better to interest you on this part of my subject than to quote the language of Prof. Mitchell, when speaking of the empire of God in a recent lecture. "Whence came this great universe? Whence this magnificent architecture, whose architraves rise in splendor before us in every direction? Is it all the work of chance? I answer, no, it is not the work of chance. It is the work of an Omnipotent Architect! And who is this August Being? Olympic Jove never built these heavens. The wisdom of Minerva never organized these magnificent systems. I say with St. Paul—'The unknown God, Him whom ye ignorantly worship; this is the God I declare unto you—God that made heaven and earth, who dwelleth not in temples made with hands.' No, here is the temple of our Divinity. Around us and above us rise sun and system, cluster and universe, and I doubt not that in every region of this vast empire of God, hymns of praise and anthems of glory are rising and reverberating from sun to sun and from system to system—heard by Omnipotence alone across immensity and through eternity!" And I add as the universe declares the existence of a God, so do the seasons in their regular return, dependent on the continued existence of the universe in its harmony and order.

II. I would consider the application of the attributes of Jehovah which we have briefly noticed, to the necessities of our moral condition.

1. God's goodness.

The God of creation, nature and providence is "the God of all grace,"—of which the Scriptures speak. Do we see Him to be a God of infinite goodness in all his works and ways, relating to all temporal arrangements, and in bringing about the seasons in their accustomed order laden with his bounteous mercies; and can we not trust him for his grace? In his infinite love, he has placed in the firmament of his vast system of grace, a grand, central sun—"the Sun of Righteousness" to shed his bright radiance in beams of light and warmth upon the cold hearts of the children of men; and to excite in them love and gratitude, and attract them into orbits of happiness, and harmony, and peace, around him forever. All that he wants is, for us to let the radiant beams of his love shine into our cold and frigid hearts; and let him breathe and fan the gentle zephyrs of his Spirit upon us, and he will revive us into life. May he thus warm the hearts of "the dead in sin," and breathe them into life and love by his Spirit. And may he "blow upon" this "garden that the spices thereof may flow out." Then shall we be able to sing that good, old garden hymn,—

"The Lord into his garden comes;
The spices yield a rich perfume,
The lilies grow and thrive.
Refreshing showers of grace divine,
From Jesus flow to every vine,
Which make the dead revive."

2. God's wisdom.

The same God of infinite wisdom which planned and was the great Architect of the universe; and appointed the varied seasons; is the God who in his infinite wisdom devised the scheme of redemption for fallen man. His wisdom is seen in this as well as in his material works and ways. He has instituted a plan of mercy whereby he can be just and save the believing sinner, and exalt him to a seat with angels at his right hand. "Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other. Truth has sprung out of the earth; and righteousness has looked down from heaven." What is required of man is to submit to the terms of salvation which Infinite Wisdom dictates, laying aside the enmity of his natural heart, and no longer be found fighting against God, who in his wisdom and mercy has become reconciled, through the obedience, sufferings and death of his Son, who took upon him our nature that he might reconcile God and man; and now being risen becomes the mediator of a new covenant of mercy. How simple and easy has God made the terms of salvation if we only submit our wills to Him, and became willing to be saved, by cheerful obedience to his gospel. Love makes a cheerful, willing and faithful servant; and in such a heart he will cause all his graces to grow and thrive,—as in a garden that is cultivated and its soil lies to sun and shower.

How perfect too has Divine Wisdom made the plan of salvation. It redeems man from under the curse of sin and death, and restores him to holiness, and life from the grave, and the eternal favor of God in a new world, as before the fall. It re-instates man in Eden and Paradise again. It clothes this earth with Eden beauty and loveliness, never to be again blighted by the returning chill-frosts of death and the curse.

"O, what a bright and blessed world,
This groaning earth of ours will be,
When from its throne the tempter hurled,
Shall leave it all, oh Lord, to thee!"

So has the wisdom of God determined.

3. His power.

He is a God of almighty power; a "God of eternal power." His power is infinite and unlimited and everlasting. Therefore the world is held in its place, and the seasons come at their appointed times throughout all generations. He, therefore, who awakes spring with all its living and lovely charms, and causes to blow his "north wind and south" upon the gardens, orchards and fields, that they may revive and yield in their times their blossoms, fragrance and pleasant fruits; can awaken spring in our hearts, and in his "vineyard planted with the choicest vine." He can blow upon his garden with gentle zephyrs that "the spices may flow out."

"Come, heavenly wind, and blow
A prosperous gale of grace."

Thy church is a "garden enclosed"—thy "spouse a spring shut up, a fountain sealed. Thy plants are an orchard of pomegranates, with pleasant fruits; camphor, with spikenard, spikenard and saffron; calamus and cinnamon, with all trees of frankincense, myrrh and aloes, with all the chief spices: a fountain of gardens, a well of living waters, and streams from Lebanon. Awake, oh north wind; and come thou south; blow upon my garden that the spices thereof may flow out. Let my beloved come into his garden."

He too will awaken the spring-time of the promises, and revive the dead; and reanimate and renew the face of our now sin-smitten earth, so that "the wilderness and solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose. It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing." "The winter" of the curse will be "over and gone"; and the night and shadows of death shall "flee away," when the eternal "day shall break," "and flowers appear on the earth; the time of the singing" of "the ransomed" will come. "Until" that "day break, and the shadows flee away" our Beloved has said, "I will get me to the mountain of myrrh, and to the hill of frankincense." But he has promised, "If I go away I will come again." And soon his voice will surprise and gladden his spouse, and she will awake and sing—"The voice of my Beloved! Behold, he cometh leaping upon the hills."

Had we never seen the effects of spring upon nature, how little could we imagine, during the cold and cheerless winter months, that the earth would be newly carpeted with living green, and that leaves, flowers and fruit would newly adorn the forest, and fruit trees, and gardens, so desolate and naked. And when we look out upon our earth now marred in its beauty by the curse, and stripped of its Eden dress;—and especially when we visit the place or sepulchre of the departed dead, where the lost congregation lie side by side in the silent sleep of death, with no signs of animate life, can we but little realize the return of that spring which will anew reanimate them! But when the voice of the "Beloved" is heard, and he returns, "like a roe or a young hart upon the mountains of Bether":—when the voice of the Archangel and the trump of God is heard, "the day shall break, and the shadows flee away." The dead shall be quickened into life, and the spring and "morning of joy" will come to earth as at the beginning!

"All nature dies, and lives again:
The flowers that paint the field,
The trees, that crown the mountain's brow,
And boughs and blossoms yield;

Resign the honors of their form
At winter's stormy blast,
And leave the naked, leafless plain,
A desolated waste.

Yet soon reviving plants and flowers
Anew shall deck the plain;
The woods shall hear the voice of spring,
And flourish green again.

So, to the dreary grave consigned,
Man sleeps in death's dark gloom,
Until the final morning wake
The slumbers of the tomb."

"Behold, they say, our bones are dried, and our hope is lost; we are cut off for our parts." But "hear the word of the Lord. Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I will cause breath to enter into you and ye shall live." "Come from the four winds, oh breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live." "And breath came into them, and they lived, and stood upon their feet, an exceeding great army." For "thus saith the Lord God, Behold, oh my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves."—"And I shall put my spirit in you, and ye shall live." "Awake, oh north wind; and come, thou south; blow upon this garden," where His people sleep in hope of a better resurrection. A garden wet with the dew of tears, which is "as the dew of herbs," in the Lord's sight, and therefore "the earth shall cast out the dead."

On the coming of spring all is animation and cheerful life. Again is heard the familiar voices of the birds, singing their merry carols in the branches: the same often, that visited us the last year; they are again returned from their absence and greet and cheer us with their pretty forms and melody of song. So when the spring-time of the restitution shall come, and the dead are quickened into life, and the new earth is peopled with its happy subjects, the well remembered forms and features, and long silent, yet familiar voices of departed ones shall greet each other—never to part again! "Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust". "Thy dead shall live—my dead body shall arise."

"Blest hour, when virtuous friends shall meet
Their earthly sorrows o'er,
And with celestial welcome greet,
On an immortal shore!
The parent finds his long-lost child;
Brothers on brothers gaze;
The tear of resignation mild
Is changed to joy and praise."

During the long winter months how often we sigh for the returning spring; and as we think of the restitution and new earth, and turn our thoughts to the place of the dead, how do we long and pray for that spring of promised, immortal life to come, when the sleeping millions of the righteous dead shall be quickened and reanimated into life eternal. And will it not come? "Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?"

4. God's faithfulness

Will fulfill these promises, and bring the long predicted and looked-for period at its appointed time. It will come without delay. "Now learn a parable of the fig-tree; when its branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh: so likewise ye, when ye see all these things, know that He is near, even at the doors." The same certainty will attend the time of Christ's return to earth, and the resurrection, and restitution, as that of the successive seasons. And the church may now know that his coming is "near even at the doors,"—by unquestionable signs, as that we know that summer follows the present month.* Therefore "Look up, and lift up your heads: for your redemption draweth nigh." The Lord will "come into his garden," to "eat his pleasant fruits" with his chosen Bride—as once he visted Eden's fertile bowers and happy paradise. "Make haste, my Beloved, and be thou like to a roe or to a young hart upon the mountain of spices." "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

And the prophets, those scriptural astronomers, who "searched diligently for the times and the manner of times," determined the periods of "the glory" and coming "salvation;"—for "unto" them "it was revealed;" and they recorded their knowledge for the church in after years.—1 Peter 1: 10, 11.—According to their calculation the epoch has arrived.

For the Crisis.

Further Expenses.

In a former number I reckoned certain costs as accruing to materialism from its history; that view of man's nature having been found mainly in sceptical company, and being claimed as most fully demonstrated by the infidel Feuerbach.

Besides these expenses which are external, or belong to the surroundings of the doctrine, I now propose to consider some of its internal or inherent difficulties, which render it a burden, more than a weapon, to those who employ it in defence of our view of man's destiny.

But what is materialism? Let us first define the different forms of it, with one or two suggested remarks.

1. There is Materialism Absolute; or, the view that all substance and being is matter, with the length, breadth, thickness, impenetrability, and other essential properties of matter. Such was the philosophy of Epicurus, Lucretius, and Baron d'Holbach, and it is of course held by most of those who deny the existence of a God. It is also held by some christians who maintain that the divine being himself, or itself, consists of material substance. Such were perhaps the Anthropomorphists, who held that God subsists in the human form. Yet these two views of the divine nature are not necessarily connected; for we have already seen that the Swedenborgians assert a human form of God, though they are far from being materialists. Upon this view of the limited being of God, whether material or not, I hope to speak as I proceed.

2. Restricted Materialism. By this I mean the view that all created substance is material. This denies the separate existence of the human soul, and affirms that all angels and other spirits are either of attenuated material substance, or that their life is the result of physical organization, or both. It is the difficulties of this view that I propose to treat.

3. The term Materialist is sometimes applied to those who assert a physical resurrection, or any bodily economy, as pertaining to the future life, while they also maintain the existence of immaterial or spiritual substance. Thus I have seen a review of Isaac Taylor's work, "The Physical Theory of Another Life," in which he was censured as a "Materialist," simply because he maintains that a "spiritual body" is strictly a body, adapted to the nature and wants of the spirit. By the bye, let my readers study that book when they find time. Taylor is a genuine thinker. He says some interesting things respecting the physical power of immaterial spirit, which some of you may think an absurd idea. Only read before you judge.

And just here let me say you are not to assume that immaterial substance is nothing at all. When we know what any substance is made of, or what constitutes any thing with force or power to cause effects, then it will be time to say whether God can create immaterial agencies or not. I asked some questions on this subject through the Crisis awhile ago, which I think were fair, but which I have not seen answered yet.

I will now briefly name the difficulties which the materialist view presents to my mind.

1. When asserted of the divine being, it involves the idea that a cause can act where it is not present. God has created the universe. No one supposes that he made it section by section, journeying hither and thither. He must have made it, then, at a distance. If so, by what means, or intermediate agencies? These must have been created and thrust forth to reach the work to be done; all which process will, I think, create more difficulties than it will explain. Did he, then, create the wide spread universe by his power or his influence? But, pray, what is that?

2. Restricted Materialism, as commonly held, supposes that life is the result of organization. It is curious that my friends who think thus, should most of all cry down organization in the church. They think it kills more life there than it creates. But among the atoms this same organization has all power in heaven and on earth. Such reasoning is certainly against analogy, and this fact makes it somewhat suspicious.

But it is urged, and I think justly, by those who are not materialists, that the organization or continuation of atoms can impart no property which was not in the atoms before. It may produce modifications of existing properties; and thus may be explained many chemical, electrical, and other like phenomena. And it is probable that caloric, light, electricity, magnetism and galvanism, are all modifications of the same agent or property. Now when it is shown that atoms have mental or thinking properties, or some property of which these may be modifications, the materialist view may be maintained.

But until this is shown, it is, I think, more rational to regard organization not as a cause of life, but as an effect of vital power, which may be also a means of its action and propagation. It is certainly so in human society, and thus there is argument from analogy for this view. But when we reason as if the organization of matter created mind and thought, who knows that a vast organization of matter, or of material worlds, may not create a vast mind, even that of God himself?

3. Materialism, in its history, has been as much allied to fatalism as to any other form of scepticism. The sceptical materialists are of course all fatalists. And they deduce their fatalism from their materialism. This is the philosophy by which they seek to evade the sense of free agency and moral accountability.

And among the phrenologists, many of whom are materialists, I think I have seen much of the same philosophy. Many of them regard organization as the cause of life, and the organization of the brain as the cause of mind. They infer, I think logically, that as the brain is, so the mind, i. e., the thought, feeling and conduct must be. They find no power aside from the brain or the organism, to control it. And since organization has no power of self-control. Thus many phrenologists. Others, however, do not make the mind out of the brain, but the brain out of a vital and organizing power which can also think; and thus find a doctrine of free agency.

Many christian materialists also firmly hold free agency. But I think they do so in spite of their materialism. And I am pretty sure that the most sagacious christian materialists have been speculative fatalists. They have confessed that the doctrine implies the necessity of human actions, though they have practically recognized man's accountability.

4. The materialist view obscures, if it does not destroy, the identity between the present and future man. On this point I will not now enlarge. In my book on "Debt and Grace" I have stated and examined six different theories on this subject, five of which I think I have shown to be untenable, leaving only one that can be reconciled with all the facts. This is the view that a principle of vitality, call it life, soul, or what you will, remains undestroyed, though inert, between death and the resurrection.

I think that my refutation of the other theories has not been answered. I have lately read with great interest an English work on "The Soul and the Future Life," by a very able, acute, candid, and reverent man, Thomas Cromwell, Ph. D., and F. S. A. He takes the materialist view, and encounters this question of identity. Here is the substance of his reply; and the reader will say whether he meets the difficulty. He says: "The final amount of change in the particles themselves will be such that, when life returns to all, or so many of them as the great Originator of vitality shall have determined to reanimate, the human creature then re-constituted will greatly less resemble what it was at its decease, than its maturity resembled its youth, or its youth its childhood." P. 239. The italics are mine. The question rises, If identity depends on resemblance, and the semblance between the present and future body is so slight, how can there be a real identity, so that we shall still be our own true responsible selves?

Proposing to "foot up" the above expenses in my next, I hope soon to see whether we are able to pay all the costs.

The Lord's Anointed.—No. 2.

"Stand up for Jesus."

God's word is true. It is settled in heaven. I believe it. I yield to it. Some one has referred to my "interpretation" of Micah 5: 2. I have not interpreted it. I simply read it, and read it in a variety of versions to show what God SAID in contradistinction from the dust that men raised over it, thick enough to bury a caravan. I merely wished to show that after all the mist the word of God was THERE when the smoke cleared away. "But thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall HE come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel; whose goings forth have been OF OLD, FROM EVERLASTING."

Now in writing I am not engaging in controversy. I will not try to teach men who know too much to learn. Just for the benefit of warning souls that are "tossed to and fro," I want to suggest that men cannot explain away God's word, and truth is not advanced by any "new translation" which contradicts GREEK and HEBREW BOTH! Let God be true. His word is not made to be twisted like a nose of wax in any shape to suit a theory. If any person has doubts upon the subject, my advice is, read the Bible. Read it, STUDY IT and BELIEVE IT.

Is there any passage which says that the Savior, "The Logos," was NOT "in the beginning with God?" If so, find it.

Is there any passage which says that "all things were" NOT "made by HIM?"—not by IT, but "by HIM" recollect.

Is there any passage which says that the Christ did NOT come "down FROM HEAVEN"?

Is there any passage which DENIES that the Son of man could "ascend up where HE WAS BEFORE"?

Is there any passage which teaches that all things were NOT made "by Jesus Christ"?

Is there any passage which says that he had NOT glory with the Father "BEFORE THE WORLD WAS"?

Is there any passage which says that he was NOT rich, "yet for our sakes he BECAME poor, that we through his poverty might be rich"?

Is there any passage which says he was NOT in the form of God, and thought it not robbery to be equal with God but MADE HIMSELF of no reputation and took upon himself the form of a servant and was found in fashion as a man?

Is there any place that says that since the children are partakers of flesh and blood he himself likewise did not TAKE PART of the same, "that through death he might destroy death and him that had the power of death, that is the devil"?

Is there any scripture that declares that Christ is not Ail Gibbour, "The Mighty God," not merely "God" as well as "prince of peace"?

Is there any scripture that declares that his goings forth were not from of old, from everlasting?

Is there any scripture which declares that Thomas was mistaken when he said to Christ, "My Lord and my God"?

Is there any scripture which says that they are not blessed who have not seen, "and yet have believed" this?

Is there any scripture which declares that Christ was not in existence when David by the Holy Spirit "calleth him Lord"?

Is there any scripture which says that he was not "before all things and by him all things" do not "consist"?

I do not propose to argue these questions at all. Let God speak. Let his word instruct us. I bow to that, and gazing on my risen Savior with Thomas bid my doubts depart and adore him as "my Lord and my God."

I am not entirely ignorant of the explanations and constructions which people, wise and foolish, have put upon these scriptures. I have not quoted the passages at length, nor have I referred to them. Take your Bible and hunt it through, read it and believe it. I have no opinions to offer. For a remark upon "the Word," or "Logos," I refer the reader to a note on p. 163 of "The Great Controversy," where some facts are stated respecting it. When I have time I may write more. But I wish you to turn to the Bible. Do not offer me your "opinions"—I have bushels and backloads of "opinions" now. The Word, the Word of God must teach us if we are ever taught "the truth as it is in Jesus."

The cavilings upon this subject are not entirely original. Persons may suppose they are receiving new truth, when in fact it is old error. Let us have a care lest we deny the Lord that bought us. We cannot belittle him except in our own estimation. God says "let all the angels worship Him." Let us then, creatures of the dust, draw near and adore our Immanuel, recognizing thus the great mystery of godliness, "God manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the nations, believed on in the world, received up into glory." "To him be praise and dominion both now and forever. Amen."

Singular Coincidence.

Bro. Grant:—With your permission I will present for the consideration of the brethren, a few coincidences of numbers.

I will premise by saying that Daniel, in chap. 8: 14, begins a series of events with 2300 days (years), and carries that chain down to the resurrection, in chap. 12: 2,—if we understand him. Then Daniel hears the question asked—"How long to the end of these wonders?" Now mark, the angel had just carried Daniel in narration to the end of these same wonders, and according to chap. 12: 2, I understand them to culminate in the resurrection. But hear the answer (11: 7)—"It shall be for a time, times, and an half (1260 years, as is generally understood); and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished." Then he makes proclamation of two other periods, viz: 1290 and 1335 days, or years. This makes three periods of time in chap. 12.

Now let us return to chaps. 8 and 9. In chap. 9 the 2300 days of chap. 8 are also divided into 70 weeks, 69 weeks, and 62 weeks. (I am perfectly well aware that I shall be told that the threescore and two weeks of verse 26, belong with, and must be added to, the seven weeks of verse 25. Well, prove that; then I will add it, but not on a simple declaration of opinion. Daniel has thus divided it, and that is my authority for so using it.) Very well, let see what will come out of his divisions. All I want is the first and last term—62 weeks equals 434 years (symbolic time). This is the least term in the series; the whole is 2300. 434 from 2300 leaves 1866 years, the greatest possible remainder of the terms given. Now have these anything to do with the three periods in chap. 12? I do not know! but if 1866 is the last greatest remainder of 2300—the whole—it is evident, if we deduct the three smaller terms from this greatest remainder, 1866, then the remainders resulting from those subtractions, will give the date or beginning of each, of those three periods. We will begin with the last term: 1335 from 1866—A. D. 531. 2d term, 1290 from 1866—A. D. 576. 1st term, 1260 from 1866—A. D. 606.

Now the coincidence is in this—the remainder, A. D. 531, is about the historical date of Justinian's decree. A. D. 576, about the same, for the plucking up of the three horns by the little horn. A. D. 606, about the date when the Emperor Phocas conferred the title of "Universal Bishop" on the Bishop of Rome; and A. D. 1866 is, according to chronology, [illegible] having no work that I can consult for these dates at my command.

I am aware that such an arrangement would be supposed to conflict with a theory of "the time of the end"; but the difficulty, I apprehend, would be more of the imagination than of reality. I do not as yet see that the "time of the end" is measured by dates, but by incidents: "Many shall run to and fro and knowledge shall be increased." Nor have I ever found an author who gives any better reason for extending the 1335 beyond the terminus of the 1260 (so of the 1290) than that it is named subsequently. Possibly the mention of two periods, after saying with an oath these things should be finished at the end of 1260 years (from some point of time not here specified), reaching to the resurrection according to 12: 2, admits of another meaning than that of going beyond the 1260. There is a possibility that the angel simply intends putting Daniel's people (the people of God) on their guard against putting the date of 1260 where they should date 1335 or where they should date 1290.

Paul in Thess. says "the man of sin" is to continue till the coming of Christ and be destroyed by his coming. Daniel says the little horn continued making war with the saints and prevailed against them until the Ancient of days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom. Now if I understand correctly, it is generally understood that John saw the same power in Rev. 13, and there describes it to continue forty and two months—time, times, and an half, or 1260 years from some point not here specified; but the next two verses, 6 and 7, gives the same descriptive characteristics as that given of the little horn in Dan. 7: 21—28. Now if the little horn—the man of sin—and the beast are all one,—then this triple unit continues till Christ comes; or if we leave out the man of sin, the dual unit so continues; for John sees this same beast (Rev. 19: 19,) making war against the King of kings and Lord of lords; "And the beast was taken and cast alive into a lake of fire; and Daniel is very like (7: 11); "I beheld till the beast was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame." Hence it would seem that "all these wonders" of Dan. 12: 6 and 7, that were to be completed with the 1260 years, apply chiefly to the little horn of Daniel and the forty-two-months beast of John; and if so, how can we avoid the conclusion that the 1260 years do reach to the Epiphany?

I know it will be objected, that "the judgment shall sit and they shall take away his dominion; (true, but it was) to consume and to destroy it unto the end.—Dan. 7: 26. And so John (Rev. 13: 10) says, "He that leadeth into captivity shall go into captivity." True again, and so perhaps he has; and yet he must be killed with a sword for he has killed with a sword. When shall he be killed with a sword? When He shall come, out of whose "mouth goeth a sharp sword that with it he should smite the nations"!—19: 15.

That his power has been greatly circumscribed, that his dominion is being consumed, that he has been carried into captivity, etc., there is good ground for belief; but so long as the nations of Europe are convulsed with the question of his civil power being utterly overthrown, or entirely taken away, there is as good reason to believe that he still exercises civil power; therefore room for a reasonable doubt, if his 1260 days are ended. "MENE, MENE, was written of Belshazzar's kingdom. "God hath numbered thy kingdom and finished it." "In that night was Belshazzar slain. And Darius the Median took the kingdom." Once let the number of the days of "the beast's" kingdom—1260—be finished! Who shall take it!!

The Annointed of God.

Bro. Grant:—The selections of Bro. Hastings, published in the Crisis under the above caption, are so potent, so clear, and full on the subject of the pre-existence of the Son of God, that I wish to jog the elbows of some who may be so intently looking after reasons to support their notions, as not to look at those items impartially. Please examine these selections, brethren, those of you who have been inclined to disbelieve the great fact that Christ did exist in fact and form, in truth and verity, distinctly, before the manifestation in the flesh. Also look carefully at hundreds of texts of scripture which teach this truth. I had almost determined to write in defence of this important truth, but am glad it is in the hearts of those who will do it more direct. Yours as ever in the hope of eternal life. L. C. Welcome.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, MAY 30, 1860.

Castleton.

We are still enjoying the smiles of the Lord in this place. The light and truth are making new conquests. The children of the Lord stand steadfast in the "blessed hope," and are growing stronger in the faith of the gospel. There has been very little excitement in any of our meetings, but the word of the Lord has taken deep root in their hearts, causing them to come out from the world and bear its reproach cheerfully. The enemies of the cross of Christ are busy in retailing slander, ridicule, backbiting, evil-surmisings and evil-speaking; which are to us, as breezes to the sails of the ocean mariner. When patiently received, they waft us pleasantly onward to the land of glory.

Many, who were among the most bitter opposers, are now numbered with the happy participators of the joys of a real Bible hope. Those who have been professors of religion for years, and supposed they were enjoying the fulness of its comfort, find, on embracing the great truths for which we are so despised, that the change is equal to their first conversion. Others have lost their peace by their opposition, and in that way found they were fighting against the Lord, have repented, and are greatly blessed. Some, like Saul, are still "breathing out threatenings," but the good Lord is our helper, who makes us joyful in his name.

One very excellent woman, who was a faithful member of one of the churches in Castleton, was much grieved because her husband, who was a member of the same church, frequently went to our meetings, and took an active part. The more he attended, the sweeter was his peace; and the more firmly she resolved not to go with him, in what her minister said was only heresy, the greater was her darkness, till her peace was all gone. She was resolved not to go with her husband, because she supposed he was imbibing very dangerous error. She prayed for strength to resist the false doctrine, but no relief came. The thought that her husband, with whom she had lived happily for many years, was embracing heresy in his declining life, was to her terrible; and she was strongly tempted to end her existence that she might not live to witness the results.

After many weeks passed in this sad state of mind, the husband saw that his former sprinkling was not scriptural baptism; and feeling anxious to please the Lord in all things, he felt it his duty to be baptized as the Bible directs. And yet, he hardly dared to go forward, fearing that when he took this step, it would be followed by sad consequences to his companion. We advised him to obey the Lord and let him take care of the consequences, he did so, and the result has been glorious. When he informed her of his intention, she resolved to oppose him no more, for she saw that he was happy in Jesus' love, and concluded to let him be so, if she had no peace herself. Yet she felt unwilling to go with him; but finally consented to accompany him to meeting on the day of his baptism, and also to the water. When she witnessed the great comfort that he, with others, received when baptized, she became satisfied that she had been fighting against the Lord, in joining with her minister and a proud and popular church, in opposing the great work of reformation going on in this place; and firmly decided to do it no more. This conclusion afforded some relief, but it was not till she determined to go with her companion, that the clouds all passed away, and her peace became like a river; sweeter and deeper far than she had ever before enjoyed.

The next Lord's day, they came to meeting, perfectly happy in the love of Jesus. Their testimony in the love-feast was truly heart-cheering. She thought she had enjoyed much in Christ in former years, but had never felt such a fulness of "love, joy and peace," as now. They at once requested their minister to release them from the Congregational church, and let them join the "Christian Church" in Castleton, where they had truly found a home, among the Lord's despised, but happy children. She and her companion felt willing to take all the reproach that a wicked world, and a cold, formal church can heap upon them; and are very thankful that they have been led out into the glorious liberty of the gospel. They feel like slaves set free; and they have no desire to return again into bondage. Although they have lost some church friends, they esteem it a small loss when compared with their increase of love for Jesus. They are already compensated a hundred fold.

Frowns from lukewarm professors, when patiently borne, only make our love for the Lord more ardent. This is their experience, and they feel willing to suffer with Christ, hoping to be counted worthy to reign with him in his coming kingdom.

Last Lord's day—May 20th—was one of interest and profit. New ones are becoming interested in the truth, and see more clearly the great difference between Bible doctrine and the theological fables of the day, that are substituted for the word of the Lord. Seven more have been baptized [illegible] seventy-nine in all. The work is still onward. We can truly say, "What hath God wrought?" To him be all the glory.

Temptation—Query.

"Please harmonize Gen. 22: 1, Matt. 6: 13, and James 1: 13. Can any one be tempted to do good, or with good?"—L. F. D. Cole.

These verses read as follows:—"And it came to pass, after these things, that God did tempt Abraham, and said unto him, Abraham; and he said, behold, here I am. And he said, take now thy son, thine only son Isaac, whom thou lovest, and get thee into the land of Moriah; and offer him there for a burnt offering."—Gen. 22: 1–2.

"And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil."—Matt. 6: 13.

"Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man."—Jas. 1: 13.

The word tempt is used in two senses in the Bible; first, to try, to prove; second to seduce from the path of righteousness. The Lord tries and Satan seduces us. The Septuagint of Gen. 22: 1, reads, "God did try Abraham." This is the true idea expressed in this passage; and not that the Lord endeavored to turn him into the service of the devil. We read in Daniel 12: 10, that "many shall be purified, and made white and tried." God proves, or tries, all his children, to see if they will obey him, but does not tempt any one in the sense of seduce.

In the Emphatic Diaglott, a valuable translation, Matt. 6: 13, reads, "And abandon us not to trial, but preserve us from evil." In 1 Cor. 10: 13, we read, "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man; but God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it."

In Jas. 1: 13, "tempted" is used in the sense of being seduced from the path of rectitude, which is not the work of the Lord, "but every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed."—Jas. 1: 14.

Eternal Consciousness.

Bro. Grant: I would like to ask a solution of the following queries:

1. Whether a belief in the conscious state between death and the resurrection does not involve a belief also in eternal consciousness?

2. If the first death does not kill the man, will the second do it?

3. If there is something that lives after the first, will there not be something also after the second?"—D. N. Smith.

1. The first question we should answer in the affirmative. It is certainly a legitimate inference.

2. The second, we should answer in the negative. We find nothing in the Bible to show that "the second death" kills any more effectually than the first; the only difference is, the first is temporal, and the second eternal death.

3. The third inquiry we should answer in the affirmative; but we find no proof from reason, physiology, philosophy, science, common sense, or the Bible, to show that any part of man lives in a conscious state when he is dead, temporarily, or eternally. The idea that a part of man lives after his death, is entirely speculative and without any foundation in truth. The whole Bible is opposed to any such theory. We find no proof that any thing leaves man at death but "the breath of life," which is common to every living creature upon our planet. After death, all man's hopes of a future existence center in the resurrection of the dead; and "if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised, and . . . they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished."—1 Cor. 15: 16–18.

"The Age of Fraud."

We often hear some blind sectarian, who has a particular creed to sustain, or some one deluded by the teachings of demons, say the world is growing better. If the saying were true, the Bible is false; for that plainly affirms "that in the last days perilous times shall come. . . For evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." Says the New York Herald:—

"The historians of the present day will have no difficulty in finding materials for the consecration of our own times as emphatically the age of fraud. The ancient poets sang of their age of gold and their age of iron, while more modern historians have immortalized the age of heroes and of chivalry. It is now left for the graphic pen of some historian to gather up the floating atoms of the gigantic frauds of the present age, and combine them into a unit for the instruction and warning of posterity."

The materials are found broadcast throughout the world. The great governments of Europe have frequently been shaken to their very centres by the sudden unravelling of some complicated system of corruption. The Crimean war exposed some of the leading officials of the Russian government, who had been preying upon the imperial finances to such an extent that the Emperor was glad of the opportunity offered him by Napoleon to make peace with the Allied Powers. During the late Italian war a most systematic fraud was being continually practised upon the bankrupt Austrian government by some of the most distinguished officers of the army and [illegible] of the day. This was about one of the most [illegible] ted on any government, whether we look at its various ramifications or at the high character of the delinquents, several of whom, in the bitterness of their disgrace, have laid violent hands upon their own lives. . . . Here, in our very midst, the most astounding corruption in almost every branch of the public service is constantly being developed. It is seen in Congress as well as in our State Legislatures; in public corporations and in private enterprises; and in fact, it would be hard to say where the corruption does not exist, so general has the moral plague become."

In this truthful picture of the times, drawn by a close observer, we have the Bible prophecy confirmed. We are told, "It would be hard to say where the corruption does not exist, so general has the moral plague become." The prophet Joel tells us, that at the time of the harvest, at the end of the present dispensation, the "wickedness" will be "great."

The Savior says, it shall be as it was in the days of Noah and of Lot, when the Son of man is revealed. How was it then? Were nearly all honest and obeying the Lord? Nay, verily. From the account given, we think the present state of the world is very similar to that in the days of Noah and Lot, and hence we are near the great day of the Lord. One thing is certain, wickedness will increase rapidly till we reach the end of this dispensation, when Jesus will come "with power and great glory." Whoever looks for better times before the second personal coming of Christ, will most certainly be disappointed. How completely the present state of nominal christianity corresponds with Paul's description of it, as given in 2 Tim. 3: 1-5.—"This know also, that in the last days, perilous times shall come; for men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, highminded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away."

Look at the picture, and compare it with the present aspect of things. How complete the resemblance!!

"Voice of the Prophets."

We have received a copy of the second edition of the "Voice of the Prophets." The editor says:

"The first edition has gone forth to speak to a slumbering church, and world. The general response from those who have read it, shows that it was needed. There is one joyous strain of commendation from those whose judgment is of great value to me.

We want to scatter over the land the 1000,000, as first proposed. It ought and can be done. Let each brother and sister resolve to supply their unbelieving and unconverted neighbors. Let a number of friends combine, and supply each family, in a village or town, or see that the church of which they are members are supplied.

We solicit the prompt and active agency of all interested in the circulation of the "Voice of the Prophets." Let all wake up to this work.

Who will take a 1,000, and supply a town or city?

Who will take 500, and supply a neighborhood or village?

Who will supply the church in which they are interested?

Look at this matter, and see how little it will cost to do a vast amount of good. Let us "let our light shine." Adventists cannot "put their light under a bushel," and be innocent."

The Grant and Loveland Discussion.

(FROM NOTES BY J. F. COTTON.)

Mr. Loveland. I do not purpose to enter largely into the argument that angels are men; but that they are in every way like men is evident from Daniel. "Then I, Daniel, looked, and behold, there stood other two, the one on this side of the bank of the river, and the other on that side of the bank of the river." I remarked that the most proper way would be to make the passage read, "who maketh his spirits angels"; as angel was an office more than a being, signifying a messenger. We read of the angels of the seven churches, which surely mean messengers to the seven churches. I send a messenger to Charleston; he is not a man but a messenger; neither is a soldier a man but a soldier, although man is the fundamental. It was a different order of beings which appeared to Adam—cherubim; but it was an angel which appeared to Job.

It is not worth while to quibble longer about this desire. If I fail to make myself understood there is incapacity somewhere. If man means only organized dust, then, he being created in his Maker's image, God is only dust. I did not assume that man was equal with God, but that in nature and kind he was like him, and consequently immortal. God is called a spirit, and the father of the spirits of all flesh; we are his offspring and an incarnate picture of his own eternity. Every argument that entrenches upon his vitality strikes at the vitality of God himself. The vast capacity of man which makes him fit to minister in the endless glory and joy of the future, is evidence of his divine origin. [illegible] there not been superfluous efforts made in his behalf—acts of supererogation?

I insist that man is progressive. This talk about the fall is all nonsense. If he fell, from where and to where did he fall? I am asked who told the truth in the temptation scene? The tempter says, "God does know that in the day ye eat of it your eyes shall be opened and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." I ask in turn who told the truth? Did man die on the day he eat of the fruit, and did he not become as gods knowing good and evil? Is he not progressive then through his knowledge? Man reasons, animals do not, hence the progress of man.

Retribution to man is not an end, but the means to accomplish an end. Extinction of being would be an end. Look at the large majority of men standing upon the verge of existence; and shall they perish because, having strayed, God is unable to save them? Having failed in effecting his purpose, shall he raise the mace of his power and dash them into annihilation because he cannot bring them back? Is he obliged to blot them out of existence forever? I would say with Moses, "Let me go back into nothingness and let me sleep the everlasting sleep." This total extinction of being is vengeance, not justice. Like a spectre it follows the footsteps of man, and casts its shadows forever on his path. The suspended bolt flashes above his head, the pains and punishment of his criminality rendering his life a perpetual fear of his impending fate. [Time.]

Mr. Grant. We admit that angel means messenger; but this does not meet the point. It is written that man was made a little lower than the angels, therefore he does not belong to that order of beings; else he was made lower than himself, which would be absurd. It does not follow that man being formed out of dust partakes of the nature of his designer or model. A likeness may be made of Franklin and Webster of the same material; how much of the nature is conveyed into the bust?

It is said that the soul of man is a part of God. Does one part of God get mad at another? Does a part of God get drunk—does a part of God SIN? We utterly repudiate the sentiment. We might as well say that God is man. If intelligence is a proof of immortality, there are animals superior to some men. What so helpless as a young child? Can the nature of God dwindle down to the semi-idiotcy of second dotage? But we are told that it is only the body, the house for the superior intelligence, which decays. Do I now address mere houses, or do I speak to men? Whom did God speak to when he said, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die"? Was it not to the man whom he had "formed out of the dust of the earth"?

My friend says that man is progressive. Yes, if man going backward may be said to progress. To prove this we have any amount of facts. He would also prove that the devil had the truth of the matter when he said that man should not die but become as gods. This is a daring assertion in the face of the Bible. The preposition rendered in is also susceptible of being rendered after, which gives a correct meaning here. If man had died on the very day on which he sinned, having no child, the race had become extinct. "After thou eatest, thou shalt surely die"—or dying thou shalt die; that is, the fatal seed sown by disobedience, immediately begins its work and shall surely terminate in death. Here was the crime and penalty. Man being on a state of probation, a free agent, had a law given to test his obedience. Prohibition from the tree was the law, the penalty for its violation was death; in which, but for the resurrection, man should sleep eternally. We have little further to add here, but shall give a popular definition of this spirit about which we hear so much, and yet so little. Imagine a being, "spiritual, simple, uncompounded, immaterial, indivisible, indestructible, intangible, without exterior or interior surface, is not extended, and cannot come into contact with matter." Now I would ask how can this nothing praise the Lord? Dr. Childs remarks, "The immortality of no soul can be proved by any philosopey that belongs to earth." And yet my friend has tried to prove it by philosophy. Suppose a man put into a coffin and hermetically sealed. Is he there, or is there a part of him gone out through the whole concern? In contradiction to the statement that man is conscious in death, the Bible says the dead know not anything.

Dr. Barclay, during his travels in the Holy Land, went into the cave of Pelagius, on Mt. Olivet, where he found engraven on the rock "put thy faith in God, Domitela, no human is immortal." This is corroborated by Job, who only expected to see God in his flesh after the earth-worms had destroyed his body in the grave, through the power of his living Redeemer. An irrefragible answer is given to the momentous question, "If a man die shall he live again?" Jesus has said, "I am the resurrection and the life—he that believeth in me though he were dead yet shall he live." The philosophy which would contradict such [illegible] by denying a literal resurrection [illegible]

In reviewing my opponent's propositions I find an assertion that man's immortality is revealed him through intuition. Why does not mine teach it me? And yet for three thousand years it was hid till "the appearing of our Savior, Jesus Christ, who brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.

My friend says there is nothing higher than man. The Bible says that angels are, as he was made a little lower than the angels. He also says that man is the crowning glory of the universe, then is he equal with God. [Time.]

Mr. Loveland. The spiritual body is distinct from the natural body, to prove which I should like to examine certain texts, but have not time. I know of no contest between God and the devil, nor any transformation of the snake to make him other than he is. As to man's backward progress, he lives as long, and is larger and stronger, so that the armor of the ancients would not fit him, now being too small for him. One assertion is as good as another. I will now produce some proof in support of my position. "Christ being put to death in the flesh preached to the spirits in prison." "For this cause was the gospel preached to them that are dead." If there are men out of the flesh why are they not distinct from men in the flesh? Again we read of "a building of God, an house, not made with hands eternal in the heavens." "Absent from the body and present with the Lord." "Having a desire to depart and be with Christ." Then those who surrounded the throne of the four beasts, who wore the white robes. Again the souls of those who were beheaded under the altar crying out how long, oh Lord, merciful and just? These are not the exact words but they convey the idea. Here we see that men being dead have the gospel preached to them. Here are the spirits of just men made perfect, and a vast company which no man could number. Then, again, "seeing that we are encompassed by so great a crowd of witnesses," etc. Who are all these? Breaths? Unknowing, uncaring non-entities? Who was it appeared to Saul? Who was the rich man who was so anxious that his brethren might not come to his place of torment? If my brother tries to symbolize them I will retort upon him by literalism. We have here a positive argument of spiritual existence and consciousness. And we could produce a host of others scarcely less credible, of the sympathy of the spiritual world with the natural, where men and women, suffering and in distress have been soothed and comforted by the spirits of departed friends, and when coming at last to die, these heavenly visitants have come to welcome and bear them company to the regions of celestial joy. Is this all a myth? Am I to consider a myth, a fallacy, the testimony of the most noble, devoted men, who in their last extremity have declared the presence of friends long departed from this world? Should I be content to take the leap into dark unconsciousness in hopes that the hearing of a trumpet would call me from my sleep? No. I shall cling to the consciousness of departed saints, and like Wesley expect to pass at once from the church militant to the church triumphant, who now join hands across the dark stream of death. This I hold to be the oldest faith, and shall not give it up either for materialism or verbalism. [Time.]

(To be continued.)

For the Crisis.

To the Friends of Truth.

It is cheering to hear from the friends of the cause through the "Crisis," and especially from those with whom we are acquainted in different sections of the country, and who are proclaiming the glad tidings of eternal life through our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Some of my brethren have inquired where I was laboring, and what I was doing. To such I would say, I am making war with sin and Satan in the highways and hedges; not with carnal weapons, but with the sword of the Spirit, the word of God. The Captain who gives me my orders is an experienced general, who never lost a battle,—who has conquered sin and death. With such a leader I am confident of success.

For the last six months, most of the time, I have been laboring in new fields, holding up the light of life to those who have not had the privilege of hearing the glorious truths God has committed to our trust. The great Head of the church has attended the preaching of his word with the blessing of heaven.

I have just closed a series of meetings at Frankfort Mills, Me., which, I trust, have resulted in good to many. I visited this place last winter, and delivered a few discourses on the hope of life through Christ. The leaven has been at work, and when I returned I found the people ready to listen to the words of holy writ. Many began to feel it time to leave the ranks of Satan and seek for eternal life. Satan no doubt had watched the seed sown, seeking to destroy it, so that no fruit might appear. He rallied his forces of evil spirits, and set them at work upon the minds of some who ought to have been acquainted with his devices,—aroused their fears, that the Church was in danger; [illegible] minds of the people with heretical doctrines.

The announcement was made by the preacher in charge to the church, that he did not consider our meetings as religious, and represented us as preaching infidelity. A few that had not heard for themselves thought it must be so. Satan having raised the cry, sent Madam Rumor and Evil Surmising about town circulating false reports, informing the people that we were preaching that men had no souls, and cautioned them to stay away from the meetings; and in this way he thought to do us much harm. A large portion of the inhabitants had manhood and mind enough to come and hear before they judged; the result was, many were convinced of the truth, and began to seek the Lord, and some found peace in believing.

Satan perceiving that he did not prevail, made quite a stir among those that would be rulers over the consciences of the people. A consultation was held. The result was, the old church bell caught some of the spirit, and refused to call the people to hear the infidel doctrines preached. It was a new freak in the old bell—all had given him the credit of being a faithful servant of the people; he had never refused to inform the people, when they were in danger by fire, or to invite them to attend levees, lectures and meetings, without any respect to party, name, or nation. On all necessary occasions his voice was heard through the valleys and over the hills inviting the people to come. What should cause him to refuse to call the people, I cannot tell, unless some spirit had taken possession of him that refused to communicate for want of affinity. It might possibly be a sectarian spirit. I have known such to control the tongues of the people upon some subjects; perhaps it was an experiment upon the tongue of the old bell; for it was noticed that he would call for one class only, after the spirit took possession. I fear the old bell will lose his reputation as a faithful servant to the people, but we will let him rest awhile; he may reform.

Satan overdid. The people would come to meeting, and the interest increased. The final gathering day will tell the result of the feeble effort put forth to save men. I fear that some will find they have engaged in an unequal warfare. The truth is mighty and sure to prevail. I have found it safe to trust in God, and go out in the by-places and invite men to seek life. God will raise up friends among our enemies. I want to say to the credit of the people of Frankfort, we had good order in our meetings, and were treated with kindness and respect by those that were willing to hear and then judge.

The cause of truth is progressing. Soon the last battle will be fought. Victory over sin and death will then crown the faithful. Then the eternal day of rest will begin with all the ransomed of the Lord; but, alas! it will be a day of terror and death to the sinner. Let us flee from the wrath to come, and make Jesus our friend while mercy lingers for a dying world.

Correspondence.

From Bro. Spaulding.

BRO. GRANT:—Having obtained help of God, we continue to this day, doing the work of an evangelist. We started bright and early from Bangor the first of May, took the cars to Old Town; there we found the steamer Aroostook all ready to start; we went aboard with our precious freight of tracts and papers, and had a pleasant trip up the Penobscot to Matawamkeag, sixty miles, arrived about five, and you would have smiled to see us run, one this way, the other that, giving notice of our lecture, and just had time to take a cup of tea before meeting time.

We had a good congregation. Went over the river to Chester, and gave two lectures to interesting congregations; then gave one at Five Islands, where they were forgetful to entertain strangers, and we had to take lodgings at a tavern. But we praised God we were counted worthy to suffer in his cause.

Sunday, gave three lectures at Matawamkeag to a very attentive congregation. Praise God! there is yet power in the gospel to move men's hearts, when clearly presented.

Monday morning we started for Aroostook, heavily laden with tracts. You might have seen us talking and singing by the way, our hearts burning within us, as did the disciples going to Emmaus, though not sad as were they; we were in good spirits. All the providences of God had been in our favor. Thus far the Lord hath helped us, and past mercies lead us still to expect his blessings. We lean upon his strong arm, trust in him, and expect him to lead and direct us in the right path.

By noon we had traveled eight miles to Moluncus, where we stopped and got up a meeting. Had a good hearing, found good friends, although no especial interest in the doctrine. Tuesday traveled eight miles, got up a meeting, and quite an interest was manifested. Here we found Bro. Clifford and wife, firm friends of Bible truth. May they be living epistles known and read of all men. Found so much interest that we thought it advisable for Bro. Corliss to stay another day, while I went on further, and Wednesday I traveled fifteen miles to Wainsville, stopping at every house leaving tracts and papers, giving notice of my lecture in the evening; but with all my labor and notice, I only got eight persons out, and it seemed like preaching to the walls of the house. There was no interest at all.

Thus I find frequently my life checkered with sorrow and disappointment, and my labors seem to me to be in vain. But I scattered some good gospel seed, and God will take care of it; at any rate, I feel a consciousness of having done what I could, and I have the approbation of my conscience, and of God, and I left this morning, feeling I was clear of the blood of their souls.

To-day (Thursday) I have traveled eleven miles before noon, stopping at nearly every house to scatter tracts and papers. The World's Crisis takes well, and I think much good will be done by the circulation of these papers. I generally give but one in a family, so a great many families get them, and no doubt there will be subscribers raised up by the means. I do not know of but three or four subscribers in Aroostook. It looks to me that Aroostook will be a good field for Bible doctrine to flourish in, for there is but little preaching, but few churches, and but little sectarianism here.

Bro. Corliss will come on and meet me at Lineus to-day, and we shall proceed on as we have done. We are in good health and spirits, strong in the Lord, willing to spend and be spent, willing to labor and suffer in the cause, looking for our recompense at the resurrection of the just; for we do not expect to get it at death; we do not believe death is the gate to endless joy.

My regards to the brethren and sisters, especially those who have contributed to my mission. I praise God for the privilege of being the bearer of these little messengers of truth. The good Lord bless the donors, and while they have watered others, may their own souls be watered with heavenly dews.

Pray for us, that we may be bold, tender, faithful; that God will open doors and hearts, and give us access to minds, that we may have strength of limbs to walk and lungs to speak, and strength of faith in the promises.

Aroostook, Me.

From Bro. George.

DEARLY BELOVED BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN THE LORD:—It is some time since I have attempted to correspond, through the Crisis with the church scattered abroad; but having a little spare time, I purpose to stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance. Feeling a responsibility resting upon me, though my talent may be of the least, yet it must be improved to gain the welcome applaudit, "Well done, good and faithful servant." My desire and prayer to God is, that the church may feel the responsibility resting upon it; and while evil and designing ones are causing dissensions, how much more ought we to examine ourselves, and see if we possess the mind of Christ.

Dear brethren, are we one in Christ Jesus? Does the earnest of the Spirit [illegible] find fault with my brethren; but do you not too often insert the name friend for brother, "for out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." Jesus said, "I no longer call you friends but brethren." O for the boundless love of Christ! May our prayer ascend with his that we all may be one.

Concerning the church in Unionville, it is in a prosperous condition. Though small, the Lord meets with us, and the blessing comes. Bro. J. W. Crabtree labors among us.

Unionville, Ct.

From M. C——.

BRO. GRANT:—I would like to suggest a few thoughts in regard to our Bro. H. L. Hastings. I think if the readers of his works could but witness his self-sacrifice and labors, as I witnessed them on a recent visit, they would be moved upon to give in their mite, that he may be able to carry on his work. He puts his works so low, that he has not means to pay a clerk to assist him. I think the church needs his labors, and will be guilty if they let him sacrifice himself for want of means or rest. Praying he may be spared for further usefulness, Yours.

Danielsonville, Ct.

Obituary Notices.

Died, May 17th, in West Brattleboro, Vt., MILES GRANT, son of Charles G. and S. Jeannette Miller, aged sixteen months.

Bro. and Sr. M. are alone in that place as to the blessed hope. All their neighbors are ignorantly opposed to the Bible doctrine that have been so dear to them for a few years, and now still more so in this time of deep affliction. Their neighbors tried to comfort them by saying that the Lord had taken their little babe home to glory, etc.; but these were miserable comforters to them. They felt it a duty and a privilege to have the Bible doctrine of immortality through Christ at the resurrection preached at the funeral. As that was the first chance offered to them to get the Bible truth before their neighbors, they sent over sixty miles to get the one who did it. The truth was more precious to them than a few dollars of money. The people came out of respect or curiosity to hear a doctrine new to most of them. But few left before the services were over. There were all classes out. The blessed hope was a comfort to Bro and Sr. Miller; but it was thought by some an incredible thing for God to raise the dead. But God says, it is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption. 1 Cor 15: 42–49.

H. MUNGER.

Fell asleep May 10th, little H. W. BEECHER, aged ten months and two days.

Also on the 15th, little EDWARD E., aged two years five months and eighteen days, only children of Coarles and Sarah Dixon.

We are called to mourn. The cruel monster Death has invaded our home, and snatched from our embrace the ones we loved so dear. Their little footsteps and prattling voices are no longer heard; their laughing eyes are no longer seen about our household; we move around—the places they used to occupy are now vacant; they sleep on yonder hilltop, beneath the spreading branches of the weeping willow. We laid them there in hope that He who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me," would bye and bye wake them up and restore them to us, to die no more; not with the seeds of mortality about them, but with immortality glowing in every feature.

I had two gems of priceless worth,
Two lovely ones, so full of mirth,
I loved them more than all the earth,
Those darling ones.

I clasped them fondly to my breast,
I loved to have them on it rest,
No mortal more than I was blest
With loving ones.

Death came and snatched those gems away,
We laid them 'neath the cold, cold clay,
How beautiful in death were they,
Those blessed ones.

The morn of glory soon shall break
Upon our eyes, the loved awake,
Within our arms we then shall take
Our little ones.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

[Advices of the 12th.]

ITALY.

It is stated that fifty Savoyards recently attacked the Swiss Custom House on the frontier of Geneva, and shots were exchanged. The Swiss authorities had lodged a complaint at Turin.

Garibaldi's force, 2200 strong, embarked near Genoa in three steamers, at midnight of the 5th inst., for Sicily. One thousand were provided with arms, ammunition, etc. Nearly five thousand persons, of all ranks, flocked to the beach to bid them God speed. The enthusiasm of the troops at Genoa was so great, that it was necessary to confine them to their barracks to prevent their deserting to enroll themselves under Garibaldi.

Garibaldi had sanguine hopes of cutting out one of the Neapolitan frigates stationed as a watch upon his movements.

Medici, Garibaldi's lieutenant, was to start in a few days, with two thousand more volunteers. Garibaldi is said to have exchanged for gold 3,000,000 francs in notes at the Bank at Genoa.

It is stated that the expedition was not to land in Sicily, but to create a diversion in Calabria.

The headquarters of the Sicilian insurgents were at Cefalu, some fifteen leagues from Palermo. The royal troops had several times attacked this position, but were unsuccessful.

The latest reports are to the effect that Garibaldi had landed at Ortezza, in Calabria, and that an insurrectionary movement had taken place in Calabria.

Garibaldi took with him his only son and George Marin, only son of the illustrious defender of Venice.

TURKEY.

Reports are current of Russian intrigues in Turkey.

A strong Russian force is being concentrated on the river Pruth.

[illegible]

Paris, May 18. [illegible]

forming a second expedition for Sicily, for which 6000 volunteers have been already enrolled. There is great excitement at Genoa and Lombardy, from whence almost all the volunteers have come, but it is asserted that the government will be asked to prevent the departure of the expedition.

FOUR DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

[Arrival of the Palestine.]

Farther Point, May 28. Steamship Palestine, from Liverpool 16th, via Queenstown 17th, has passed this point en route to Quebec.

The news is interesting. Garibaldi, with over one thousand followers, had landed at Marsala under the fire of two Neapolitan frigates. One of Garibaldi's steamers was captured and the other was sunk. The volunteers who landed were, at the moment of the departure of the mails, fighting with the royal troops.

Col. Medici was forwarding preparations for a second expedition, and six thousand volunteers had already been enrolled.

It was asserted that diplomatic representations made to Piedmont would decide the government to prevent the departure of the second expedition. Great agitation prevailed at Naples and Palermo.

The intelligence respecting Garibaldi's movements is meagre and disconnected. It is asserted that he had landed at Marsala, but another statement was that although 5000 men had landed, it was uncertain whether Garibaldi was among them.

Official dispatches from Naples state that several fillibusters were killed at Marsala by the firing from Neapolitan frigates, which were off that place.

Other dispatches confirm the news of the disembarkation of Garibaldi, the capture of one of his steamers and the sinking of another. These steamers were not chartered by Garibaldi, but were forcibly seized by his followers. Garibaldi had published a letter in a Turin paper, excusing this act of his followers, on the ground that it was done in furtherance of the national cause. He had also issued a proclamation to the Italians, calling upon the inhabitants of the Marches, Umbria and Sabrini, and the Neapolitans, to revolt in order to divide the forces of the enemy; and another proclamation to the Romans, recalling to their minds the insurrection of '49, and urging them to a similar course.

Colonel Medici, the leader of Garibaldi's second expedition, had six thousand volunteers already enrolled.

Great agitation prevailed at Naples and Palermo. At the latter city, on the 13th, at the termination of mass, the people in the churches shouted, "Italy and Liberty forever!" In the evening, ten thousand people assembled on the promenade, where they were fired upon by the troops, and several were killed and wounded.

The latest dispatch from Turin says that four persons were killed at Marsala, while disembarking. The arms and ammunition were landed with safety.

The Governor of Sicily had prohibited the carrying of arms.

There was some excitement at Florence, owing to rumors that the Grand Duke intended making an attempt to recover his power. The garrisons had been reinforced, and the National Guard called out. A portion of the clergy of Florence had refused to chant Te Deum, as ordered by the authorities.

ARRIVAL OF STEAMSHIP ARABIA.

HALIFAX, May 28. The Cunard steamship Arabia, from Liverpool 19th and Queenstown 20th, arrived at this port en route for Boston.

Intelligence relative to Garibaldi's expedition is still meager, and conflicting reports generally concur in stating that he was making good progress. Some say that he had captured the most important positions in Sicily, except Messina and Palermo. After his landing at Marsala, the Neapolitan war vessels bombarded that town without warning. British vessels interfered for the protection of English residents.

An important announcement is made, via. Madrid, that the King of Naples had applied for foreign intervention.

Among other questionable rumors was one that a treaty, offensive and defensive, had been concluded between Naples, Rome, Austria and all deposed Italian sovereigns.

It is privately asserted that the French army in Rome has received orders to evacuate that city.

It is said that the Sardinian government has ordered the garrisons in Central Italy to march rapidly forward toward the Pontifical frontier.

At the latest dates, Garibaldi's forces were moving on Palermo.

The French fleet was about to sail for the Levant.

"Watchman, what of the Night?"

BY MRS. SARAH H. BROWN.

Watchmen on the walls of Zion,
Men of wisdom, men of might,
Read the dial-plate of heaven,
And reveal the time of night!

Hangs there on the sky no token
Which portends a rising day;
Shall we slumber on our couches
Till all darkness flees away?

If our Master finds us sleeping
When he bade us watch and pray,
How can we with welcome greet him,
Or prepare his feet a way?

Lift your voices high to warn us,
While in ease we may repose;
Give a signal for our waking,
Lest we share the fate of foes!

If you see no danger threaten,
Still the time you can proclaim;
Should you fail in this commission,
On whose souls must rest the blame?

Why appointed to be watchmen,
If you cannot give reply
To our fears, which break our dreaming
Of a judgment drawing nigh?

Hark! from every tongue and nation
Come the stifled cries for light;
Watchmen on the walls of Zion,
Tell, oh tell the time of night!

The Dangerous Tendency of a Hard Heart.

"Today, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts."

To hardness of heart, or want of proper feeling, may be attributed the principle cause of human wo; for the reason that when there is a desire in the heart, a will or inclination to perform that which is good, we seldom fail to accomplish it, because every power is brought into action, and all our energies made subservient to the performance of the desired object. In order, therefore, to enjoy anything which we know to be beneficial, or necessary, all opposition to the same must be removed; else our labor would become tedious and irksome when it should be interesting and pleasant. Also, a full and implicit confidence in what we are about to espouse, is indispensable; otherwise we should place but little or no estimate upon it, and therefore our endeavors to secure it would be feeble and inefficient.

The Apostle informs us that God was not well pleased with the children of Israel, because of the hardness of their hearts, which was the primary cause of all their rebellion. Although they were his peculiar people, "to whom pertained the adoption, the glory, and the covenants, the giving of the law, the service of God, and the promises;" and with an high hand, and an outstretched arm, he had brought them out of their bitter bondage, led them in the way to the promised rest, during which time they saw his wonder-working power; he fed them with manna from heaven, and satisfied them with water from the rock; "he was their shade by day, and their light by night," their "present help in time of trouble." Notwithstanding all this display of parental goodness, they became hardened, and would not listen to his counsel. "Wherefore the Lord was grieved with that people, and sware in his wrath, that they should not enter into his rest"

We are informed on the sacred page, that what was written aforetime, was written for our example; and the apostle in his great solicitude for the human family, while retrospecting the conduct of his brethren, would urge us by their fearful example to take heed, "lest there be in any of us an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God;" but exhort one another daily while it is called to-day, "lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin." What a motive for watchfulness! Could he, with all his wisdom, have selected another quite so strong —the deceitfulness of sin? Who, alas! has not been led astray by its siren voice, its delusive pleasure. Many thousands among the professed votaries of Christ, while listening to its honied words of unbelief, have made shipwreck of faith, and like Ephraim of old, being joined to their idols, they have been left alone.

Hardness of heart may be engendered in many ways. It is not only those who are outbreaking in their crimes and regardless of consequences, who possess a hard heart, and are less susceptible of divine impressions than others, but frequently those who profess to maintain a strict system of morality, are often as virtually hardened in their affections and sympathies, and are as deaf to truth and its requirements, as those who appear indifferent and perfectly reckless. Hence, the omission of duty as well as the commission of crime, if continued, will always result in a hard and impenitent heart. And it is to be feared that very many in the last great day of account, when their eyes shall be opened to their true condition before God, will view their condemnation just in the record kept of their omissions in duty, without the addition of the crimes perpetrated during their probation on earth. The case of the poor man who fell among thieves, as recorded in the holy Oracles, will illustrate this point. The priest and Levite saw his prostrate form, his mangled body and flowing blood, with life almost extinct, and though they only looked on and did not add further insult or abuse, but simply passed by on the other side, leaving him to die alone in his blood, yet when the great Arbitrator of human life came to sit in counsel upon their negative conduct, and contrast it with the good Samaritan, who bound up his wounds, set him upon his own beast and brought him to the inn, and staid with him for a period of two days, they were weighed in the balance and found wanting, being unable to stand the scrutinizing glance of him who had said, "As ye would that others should do unto you, do ye even so to them." Thus a failure to obey what our heavenly Father has required at our hands will forever close the pearly gates of the golden city, to any and all who would climb up any other way than through the atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Then if a hard heart is so dangerous in its consequences, so unfavorable to the reception of the kind and loving invitations of the gospel, would it not be the part of wisdom, to cease our rebellion, and at once, even to-day, after so long a time harden not our heart, lest we should come short of entering into his rest; but now while the golden bells of the gospel continue to ring forth the note of welcome to perishing sinners, come to the banquet of love, the soul-reviving feast, accessible to every penitent heart on the easy terms of repentance toward God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ. The New Birth.

So much has been said already on this subject that it would seem unnecessary to add more at this time; but I think we have heard mostly upon one side, while, like some other controverted points, this question has two sides, in that both sides are partly right. I do not wish to be understood as urging that the Scriptures are "yea and nay" on this point, nor that they are so ambiguous as to be apparently so; but that we have sufficient reasons from scripture usage to call the moral change which takes place at conversion a birth, as well as the physical which takes place at the resurrection by the same name.

Brethren generally, or at least many of them, have thought that the several New Testament writers, in speaking of the change at conversion, would be likely to express it by the same or synonymous terms; and so also of the change at the resurrection; and since these two changes are indispensable in order to our complete redemption, and the terms "begotten" and "born" are frequently used by these writers to express this work of redemption; it is claimed that begotten, or a synonymous term, is the proper one to express the change at conversion, and born, or its synonym, should express the change at the resurrection.

If this be so, the variations from this rule in our version (King James) must be either a fault of the translators, or a corruption of the original manuscripts. But that the fault is not in the translators must be evident from various ineffectual attempts to make apparent this supposed harmony by reference to the original text; while to suppose that the manuscripts have been corrupted since, would be as dangerous to the foundation of the christian's hope in general, as it would be serviceable to this particular notion.

We will now inquire what saith the scripture? Admitting that the term "begotten" is sometimes applied to conversion, and "born" to the resurrection, I shall not attempt to support it by reference to scripture testimony; but notice some of the reasons why conversion may also be called a "birth." "But as many as received him to them gave he power (right or privilege—margin) to become the sons of God: even to them who believe on his name. Which were born," etc.—John 1:12, 13. "Being born again, not of corruptible seed but incorruptible, by the word of God"—1 Pet. 1:23. "Whosoever is born of God"—1 John 3:9. "Every one that doeth righteousness is born of him."—1 John 2:29. "Every one that loveth is born of God."—1 John 4:7. "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God."—1 John 5:1. I think it will be granted that each of these texts must have their application this side of the resurrection, and are used to express the change at conversion.

But I have another class of texts whose support is no less clear, though inferential; as, "He that is in Christ is a new creature." If it is proper to call a converted man "a new creature," may we not point to his conversion as a new birth, or does he become a new creature without a birth? As we are to "put off the old man" and "put on the new man," does not this demand a change analagous to birth? Can we become "children of God by faith" except we have a birth? Since we are to be "crucified with Christ," does there not seem a necessity for a new birth in order to life? Does not Peter speak of some as holding the relation of "new born babes"? Does not Paul speak of those who are unskillful in the word of righteousness, as needing milk, for the reason that "he is a babe"? Does he not speak of "babes in Christ" and those who "are of full age"; and of the "perfect man, the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ"?

Another, and a weighty objection to the exclusive application of the term birth to the resurrection, is, that it would materially underrate the importance which the Scriptures attach to conversion; for if this change is not to be regarded in any sense as a birth, a convert cannot be urged to maintain the character of "a new creature," —"new man,"—not even "a babe in Christ."

From these considerations I think it both scriptural and proper to call conversion a birth; nor do I think it improper to call the resurrection by the same name. I do not discover that necessity for an absolute uniformity of expression here which is urged by some, but regarding conversion as a complete moral change, it may be called, when considered in itself, a birth, and when we regard it as being sealed by the Spirit, awaiting that final change at the resurrection, we may speak of it as being begotten. But there can be no arbitrary rules in the choice of these terms from the nature of them nor from scripture usage, hence in using them as figures of speech our preferences may vary somewhat according to our tastes. "I have trodden the Wine-press Alone!"

From the blush of the morning till evening's dark shade,
No heart-throbs beat time to my own;
In sunshine, in shadow, in joy and in grief,
"I have trodden the wine-press alone!"

No lips of a father spoke warning to me,
No mother's were pressed to my own;
No brotherly counsel, no sisterly love,—
"I have trodden the wine-press alone!"

I cannot remember my mother—she's dead!
O'er her pillow the grass has long grown;
She died ere remembrance had graven her form,
"And I've trodden the wine-press alone!"

My brother and sister lie 'neath the blue wave,
Where the treasures of ocean are strown;
My father long since has laid down to his rest,—
"I have trodden the wine-press alone!"

When strangers address me, how chilling their words,
No kindness wells up in their tone;
Affection's sweet love-words have never been mine,—
"I have trodden the wine-press alone!"

From the lowliest peasant that toils for his bread,
To the monarch that sits on the throne,
There breathes not a soul I can claim as a friend,
"I have trodden the wine press alone!"

The sorrow of mourning the loved and the lost
Is a sorrow I never have known,
For we never can lose what we never possessed,
And "I've trodden the wine-press alone!"

In summer there nestled a dove in my breast,
But when winter came on it had flown;
True friendship's unchanging, she ne'er was my friend,
And "I've trodden the wine-press alone!"

The floweret so lovely that bloomed on the hill,
I plucked it and called it my own;
Alas! then it withered, its fragrance was gone,—
"I have trodden the wine-press alone!"

There may be true friendship existing on earth,
But to me it has never been shown;
And though many, too many, have called themselves friends,
Yet "I've trodden the wine-press alone!"

The chords of communion may fetter some hearts,
But round mine they have never been thrown;
None smile when I smile, and none weep when I weep,—
"I have trodden the wine-press alone!"

No warning in danger, no counsel in doubt,
No comfort in sorrow I've known;
No kindness ere pictured my failings to me,—
"I have trodden the wine-press alone!"

Though a hypocrite world has bowed down at my shrine,
Where its praises were lavishly strown,
I have proved it all empty, all hollow, all vain,
And "I've trodden the wine-press alone!"

Our sword-points must turn on one half of mankind,
If the rest as our friends we would own;
And as selfishness lies at the root of all love,
"I have trodden the wine-press alone!"

O scorners, remember my life was not fraught
With the brightness that gilded your own;
Remember no hand ever steadied my course,—
"I have trodden the wine-press alone!"

And when I am dead there'll be no one to weep,
Not a sob will be heard, not a moan;
No friend in my life, and no friend in my death,—
"I have trodden the wine-press alone!"

For the Crisis.

"But They are not Grieved for the Affliction of Joseph."

Who that has read the history of Joseph, has not felt the sympathies of his heart gush forth in flowing tears for the sorrows of him who was separated from his brethren, the child of fond parents, cherished with peculiar care by his aged father, in the prospect that his bud of promise would at length bloom into vigorous manhood, and finally become the stay and staff of his declining years. But alas for earthly hopes and human expectations! The anxious concern, and glowing affection of the delighted father towards his darling child only served to make him the subject of envy by his older brethren. And in process of time, while kindly searching after the welfare of his father's sons, in obedience to his command, they lifted up their eyes and saw him in the distance, and felt the time had come when they could destroy the object of their hatred. But Reuben, more alive to the ties of consanguinity and the anguish that would rend the bosom of his aged parent when the mournful tidings should reach him, sought to deliver him out of their hands, and for this purpose placed him in a pit until he could effect his further rescue.

But how insatiable is human power, when coupled with hatred and envy. Still intent on their wicked purpose, while in the absence of Reuben a company of Ishmaelites passed that way from Gilead to Egypt, the youthful Joseph was lifted from the pit, and sold to them as a slave for twenty pieces of silver.

Thus is recorded the first and only instance of involuntary servitude in the Bible, one too that was afterwards visited with fearful retribution on the heads of the perpetrators. But in the view of modern slaveholders, it would have been considered a just sale, and that the Ishmaelites had a perfect right to dispose of their property according to their pleasure. Joseph, however, looked upon the transaction very differently, for afterward, when referring to his history, while in prison with Pharaoh's chief butler, he says,—"For indeed I was stolen away out of the land of the Hebrews, and here also have I done nothing that they should put me into this dungeon." But as God does, and will, overrule all things for his own glory, so he did in this case; he was with Joseph, and gave him favor with Pharaoh, and in the eyes of the people, and in process of time he became Governor of the land, and in the providence of God saved his brethren and aged father from the famine that swept like a besom of destruction before them.

But as we have only given a faint outline of Joseph's history, we will leave the reader to its further perusal in the sacred oracles, and proceed for a moment to notice the oppression that quickly followed; for as wicked men wrought wickedly then in violating the just and equitable laws of God, so they do now; and will continue to do until the Lord shall come the second time without sin unto salvation to all those who love his appearing, but with wrath and righteous indignation to those who know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

When the king of Egypt died, a new king was set up, who thought to deal wisely with the children of Israel by making them bond-men and bond-women, and setting task masters over them to afflict them with burdens. "And the children of Israel sighed by reason of the bondage, and they cried, and their cry came up to God, and God remembered his covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. And the Lord said, I have surely seen the affliction of my people which are in Egypt, and have heard their cry by reason of their taskmasters: for I know their sorrows." This, as it was then, so it is now, the only hope of the slave. And for this purpose God raised up Moses to effect their deliverance, and commissioned him to go in before that wicked king, and entreat him to let his people go. But as with the hardened slaveholder now who clings to his trembling victims with an iron grasp, so did Pharaoh of old cling to the children of Israel, and only increased their burdens, and made them serve with greater rigor. But he that was for them was greater than they that were against them. And very soon, according to the prediction of Joseph, that "God would surely visit his people," did the Lord bring them out with an "high hand and an outstretched arm," and parted the Red Sea, causing them to pass over on dry land, which the Egyptians, essaying to do in their pursuit after them, were consumed.

And now we would ask what is the moral deducible from their history? Is it that the righteous Lord will look upon the slavery of four millions of human beings within the borders of our own beloved America with complacency? Will the wailings of his oppressed children upon a southern plantation, as they sigh and cry beneath the driver's lash, fail to reach his holy ear? Will the sorrows, suffering, separations from all they hold dear, and tortures even unto death cease to affect his holy heart? Or will he in his infinite compassion raise up a Moses unto them? "Consider it, take advice, and speak your minds."—Bible. M. A. T.

The Preparation.

If we would grow in grace, and have a more lively hope, we must seek more preparedness for Christ's second coming. I know no doctrine more sanctifying and quickening than the doctrine of Christ's second advent. I know none more calculated to draw us from the world, and make us single-eyed, whole-hearted, and joyful christians. But alas! how few believers live like men who wait for their Master's return! Who that narrowly observes the ways of many believers would ever think that they loved and longed for their Lord's appearing? Is it not true that there are many hearts among God's children which are not quite ready to receive Jesus? He would find the window barred,—the door shut,—the fires almost out,—it would be a cold and comfortless reception. Oh! believing reader, it ought not so to be. We want more of a pilgrim's spirit;—we ought to be ever looking for and hastening to our home. The day of the Lord's advent is the day of rest, the day of complete redemption, the day when the family of God shall at last be all gathered together. It is the day when we shall no longer walk by faith, but by sight;—we shall [illegible] and that in the [illegible] we shall behold the King in his beauty. Surely we ought to be saying daily, "Come, Lord Jesus, let thy kingdom come." Oh! let us set Christ's advent continually before our eyes. Let us say to ourselves every morning, "The Lord will soon return," and it will be good for our souls.—Ryle.

The World for Sale.

The world for sale! Hang out the sign,
Call every traveler here to me;
Who'll buy this brave estate of mine,
And set me from earth's bondage free?
'Tis going!—yes, I mean to fling
The bauble from my soul away;
I'll sell it, whatsoe'er it bring—
The world at auction here to-day!

It is a glorious thing to see,
Ah! it has cheated me so sore!
It is not what it seems to be:
For sale! It shall be mine no more.
Come, turn it o'er and view it well,
I would not have you purchase dear;
'Tis going—going! I must sell!
Who bids? Who'll buy the Splendid Tear?

Here's Wealth in glittering heaps of gold,
Who bids? but let me tell you fair,
A baser lot was never sold;
Who'll buy the heavy heaps of care?
And here, spread out in broad domain,
A goodly landscape all may trace;
Hall, cottage, tree, field, hill and plain;
Who'll buy himself a burial-place?

Here's Love—the dreamy, potent spell
That beauty flings around the heart!
I know its power, alas, too well!
'Tis going! Love and I must part!
Must part! What can I more with Love?
All over the enchanter's reign!
Who'll buy the plumeless dying dove,
An hour of Bliss—an age of Pain?

And Friendship—rarest gem of earth,
(Whoe'er hath found the jewel his?)
Frail, fickle, false, and little worth,
Who bids for Friendship—as it is?
'Tis GOING!—GOING! Hear the call;
Once, twice, and thrice! 'Tis very low!
'Twas once my hope, my stay, my all,
But now the broken staff must go!

Ambition, Fashion, Show and Pride—
I part from all forever now;
Grief, in an overwhelming tide,
Has taught my heart to bow.
Poor heart! distracted, ah, so long,
And still its aching throb to bear;
How broken, that was once so strong;
How heavy, once so free from care!

No more for me life's fitful dream;
Bright vision, vanishing away!
My barque requires a deeper stream,
My sinking soul a surer stay.
By death, stern sheriff! all bereft,
I weep, yet humbly kiss the rod;
The best of all I still have left,
My Faith, my Bible, and my God!

—Ralph Hoyt.

Divine Goodness.

All the things that make father sweet to the ear—namely, patience in wrong, gentleness in reproof, helpfulness in extremity; all the things that make the child's heart beat quick when it thinks of mother; all the things that go to make father and mother dear—all these things, instead of being less in God, are so much more in Him that it is almost a shame to call him by the name of Father, it is so poor a name to our meaning. People say —they feel if they do not say—with reference to earthly parents, "They will take care of me, and if I do wrong they will punish me for my good;" but when they think of God, they say, "Oh! that is God, and I must not expect Him to do so." Why? Do you suppose your father and mother are better to you than God is?—Do you suppose they can have as much patience with you, and suffer as much for you as God? The mystery of Christ's death is to unfold God's willingness to suffer as much and as long as is necessary to rear a soul to glory. All that a good father and mother will do for you, you should not take away from your idea of God, but you should endeavor to realize that He will do far more for you than they can.—H. W. Beecher.

Revival in Scotland.

"In the course of last summer, a young American student came over to spend his vacation in Europe. He had been actively engaged in the American Revival, and threw himself with great ardor into the work then going on in Ireland. After visiting Germany and Switzerland, he set sail for New York; but on the passage the vessel struck upon an iceberg and was wrecked. Being thus prevented from returning to America in time to resume his academic studies at the commencement of the session, he decided to spend the winter in Edinburgh. He enrolled himself as a student in the New College, and as his attention had been somewhat diverted from scholastic pursuits in America, by attention to evangelistic works, he determined to devote himself in Edinburgh exclusively to the study of books.

But very soon the thought came powerfully into his mind, I might at least be doing something to warn and rescue perishing souls.

The very day on which he decided to modify his former resolve, he was introduced to Rev. Dr. W. L. Alexander.

He asked the Doctor if he could find him any work to do. After making some inquiry as to his experience and capabilities, the Doctor said—'There is the Congregational chapel in Musselburgh, which is without a minister, and almost deserted, suppose you go down and see what can be done there.' He consented, and Dr. Alexander having gone down to Musselburgh, and secured the consent of the few remaining members of the church, Mr. H. entered on his new sphere of labor.

By little and little the congregation increased, interest was excited, meetings were commenced in the week, inquirers remained behind for conversation, and about two months ago it became evident that the Spirit of God was moving on the face of the waters, and saying, 'Let there be light.'

The first seal of Mr. H.'s ministry was a young man; others speedily followed, and these young converts have been untiring in their zeal and indefatigable in their exertions to bring others to hear the gospel and to find peace in Jesus. Christian people of different denominations have cordially co-operated with Mr. H. in conversing with the anxious and watching over those recently converted. The excellent missionary, supported by Lady Mary Oswald and other ladies, has thrown himself with great ardor into the movement; and Lady Mary herself is constant in her attendance and unremitting in her efforts to rescue the careless, the ignorant, and the degraded.

For more than two months the meetings have been held every night, and the chapel is always full and sometimes crowded. Mr. H. has the names of more than a hundred who have come to him in deep anxiety, of many of whom he is most hopeful; and there are others, not a few, who have been impressed and led to thought, whose names it has not been possible to record. An elder of one of the Presbyterian churches in the town, has stated that he knows of at least thirty in that church who have received serious impressions, or been savingly converted in consequence of these meetings.

Here, as elsewhere, many children have been aroused, and of some of these we are able to speak confidently as rejoicing in simple faith in Jesus. These lambs meet together for prayer, and go forth into the harvest-field to glean, if not to reap. One of them got beside a woman at the inquiry-meeting and asked her to pray. The woman said she could not, and then the little girl said she would pray. With childish simplicity, but with true spiritual fervor, she poured forth her soul unto God, and when they rose the woman was in tears. 'Oh lassie,' she said, 'wha taught ye to pray in that gait?' 'Deed,' the lassie replied, 'I canna tell, but I think the Lord just puts it into me.' Now, as in David's time, it it true, that 'out of the mouth of babes and sucklings God perfecteth praise.'"—London Patriot.

Losses by Religion.

Near London there dwelt an old couple. In early life they had been poor; but the husband became a christian, and God blessed their industry, and they were living in a comfortable retirement, when one day a stranger called on them to ask their subscription to a charity. The old lady had less religion than her husband, and still hankered after some of the Sabbath earnings and easy shillings which Thomas had forfeited from regard to the law of God. So, when the visitor asked their contributions, she interposed and said,

"Why, sir, we have lost a deal by religion since we first began; my husband knows that very well. Have we not, Thomas?"

After a solemn pause, Thomas answered, "Yes, Mary, we have. Before I got religion, Mary, I had an old slouched hat, a tattered coat, and mended shoes and stockings; but I have lost them long ago. And, Mary, you know that, poor as I was, I had a habit of getting drunk and quarrelling with you; and that, you know, I have lost. And then I had a burdened conscience and a wicked heart, and ten thousand guilty fears; but all are lost, completely lost, and, like a millstone, cast into the deepest sea. And, Mary, you have been a loser too, though not so great a loser as myself. Before we got religion, Mary, you had a washing-tray, in which you washed for hire; but since then you have lost your washing-tray. And you had a gown and bonnet much the worse for wear; but you have lost them long ago. And you had many an aching heart concerning me at times; but these you happily have lost. And I could even wish that you had lost as much as I have lost; for what we lose for religion will be an everlasting gain."

The inventory of losses by religion runs thus: A bad character, a guilty conscience, a troublesome temper, sundry evil habits, and a set of wicked companions. The inventory of blessings gained by religion includes all that is worth having in time and eternity.—Ex.

THE DIVINE JUDGMENT.

The Children's Prayer Meeting.

"This evening the children will have a prayer meeting." Thus I was told upon arrival at the pastor's house. It was for me glad news. I had traveled all day that I might reach the pleasant village where formerly I lived, and in whose central school-house, in capacity of Principal, I taught several successive terms.

How well I remembered those scholars! I watched their progress in knowledge. I had prayed for them. I had talked with them of the love of Jesus, and urged them to yield him their greatful service and loving hearts. But weeks rolled by, and the last day of school came, with the saddening reflection that perhaps not one amid the youthful group was a follower of the Savior. Then parting words were spoken, and many a tearful farewell uttered, for the teacher was leaving, and they knew not if ever they should meet again.

Three seasons passed away, and in the spring a revival of religion occurred, encouraging the faith of God's people and cheering the pastor's heart. Among the number who shared its precious influences were many of my former pupils. I longed to see them, and hear from their own lips what God had done for their souls.

A cordial welcome met me from the pastor's family, and many warm greetings from the children, who soon came pouring in, eager to testify that their former teacher was not forgotten.

"Shall we walk down by the shore?" The children all agreed to the proposal, and so we started. "But can we return in season for our meeting?" they inquired anxiously. "Surely we will." "And may your teacher come into your meeting?" "Oh, certainly," they all reply. So with pleasant talk of former days, we took our way down by the stream, and along the margin of the lake, till the shadows of evening began to gather, when we returned [illegible] clock struck seven. The doors of the vestry were open, and we passed in, making part of the youthful gathering.

Now each is in her place, and all is still. With one accord they kneel, and a sweet voice, with low, clear utterance, is heard in prayer for the blessing of God on themselves, and in behalf of parents and brothers, and schoolmates and teacher. Another voice and another followed, interspersed with hymns, till each one in that kneeling circle had joined in the devotion. A few words of christian counsel were added and the service closed.

How pleasing is early piety! How lovely consecrated childhood! There was that group of girls, whose ages were from twelve to sixteen years, and more than twenty in number, choosing, like Mary, the "better part," and happy in their early choice, because prepared for usefulness in their heavenly Father's service here, or, if early called hence, prepared for peaceful slumber, and joyous awakening in his glorious presence above.

What do the Birds Say?

Do you ask what the birds say? The sparrow and dove,
The linnet and thrush, say, "I love and I love."
In the winter they're silent,—the wind is so strong;
What it says I don't know, but it sings a loud song.
But green leaves, and blossoms, and sunny warm weather,
And singing, and loving, all come back together;
But the lark is so brimfull of gladness and love,
The green fields below him, the blue sky above,
That he sings, and he sings, and forever sings he,—
"I love my love, and my love loves me!"

A Word to the Little Folks.

ABOUT DARKNESS.

Dark, little folks? Well, suppose it is dark as Egypt, can't God see in the dark, even darkness that can be felt; see right through every nook and corner of your heart? To be sure he can, there is not a thought escapes His omniscient eye. He knows your inmost soul. What—sin in the dark, because it is dark! Dare you little folks or great folks? You may escape the eye of man, but God's eye never. His eyes go to and fro everywhere with lightning flash!

Sin anywhere, on your bed, in the secret chamber;—sin where you will,—little sins or great sins; sins of the flesh or the spirit, thought, word or deed: be sure they find you out. Some little folks, and some great folks, sin in the dark, under cover of night, "loving darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil."

"The murderer rising with the light, killeth the poor and needy, and in the night is as the thief."

Hark again: "The eye also of the adulterer waiteth for the twilight, saying, no eye shall see me—and disguiseth his face."

"In darkness they dig through houses which they have marked for themselves, in the day-time: they know not the light."

"Woe unto them that seek deep to hide their council from the Lord, and their works are in the dark, ... for they say, the Lord seeth us not." Remember, friends, there is not a word in our tongue but that the Lord knows it altogether. Says the Psalmist: "Whither shall I go from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there. If I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea: even there thy right hand shall hold me. If I say, surely the darkness shall cover me: even the night shall be light about me. Yea, the darkness hideth not from thee, but the night shineth as the day: the darkness and the light are both alike to thee." See Psalm 139.

Oh! what a fearful thing to sin against such a God.

Furthermore remember, aside from the shame, guilt and wretchedness here, on account of our sins, there's a fearful judgment awaiting every sinner. Every one, great and small, must soon stand before the judgment-seat of Christ; where every one must give account to God for the deeds done in the body, whether good or evil. There, at the great day, all our secret sins,—sins of the deepest dye, even the works of darkness of which it is a shame to speak,—will be spread out to the open gaze of an assembled universe.

"Could we, on morning's swiftest wings,
Fly through the trackless air,
Or dive beneath deep ocean's springs,
Thy presence would be there.

In vain may guilt attempt to fly,
Concealed by darkest night,
One glance from thy all-piercing eye
Can bring it all to light.

Search thou our hearts, and there destroy
Each secret bosom sin,
And fit us for those realms of joy,
'That we may enter in.'

THE CRISIS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION,

Payable in Advance.

For a single copy one year	$1.00
For a single copy 6 months	.50
For a single copy 3 months	.30
Five copies to one address for 6 months	2.00
Ten copies to one address for 6 months	3.50
Twenty copies to one address, 6 months	15.00
Thirty copies to one address, 6 months	22.00

By the above arrangement, a single copy will be sent for 3 months for 30 cts., which will bring the paper within reach of all who are able to make any payment at all.

The price of five or more copies is reduced in proportion to the number sent to one address; so that, in places where there is a company of Brn., they may, by combining together, receive a large number at a low price, which will enable them to supply the poor within their own neighborhood.

Our proposition is, that all who have ability, when sending in the amount of their subscriptions, should send as much in addition to their subscriptions as they are willing to give, for circulating the Crisis among the poor, which we all ought to feel under obligations to do.

Particular Rules for Correspondents.—Over all matters not intended for publication, write Private.

Over all communications for the paper, write For the Crisis.

Over all business matters, write Business.

All who wish to receive the Crisis, should, in writing to this office, name the town, county and State in which they reside, and direct to Eld. Miles Grant, Boston, Mass.

The postage on the Crisis, if paid quarterly or yearly, at the office where it is received, will be 13 cents a year to any part of Massachusetts, and 26 cents to any other part of the United States.

"Watchman, what of the Night?"

BY MRS. SARAH H. BROWN.

Watchmen on the walls of Zion,
Men of wisdom, men of might,
Read the dial-plate of heaven,
And reveal the time of night!

Hangs there on the sky no token
Which portends a rising day;
Shall we slumber on our couches
Till all darkness flees away?

If our Master finds us sleeping
When he bade us watch and pray,
How can we with welcome greet him,
Or prepare his feet a way?

Lift your voices high to warn us,
While in ease we may repose;
Give a signal for our waking,
Lest we share the fate of foes!

If you see no danger threaten,
Still the time you can proclaim;
Should you fail in this commission,
On whose souls must rest the blame?

Why appointed to be watchmen,
If you cannot give reply
To our fears, which break our dreaming
Of a judgment drawing nigh?

Hark! from every tongue and nation
Come the stifled cries for light;
Watchmen on the walls of Zion,
Tell, oh tell the time of night!

The Dangerous Tendency of a Hard Heart.

"To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts."

To hardness of heart, or want of proper feeling, may be attributed the principle cause of human wo; for the reason that when there is a desire in the heart, a will or inclination to perform that which is good, we seldom fail to accomplish it, because every power is brought into action, and all our energies made subservient to the performance of the desired object. In order, therefore, to enjoy anything which we know to be beneficial, or necessary, all opposition to the same must be removed; else our labor would become tedious and irksome when it should be interesting and pleasant. Also, a full and implicit confidence in what we are about to espouse, is indispensable; otherwise we should place but little or no estimate upon it, and therefore our endeavors to secure it would be feeble and inefficient.

The Apostle informs us that God was not well pleased with the children of Israel, because of the hardness of their hearts, which was the primary cause of all their rebellion. Although they were his peculiar people, "to whom pertained the adoption, the glory, and the covenants, the giving of the law, the service of God, and the promises;" and with an high hand, and an outstretched arm, he had brought them out of their bitter bondage, led them in the way to the promised rest, during which time they saw his wonder-working power, he fed them with manna from heaven, and satisfied them with water from the rock, "he was their shade by day, and their light by night," their "present help in time of trouble." Notwithstanding all this display of parental goodness, they became hardened, and would not listen to his counsel. "Wherefore the Lord was grieved with that people, and sware in his wrath, that they should not enter into his rest."

We are informed on the sacred page, that what was written aforetime, was written for our example; and the apostle in his great solicitude for the human family, while retrospecting the conduct of his brethren, would urge us by their fearful example to take heed, "lest there be in any of us an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God," but exhort one another daily while it is called to-day, "lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin." What a motive for watchfulness! Could he, with all his wisdom, have selected another quite so strong —the deceitfulness of sin? Who, alas! has not been led astray by its siren voice, its delusive pleasure. Many thousands among the professed votaries of Christ, while listening to its honied words of unbelief, have made shipwreck of faith, and like Ephraim of old, being joined to their idols, they have been left alone.

Hardness of heart may be engendered in many ways. It is not only those who are outbreaking in their crimes and regardless of consequences, who possess a hard heart, and are less susceptible of divine impressions than others, but frequently those who profess to maintain a strict system of morality, are often as virtually hardened in their affections and sympathies, and are as deaf to truth and its requirements, as those who appear indifferent and perfectly reckless. Hence, the omission of duty as well as the commission of crime, if continued, will always result in a hard and impenitent heart. And it is to be feared that very many in the last great day of account, when their eyes shall be opened to their true condition before God, will view their condemnation just in the record kept of their omissions in duty, without the addition of the crimes perpetrated during their probation on earth. The case of the poor man who fell among thieves, as recorded in the holy Oracles, will illustrate this point. [illegible] other side, leaving him to die alone in his blood, yet when the great Arbitrator of human life came to sit in counsel upon their negative conduct, and contrast it with the good Samaritan, who bound up his wounds, set him upon his own beast and brought him to the inn, and staid with him for a period of two days, they were weighed in the balance and found wanting, being unable to stand the scrutinizing glance of him who had said, "As ye would that others should do unto you, do ye even so to them." Thus a failure to obey what our heavenly Father has required at our hands will forever close the pearly gates of the golden city, to any and all who would climb up any other way than through the atonement of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Then if a hard heart is so dangerous in its consequences, so unfavorable to the reception of the kind and loving invitations of the gospel, would it not be the part of wisdom, to cease our rebellion, and at once, even to-day, after so long a time harden not our heart, lest we should come short of entering into his rest, but now while the golden bells of the gospel continue to ring forth the note of welcome to perishing sinners, come to the banquet of love, the soul-reviving feast, accessible to every penitent heart on the easy terms of repentance toward God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ.

The New Birth.

So much has been said already on this subject that it would seem unnecessary to add more at this time, but I think we have heard mostly upon one side, while, like some other controverted points, this question has two sides, in that both sides are partly right. I do not wish to be understood as urging that the Scriptures are "yea and nay" on this point, nor that they are so ambiguous as to be apparently so, but that we have sufficient reasons from scripture usage to call the moral change which takes place at conversion a birth, as well as the physical which takes place at the resurrection by the same name.

Brethren generally, or at least many of them, have thought that the several New Testament writers, in speaking of the change at conversion, would be likely to express it by the same or synonymous terms, and so also of the change at the resurrection, and since these two changes are indispensable in order to our complete redemption, and the terms "begotten" and "born" are frequently used by these writers to express this work of redemption, it is claimed that begotten, or a synonymous term, is the proper one to express the change at conversion, and born or its synonym, should express the change at the resurrection.

If this be so, the variations from this rule in our version (King James) must be either a fault of the translators, or a corruption of the original manuscripts. But that the fault is not in the translators must be evident from various ineffectual attempts to make apparent this supposed harmony by reference to the original text; while to suppose that the manuscripts have been corrupted since, would be as dangerous to the foundation of the christian's hope in general, as it would be serviceable to this particular notion.

We will now inquire what saith the scripture? Admitting that the term "begotten" is sometimes applied to conversion, and "born" to the resurrection, I shall not attempt to support it by reference to scripture testimony, but notice some of the reasons why conversion may also be called a "birth." "But as many as received him to them gave he power (right or privilege—margin) to become the sons of God even to them who believe on his name. Which were born," etc.—John 1: 12, 13. "Being born again, not of corruptible seed but incorruptible, by the word of God"—1 Pet. 1: 23. "Whosoever is born of God"—1 John 3: 9. "Every one that doeth righteousness is born of him."—1 John 2: 29. "Every one that loveth is born of God."—1 John 4: 7. "Whosoever believeth that Jesus is the Christ is born of God."—1 John 5: 1. I think it will be granted that each of these texts must have their application this side of the resurrection, and are used to express the change at conversion.

But I have another class of texts whose support is no less clear, though inferential; as, "He that is in Christ is a new creature." If it is proper to call a converted man "a new creature," may we not point to his conversion as a new birth, or does he become a new creature without a birth? As we are to "put off the old man" and "put on the new man," does not this demand a change analagous to birth? Can we become "children of God by faith" except we have a birth? Since we are to be "crucified with Christ," does there not seem a necessity for a new birth in order to life? Does not Peter speak of some as holding the relation of "new born babes"? Does not Paul speak of those who are unskillful in the word of righteousness, as needing milk, for the reason that "he is a babe"? Does he not speak of "babes in Christ" and those who are "of full age" and of the "perfect man, the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ." [illegible]

Another, and a weighty objection to the exclusive application of the term birth to the resurrection, is, that it would materially underrate the importance which the Scriptures attach to conversion; for if this change is not to be regarded in any sense as a birth, a convert cannot be urged to maintain the character of "a new creature," —"new man,"—not even "a babe in Christ."

From these considerations I think it both scriptural and proper to call conversion a birth; nor do I think it improper to call the resurrection by the same name. I do not discover that necessity for an absolute uniformity of expression here which is urged by some, but regarding conversion as a complete moral change, it may be called, when considered in itself, a birth, and when we regard it as being sealed by the Spirit, awaiting that final change at the resurrection, we may speak of it as being begotten. But there can be no arbitrary rules in the choice of these terms from the nature of them nor from scripture usage, hence in using them as figures of speech our preferences may vary somewhat according to our tastes.

"I have trodden the Wine-press Alone!"

From the blush of the morning till evening's dark shade,
No heart-throbs beat time to my own;
In sunshine, in shadow, in joy and in grief,
"I have trodden the wine-press alone!"

No lips of a father spoke warning to me,
No mother's were pressed to my own;
No brotherly counsel, no sisterly love,—
"I have trodden the wine-press alone!"

I cannot remember my mother—she's dead!
O'er her pillow the grass has long grown;
She died ere remembrance had graven her form,
And I've trodden the wine-press alone!"

My brother and sister lie 'neath the blue wave,
Where the treasures of ocean are strown;
My father long since has laid down to his rest,—
"I have trodden the wine-press alone!"

When strangers address me, how chilling their words,
No kindness wells up in their tone,
Affection's sweet love-words have never been mine,—
"I have trodden the wine-press alone!"

From the lowliest peasant that toils for his bread,
To the monarch that sits on the throne,
There breathes not a soul I can claim as a friend,
"I have trodden the wine press alone!"

The sorrow of mourning the loved and the lost
Is a sorrow I never have known,
For we never can lose what we never possessed
And I've trodden the wine press alone!"

In summer there nestled a dove in my breast,
But when winter came on it had flown;
True friendship's unchanging, she ne'er was my friend,
And "I've trodden the wine-press alone!"

The floweret so lovely that bloomed on the hill,
I plucked it and called it my own,
Alas! then it withered, its fragrance was gone,—
"I have trodden the wine-press alone!"

There may be true friendship existing on earth,
But to me it has never been shown
And though many, too many, have called themselves friends,
Yet "I've trodden the wine-press alone!"

The chords of communion may fetter some hearts,
But round mine they have never been thrown,
None smile when I smile, and none weep when I weep,—
"I have trodden the wine-press alone!"

No warning in danger, no counsel in doubt,
No comfort in sorrow I've known,
No kindness ere pictured my failings to me,—
"I have trodden the wine-press alone!"

Though a hypocrite world has bowed down at my shrine,
Where its praises were lavishly strown,
I have proved it all empty, all hollow, all vain,
And "I've trodden the wine-press alone!"

Our sword-points must turn on one half of mankind,
If the rest as our friends we would own,
And as selfishness lies at the root of all love,
"I have trodden the wine-press alone!"

O scorners, remember my life was not fraught
With the brightness that gilded your own;
Remember no hand ever steadied my course,—
"I have trodden the wine-press alone!"

And when I am dead there'll be no one to weep,
Not a sob will be heard, not a moan,
No friend in my life, and no friend in my death,—
"I have trodden the wine-press alone!"

"But They are not Grieved for the Affliction of Joseph."

Who that has read the history of Joseph, has not felt the sympathies of his heart gush forth in flowing tears for the sorrows of him who was separated from his brethren, the child of fond parents, cherished with peculiar care by his aged father, in the prospect that his bud of promise would at length bloom into vigorous manhood, and finally become the stay and staff of his declining years. But alas for earthly hopes and human expectations! The anxious concern and glowing affection of the delighted father towards his darling child only served to make him the subject of envy by his older brethren. And in process of time, while kindly searching after the welfare of his father's sons, in obedience to his command, they lifted up their eyes and saw him in the distance, and felt the time had come when they could destroy the object of their hatred. But Reuben, more alive to the ties of consanguinity and the anguish that would rend the bosom of his aged parent when the mournful tidings should reach him, sought to deliver him out of their hands, and for this purpose placed him in a pit until he could effect his further rescue.

But how insatiable is human power, when coupled with hatred and envy. Still intent on their wicked purpose, while in the absence of Reuben a company of Ishmaelites passed that way from Gilead to Egypt, the youthful Joseph was lifted from the pit, and sold to them as a slave for twenty pieces of silver.

Thus is recorded the first and only instance of involuntary servitude in the Bible, one too that was afterwards visited with fearful retribution on the heads of the perpetrators. But in the view of modern slaveholders, it would have been considered a just sale, and that the Ishmaelites had a perfect right to dispose of their property according to their pleasure. Joseph, however, looked upon the transaction very differently, for afterward, when referring to his history, while in prison with Pharaoh's chief butler, he says,—"For indeed I was stolen away out of the land of the Hebrews, and here also have I done nothing that they should put me into this dungeon." But as God does, and will, overrule all things for his own glory, so he did in this case; he was with Joseph, and gave him favor with Pharaoh, and in the eyes of the people, and in process of time he became Governor of the land, and in the providence of God saved his brethren and aged father from the famine that swept like a besom of destruction before them.

But as we have only given a faint outline of Joseph's history, we will leave the reader to its further perusal in the sacred oracles, and proceed for a moment to notice the oppression that quickly followed, for as wicked men wrought wickedly then in violating the just and equitable laws of God, so they do now; and will continue to do until the Lord shall come the second time without sin unto salvation to all those who love his appearing, but with wrath and righteous indignation to those who know not God, and obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

When the king of Egypt died, a new king was set up, who thought to deal wisely with the children of Israel by making them bond-men and bond-women, and setting task masters over them to afflict them with burdens. "And the children of Israel sighed by reason of the bondage, and they cried, and their cry came up to God, and God remembered his covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. And the Lord said, I have surely seen the affliction of my people which are in Egypt, and have heard their cry by reason of their taskmasters for I know their sorrows." This, as it was then, so it is now, the only hope of the slave. And for this purpose God raised up Moses to effect their deliverance, and commissioned him to go in before that wicked king, and entreat him to let his people go. But as with the hardened slaveholder now who clings to his trembling victims with an iron grasp, so did Pharaoh of old cling to the children of Israel, and only increased their burdens, and made them serve with greater rigor. But he that was for them was greater than they that were against them. And very soon, according to the prediction of Joseph, that "God would surely visit his people," did the Lord bring them out with an "high hand and an outstretched arm," and parted the Red Sea, causing them to pass over on dry land, which the Egyptians, essaying to do in their pursuit after them, were consumed.

And now we would ask what is the moral deducible from their history? Is it that the righteous Lord will look upon the slavery of four millions of human beings within the borders of our own beloved America with complacency? Will the wailings of his oppressed children upon a southern plantation, as they sigh and cry beneath the driver's lash, fail to reach his holy ear? Will the sorrows, suffering, separations from all they hold dear, and tortures even unto death cease to affect his holy heart? Or will he in his infinite compassion raise up a Moses unto them? "Consider it, take advice, and speak your minds."—Bible.

The Preparation.

If we would grow in grace, and have a more lively hope, we must seek more preparedness for Christ's second coming. I know no doctrine more sanctifying and quickening than the doctrine of Christ's second advent. I know none more calculated to draw us from the world, and make us single-eyed, whole-hearted, and joyful christians. But alas! how few believers live like men who wait for their Master's return! Who that narrowly observes the ways of many believers would ever think that they loved and longed for their Lord's appearing? Is it not true that there are many hearts among God's children which are not quite ready to receive Jesus? He would find the window barred,—the door shut,—the fires almost out;—it would be a cold and comfortless reception. Oh! believing reader, it ought not so to be. We want more of a pilgrim's spirit;—we ought to be ever looking for and hastening to our home. The day of the Lord's advent is the day of rest, the day of completed redemption, the day when the family of God shall all be gathered together. It is the day when we shall behold the King in his beauty. Surely we ought to be saying daily, "Come, Lord Jesus, let thy kingdom come." Oh! let us set Christ's advent continually before our eyes. Let us say to ourselves every morning, "The Lord will soon return," and it will be good for our souls.—Ryle.

The World for Sale.

The world for sale! Hang out the sign,
Call every traveler here to me;
Who'll buy this brave estate of mine,
And set me from earth's bondage free?
'Tis going!—yes, I mean to fling
The bauble from my soul away;
I'll sell it, whatsoe'er it bring—
The world at auction here to-day!

It is a glorious thing to see,
Ah! it has cheated me so sore!
It is not what it seems to be:
For sale! It shall be mine no more.
Come, turn it o'er and view it well,
I would not have you purchase dear;
'Tis going—going! I must sell!
Who bids? Who'll buy the Splendid Tear?

Here's Wealth in glittering heaps of gold,
Who bids? but let me tell you fair,
A baser lot was never sold;
Who'll buy the heavy heaps of care?
And here, spread out in broad domain,
A goodly landscape all may trace,
Hall, cottage, tree, field, hill and plain;
Who'll buy himself a burial-place?

Here's Love—the dreamy, potent spell
That beauty flings around the heart!
I know its power, alas, too well!
'Tis going! Love and I must part!
Must part! What can I more with Love?
All over the enchanter's reign!
Who'll buy the plumeless dying dove,
An hour of Bliss—an age of Pain?

And Friendship—rarest gem of earth,
(Whoe'er hath found the jewel his?)
Frail, fickle, false, and little worth,
Who bids for Friendship—as it is?
'Tis GOING—GOING! Hear the call,
Once, twice, and thrice! 'Tis very low!
'Twas once my hope, my stay, my all,
But now the broken staff must go!

Ambition, Fashion, Show and Pride—
I part from all forever now;
Grief, in an overwhelming tide,
Has taught my heart to bow.
Poor heart! distracted, ah, so long,
And still its aching throb to bear;
How broken, that was once so strong,
How heavy, once so free from care!

No more for me life's fitful dream,
Bright vision, vanishing away!
My barque requires a deeper stream,
My sinking soul a surer stay.
By death, stern sheriff! all bereft,
I weep, yet humbly kiss the rod;
The best of all I still have left,
My Faith, my Bible, and my God!

Divine Goodness.

All the things that make father sweet to the ear—namely, patience in wrong, gentleness in reproof, helpfulness in extremity, all the things that make the child's heart beat quick when it thinks of mother, all the things that go to make father and mother dear—all these things, instead of being less in God, are so much more in Him that it is almost a shame to call him by the name of Father, it is so poor a name to our meaning. People say—they feel if they do not say—with reference to earthly parents, "They will take care of me, and if I do wrong they will punish me for my good;" but when they think of God, they say, "Oh! that is God, and I must not expect Him to do so." Why? Do you suppose your father and mother are better to you than God is?—Do you suppose they can have as much patience with you, and suffer as much for you as God? The mystery of Christ's death is to unfold God's willingness to suffer as much and as long as is necessary to rear a soul to glory. All that a good father and mother will do for you, you should not take away from your idea of God, but you should endeavor to realize that He will do far more for you than they can.—H. W. Beecher.

Revival in Scotland.

"In the course of last summer, a young American student came over to spend his vacation in Europe. He had been actively engaged in the American Revival, and threw himself with great ardor into the work then going on in Ireland. After visiting Germany and Switzerland, he set sail for New York, but on the passage the vessel struck upon an iceberg and was wrecked. Being thus prevented from returning to America in time to resume his academic studies at the commencement of the session, he decided to spend the winter in Edinburgh. He enrolled himself as a student in the New College, and as his attention had been somewhat diverted from scholastic pursuits in America, by attention to evangelistic works, he determined to devote himself in Edinburgh exclusively to the study of books.

But very soon the thought came powerfully into his mind, I might at least be doing something to warn and rescue perishing souls.

The very day on which he decided to modify his former resolve, he was introduced to Rev. Dr. W. L. Alexander.

He asked the Doctor if he could find him any work to do. After making some inquiry as to his experience and capabilities, the Doctor said,—'There is the Congregational chapel in Musselburgh, which is without a minister, and almost deserted, suppose you go down and see what can be done there.' He consented, and Dr. Alexander having gone down to Musselburgh, and secured the consent of the few remaining members of the church, Mr. H. entered on his new sphere of labor.

By little and little the congregation increased, interest was excited, meetings were commenced in the week, inquirers remained behind for conversation, and about two months ago it became evident that the Spirit of God was moving on the face of the waters, and saying, 'Let there be light.'

The first seal of Mr. H.'s ministry was a young man; others speedily followed, and these young converts have been untiring in their zeal and indefatigable in their exertions to bring others to hear the gospel and to find peace in Jesus. Christian people of different denominations have [illegible] conversing with the anxious, and watching over those recently converted. The excellent missionary, supported by Lady Mary Oswald and other ladies, has thrown himself with great ardor into the movement; and Lady Mary herself is constant in her attendance and unremitting in her efforts to rescue the careless, the ignorant, and the degraded.

For more than two months the meetings have been held every night, and the chapel is always full and sometimes crowded. Mr. H. has the names of more than a hundred who have come to him in deep anxiety, of many of whom he is most hopeful; and there are others, not a few, who have been impressed and led to thought, whose names it has not been possible to record. An elder of one of the Presbyterian churches in the town, has stated that he knows of at least thirty in that church who have received serious impressions, or been savingly converted in consequence of these meetings.

Here, as elsewhere, many children have been aroused, and of some of these we are able to speak confidently as rejoicing in simple faith in Jesus. These lambs meet together for prayer, and go forth into the harvest-field to glean, if not to reap. One of them got beside a woman at the inquiry-meeting and asked her to pray. The woman said she could not, and then the little girl said she would pray. With childish simplicity, but with true spiritual fervor, she poured forth her soul unto God, and when they rose the woman was in tears. 'Oh lassie,' she said, 'wha taught ye to pray in that gait?' 'Deed,' the lassie replied, 'I canna tell, but I think the Lord just puts it into me.' Now, as in David's time, it is true, that 'out of the mouth of babes and sucklings God perfecteth praise.'"—London Patriot.

Losses by Religion.

Near London there dwelt an old couple. In early life they had been poor, but the husband became a christian, and God blessed their industry, and they were living in a comfortable retirement, when one day a stranger called on them to ask their subscription to a charity. The old lady had less religion than her husband, and still hankered after some of the Sabbath earnings and easy shillings which Thomas had forfeited from regard to the law of God. So, when the visitor asked their contributions, she interposed and said,

"Why, sir, we have lost a deal by religion since we first began, my husband knows that very well. Have we not, Thomas?"

After a solemn pause, Thomas answered, "Yes, Mary, we have. Before I got religion, Mary, I had an old slouched hat, a tattered coat, and mended shoes and stockings; but I have lost them long ago. And, Mary, you know that, poor as I was, I had a habit of getting drunk and quarrelling with you; and that, you know, I have lost. And then I had a burdened conscience and a wicked heart, and ten thousand guilty fears, but all are lost, completely lost, and, like a millstone, cast into the deepest sea. And, Mary, you have been a loser too, though not so great a loser as myself. Before we got religion, Mary, you had a washing-tray, in which you washed for hire; but since then you have lost your washing-tray. And you had a gown and bonnet much the worse for wear, but you have lost them long ago. And you had many an aching heart concerning me at times, but these you happily have lost. And I could even wish that you had lost as much as I have lost; for what we lose for religion will be an everlasting gain."

The inventory of losses by religion runs thus: A bad character, a guilty conscience, a troublesome temper, sundry evil habits, and a set of wicked companions. The inventory of blessings gained by religion includes all that is worth having in time and eternity.—Ex.

The Children's Prayer Meeting.

"This evening the children will have a prayer meeting." Thus I was told upon arrival at the pastor's house. It was for me glad news. I had traveled all day that I might reach the pleasant village where formerly I lived, and in whose central school-house, in capacity of Principal, I taught several successive terms.

How well I remembered those scholars! I watched their progress in knowledge. I had prayed for them. I had talked with them of the love of Jesus, and urged them to yield him their greatful service and loving hearts. But weeks rolled by, and the last day of school came, with the saddening reflection that perhaps not one amid the youthful group was a follower of the Savior. Then parting words were spoken, and many a tearful farewell uttered, for the teacher was leaving, and they knew not if ever they should meet again.

Three seasons passed away, and in the spring a revival of religion occurred, encouraging the faith of God's people and cheering the pastor's heart. Among the number who shared its precious influences were many of my former pupils. I longed to see them, and hear from their own lips what God had done for their souls.

A cordial welcome met me from the pastor's family, and many warm greetings from the children who soon came pouring in, eager to testify that their former teacher was not forgotten. "Shall we walk down by the shore?" The children all agreed to the proposal, and so we started. "But can we return in season for our meeting?" they inquired anxiously. "Surely we will." "And may your teacher come into your meeting?" "Oh, certainly," they all reply. So with pleasant talk of former days, we took our way down by the stream, and did not [illegible] clock struck seven. The doors of the vestry were open, and we passed in, making part of the youthful gathering.

Now each is in her place, and all is still. With one accord they kneel, and a sweet voice, with low, clear utterance, is heard in prayer for the blessing of God on themselves, and in behalf of parents and brothers, and schoolmates and teacher. Another voice and another followed, interspersed with hymns, till each one in that kneeling circle had joined in the devotion. A few words of christian counsel were added and the service closed.

How pleasing is early piety! How lovely consecrated childhood! There was that group of girls, whose ages were from twelve to sixteen years, and more than twenty in number, choosing, like Mary, the "better part," and happy in their early choice, because prepared for usefulness in their heavenly Father's service here, or, if early called hence, prepared for peaceful slumber, and joyous awakening in his glorious presence above.

What do the Birds Say?

Do you ask what the birds say? The sparrow and dove,
The linnet and thrush, say, "I love and I love."
In the winter they're silent,—the wind is so strong;
What it says I don't know, but it sings a loud song.
But green leaves, and blossoms, and sunny warm weather,
And singing, and loving, all come back together;
But the lark is so brimfull of gladness and love,
The green fields below him, the blue sky above,
That he sings, and he sings, and forever sings he,—
"I love my love, and my love loves me!"

A Word to the Little Folks.

ABOUT DARKNESS.

Dark, little folks? Well, suppose it is dark as Egypt, can't God see in the dark, even darkness that can be felt; see right through every nook and corner of your heart? To be sure he can, there is not a thought escapes His omniscient eye. He knows your inmost soul. What—sin in the dark, because it is dark! Dare you little folks or great folks? You may escape the eye of man, but God's eye never. His eyes go to and fro everywhere with lightning flash!

Sin anywhere, on your bed, in the secret chamber,—sin where you will,—little sins or great sins; sins of the flesh or the spirit, thought, word or deed: be sure they find you out. Some little folks, and some great folks, sin in the dark, under cover of night, "loving darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil."

"The murderer rising with the light, killeth the poor and needy, and in the night is as the thief."

Hark again: "The eye also of the adulterer waiteth for the twilight, saying, no eye shall see me—and disguiseth his face."

"In darkness they dig through houses which they have marked for themselves in the day-time: they know not the light."

"Woe unto them that seek deep to hide their council from the Lord, and their works are in the dark, ... for they say, the Lord seeth us not:" Remember, friends, there is not a word in our tongue but that the Lord knows it altogether. Says the Psalmist: "Whither shall I go from thy presence? If I ascend up into heaven, thou art there. If I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea: even there thy right hand shall hold me. If I say, surely the darkness shall cover me even the night shall be light about me. Yea, the darkness hideth not from thee, but the night shineth as the day: the darkness and the light are both alike to thee." See Psalm 139.

Oh! what a fearful thing to sin against such a God.

Furthermore remember, aside from the shame, guilt and wretchedness here, on account of our sins, there's a fearful judgment awaiting every sinner. Every one, great and small, must soon stand before the judgment-seat of Christ; where every one must give account to God for the deeds done in the body, whether good or evil. There, at the great day, all our secret sins,—sins of the deepest dye, even the works of darkness of which it is a shame to speak,—will be spread out to the open gaze of an assembled universe.

"Could we, on morning's swiftest wings,
Fly through the trackless air,
Or dive beneath deep ocean's springs,
Thy presence would be there.

In vain may guilt attempt to fly,
Concealed by darkest night,
One glance from thy all-piercing eye
Can bring it all to light.

Search thou our hearts, and there destroy
Each secret bosom sin,
And fit us for those realms of joy,
'That we may enter in.'"

"Our Father."

"Our Father!" 't is a sound like music,
And the heart-throbs rise and swell
With praises that no tongue can utter,
Praises language cannot tell.
There's in the very name protection,
Kindness, mercy, love and care,
Relationship the nearest, dearest,
Finds expression fully there.

"Jehovah" seems to tell of glory
Round his kingly throne above,
And in the spring of grateful feeling
John has sweetly named him "Love."
"The Lord," a name of might and wisdom,
"God," before whom angels fall,
"Our Father" centers each emotion,
Fully can express them all.

"Our Father!" christians, love each other!
Let that name our hearts entwine,
A bond of brotherhood between us,
He's your Father and he's mine!
"Our Father!" blessing, glory, honor,
Praises for thy matchless love!
Our lips would swell the song of angels,
Rising through the courts above.

Short Sermon.

"He that is not with me is against me."—Matt. 12: 30.

Jesus was the most faithful, yet the most tender of all preachers; faithfulness and tenderness are combined in all his addresses, while he never failed to pity and to sympathize with man in his sinful condition, he also on the other hand, neglected not to exhibit the truth to the consciences of his hearers. As a teacher and the beloved Son of God, who is the way, the truth, and the life, whose mission it was to impart unto man the knowledge of God, his love, his righteousness and his long suffering, he did not fail at the first to inform mankind of the impossibility of pursuing a neutral course, but emphatically, he that is not with me is against me. To be with Christ includes several things.

1. We must be with him in the conclusions of our minds. The first relation he sustains to man is that of a teacher; and, like Moses to the children of Israel, he reveals the mind of God, and thereby dispels the darkness of ignorance from the mind of man; this was necessary in order to insure faith in him as the Son of God. The carnal mind concludes very differently from Christ on almost every subject, hence the necessity of his becoming a teacher, that we may be informed and instructed in the wisdom of God; and thereby not only have consistent views of the Father, of sin, and of futurity, but be made like minded with Christ and see objects through the same medium.

2. With Christ in our heart's affections. After being informed in the things pertaining to God, we are far from being with, or for Christ, without our affections are with his. What he loves, we should supremely love; if otherwise, we shall even be cold and indifferent as to the interests of him who laid down his life for us, though we are ever so well informed and instructed in the wisdom of God. Our hearts should move with his, and our desires should be regulated and governed by his teachings; in fact, our affections and feelings should so mingle with his by virtue of drinking in that spirit of love and tenderness that is so often manifested by him for us, that thus being one with him, we might say with one of old, "The love of Christ constraineth us."

3. With Christ in the pursuits of life. If our affections are centred on the same objects with him, our next inquiry will be, how did he live? and for what object? do we walk in the Lord Jesus? do we set similar objects before us? aim at similar ends? labor for similar realizations—such as glory of God and the true good of human beings, and thereby love our neighbor as ourselves, or seek another's good in preference to our own, and so exhibit a character of usefulness, devotion and piety, looking unto him who is the way, the truth and the life, rejoicing in hope, that when he who is our life shall appear we shall also appear with him in glory?

4. With Christ in resisting temptation, and overcoming evil. As the captain of our salvation was tempted in all points as we are, yet without sin, ought we not, in order to be with him, and not against him, to resist temptation, overcome evil, and have it to say in the end that we have fought the good fight, we have finished the course, we have kept the faith?

We should be with him in the endearments of union and communion, for as a high priest, he can be touched with the feelings of our infirmities. O may we not be found here in the time of warfare against him; remember he has said, he that overcometh, will I grant to sit with me in my throne even as I have overcome and sit down with my Father in his throne. Is this not an exceeding great and precious promise, and still the more cheering as it comes from him who is the leader and captain of our salvation? nay more, the author and finisher of our faith, the alpha and omega. Oh, let us hold fast to our profession, for ere long we shall see him in his beauty, seated on the throne of his glory, clothed in regal splendor as King of kings and Lord of lords, when all nations, kindreds, and tongues, shall be gathered before him, then if found not against him, we shall be with him forevermore.

The Seventh Trumpet.

"And the seventh angel sounded."—Rev. 11: 15.

The above words are from the wonderful book of Revelation; and this book is as difficult to explain as it is marvellous. Perhaps no other book in the sacred canons has so puzzled the student as this extraordinary production of the Holy Spirit. On first reading the preface—"The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass, and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John"—the student would conclude the book easy of comprehension. But let him once proceed in his studies, and he will find difficulties not easily solved. Let him try to unravel the problem of "the number of the beast" which is plainly stated to be "the number of a man, and his number is six hundred threescore and six," and he will find it needs patient and critical study. Let him attempt to tell who or what is "the beast that was, is not, and yet is," and he may almost conclude this book is hardly a Revelation. Let him go into the 20th chapter of this book, and by his skill at adjusting the great and astounding events named therein, and he will be almost on the point of concluding that the Apocalypse is an insoluble mystery.

Notwithstanding, we may understand the book in question. That we can understand all that is written in it, I shall not presume to say, nor shall I say that we do understand all its sacred contents. One thing is sure; the casual or careless reader need not expect to understand this peculiar book, with its figures, symbols, metaphors and hyperboles. "The wise shall understand," said the angel in his instructions to the prophet Daniel; but whether we may add, "the wise shall understand" all of the book of Revelation is quite a question. If so, where are the wise? Who are those wise ones? But the point we are at is this; none but this class can begin to solve the great book before us. We may set it down as true, then, that "the wise shall understand." Not the worldly-wise men of this age, or of any other age, but the God-wise men, those who practice true piety and close study of prophecy, with the signs of the times. Not our great statesmen, for how do they know what God's purposes are? The worldly-wise men of Daniel's time could not interpret the king's dream; they could not read the handwriting on the wall; but Daniel, the man of God, could interpret the dream, and tell the wicked king what would be in the latter days. He could readily read the writing on "the wall of the king's palace," and showed those wise men that they were "weighed in the balances and found wanting," both in true wisdom and piety. "The wisdom of this world is foolishness with God." True wisdom, then, comes from God only, and we may obtain it through Jesus Christ. Let us seek for it from that divine source, by prayer, labor and diligent study; unless we do, we need not expect to be numbered one of "the wise" that will "understand" any of the book in hand. The great Author of this book pronounces a blessing on those who read, and they that hear the words of this prophecy and keep those things "written therein."

With the foregoing remark, let me now come to the subject in hand. "And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven saying, the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ." This is the language that opens the seventh trumpet—the last one in the series, and a "wo" trumpet. The last three trumpets were announced by an angel "flying through the midst of heaven, saying with a loud voice, Wo, wo, wo, to the inhabitants of the earth, by reason of the other voices of the trumpets of the three angels which are yet to sound." The first two of these trumpets embrace the rise and fall of Mohammedanism, and the one under review is the trumpet of the Kingdom. May not the seventh angel be on his flight now? May not this angel have commenced to sound his trump? Did not the world hear the first sound of this trumpet about 1840–4, when the cry began to be made, "Behold the bridegroom cometh, go ye out to meet him;" "The Lord is coming on earth to reign;" "The hour of his judgment is come!" That cry has sounded far and near; it has gone all over the world. Now mark—this was the first thing to be done under this trumpet. "Great voices in heaven saying, the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ"—fit language to represent this cry of the coming Bridegroom. How complete the figure, "Voices in heaven," to foreshadow the cry that has been, and still is being, made of the approaching reign of Christ on earth. As we approach the great day, we shall get a clearer sound of this part of the trumpet.

The next thing to be done under this trumpet was, "The nations were angry." This began to be realized in 1848, at the time of the great revolution in France, and appearing again in the Crimean war, and now at the present time it is clearly manifest that the "nations are angry." The nations are mad, vexed and perplexed. "They rush like the rushing of many waters."

The next event in the progress of this trumpet is, "Thy wrath is come." This has not fully come yet, but is nigh at hand. Then follows the great event of the "time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and to them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them which corrupt (margin) the earth." At the commencement of the judgment of the dead, the kingdom of God is fully established on earth, amidst the crash and fall of nations, and "lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail," all these figures and symbols represent the great political commotions that will occur at the time the kingdom is set up, or at the time it is being organized. The trumpet that preceded the one under consideration closed, I think, A. D. 1840, when the Ottoman supremacy departed, and that power became dependent upon the four powers of Europe. Then follows the one I am treating of, which, according to the angel's declaration, was to come "quickly." If I am correct, it did come thus, and we have been under this trumpet about seventeen years. But we have not reached the full sound of this trumpet, and shall not until the kingdom of God is come on earth.

The student of prophecy will notice that all these trumpets occupied a space of time, and that certain events occurred before the full sound of the trumpet was heard or reached. To illustrate this point, let me refer you to the fifth trumpet and first "wo." "And the fifth angel sounded, and I saw a star fall from heaven unto the earth." This star unquestionably represents Mohammed. "And to him was given the key of the bottomless pit. And he opened the bottomless pit; and there arose a smoke out of the pit, as the smoke of a great furnace." This undoubtedly represents the false doctrines he taught. It had such an effect, that "the sun and the air," or the true source of moral and religious light, "were darkened by reason of the smoke of the pit." And what was the result? "There came out of the smoke locusts upon the earth." These represent those swarms of Arabs, Turks and Saracens that followed in the wake of Mohammed, fitly symbolized by "locusts." Now the student will see we have the trumpet only in its incipient stage as yet, and that the full sound of the trumpet was not obtained until these symbolical locusts had "tormented men five months," or 150 years. See chap. 9: 4–11.

Take up the next trumpet, and you will see it took about the same course, only it was longer, by far, in its declaration. Under this "wo" they were to "slay the third part of men," and the time allotted them was "an hour, a day, and a month, and a year;" or, 391 years and 15 days. When this period of time was obtained, we reached the full blast of that trumpet, and not till then; which, as I noticed before, occurred in 1840, at the fall of the Ottoman supremacy.

And thus it will be under the seventh trumpet. We shall not realize the complete sound of this trumpet until "the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ." The time is nigh at hand. "Voices in heaven" will be heard, louder and clearer than ever before, not far in the future, "saying, the hour of His judgment is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged." The angel John saw set his right foot upon the sea, and his left foot on the earth," will soon "lift up his hand to heaven, and swear by him that liveth forever and ever . . . that there shall be time no longer." Solemn reflection! Is it true that we are thus far down the prophetic chain? Is this our location in the history of our world? The answer must be in the affirmative. "Be wise now, therefore, O ye kings: be instructed, ye judges of the earth. Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way when his wrath is kindled but a little."

That sin lends sorrow double power
With hand and brow and bosom clear,
Fear God, and know no other fear."

The Blessed Hope.

"Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ."—TITUS 2: 13.

It appears evident from the writings of the inspired writers, that they directed our hope to the second coming of Christ, for the fulfillment of all our expectations and the completion of our faith—not at death, as many would have us believe. Paul would have us believe, in Heb. 9: 28, that "unto them that look for him, shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." To the Philippian brethren he says, "For our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." I do not find in all the Bible where we are commanded to look for death.

Having shown that we are directed to the coming of Christ for the realization of our hope, we wish to produce first, some scriptural evidence that the event is yet future. Secondly, the certainty of his coming. Thirdly, the object of his coming.

First. Some teach us that the Lord Jesus Christ came at the destruction of Jerusalem, and quote the 24th chap. of Matt. as proof. Others believe that he comes at death, etc., etc. It appears as Jesus sat upon the Mount of Olives, the disciples came to him privately, and inquired of him, saying, "Tell us when shall these things be, and what shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world?" He had before told them of the destruction of Jerusalem. In the 4th, 5th, and 6th verses he cautions them against being deceived by false Christs, and tells them not to be troubled at wars and rumors of wars—but Jerusalem was destroyed in the first war of any note after this prophecy,—and then says, "the end is not yet." Now if this end was the destruction of Jerusalem, then where are those wars spoken of by Christ? From the 7th to the 14th verses, he gives a prophetic history of the trials and persecutions of his people, and the success of the gospel just before the end; and says, "then shall the end come." This cannot mean the end of Jerusalem, because if so, he that endureth unto the end was to be saved from all the troubles which he had been speaking of; and it was not true that the disciples of Christ did not suffer afterwards the same things which he said they would, from the 15th to the 28th verse. From the 29th to the 35th verse inclusive, Christ explains the signs in the heavens and on the earth immediately after the tribulation of his people, which tribulation he had promised to shorten for the elect's sake. Then follows his coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory, and the gathering of his elect from the four winds of heaven. He then gives his disciples the parable of the fig-tree as an illustration of the end, and adds, "Verily, I say unto you, this generation shall not pass till all these things be fulfilled."

After having brought us down through the gospel dispensation, to the end, or time when the signs appear, then the church were to rejoice knowing their redemption is at hand. There is nothing in all the 24th chap. of Matt. to show that the signs appeared and that Christ came at the destruction of Jerusalem. The remainder, from the 35th verse, and the 25th chap. show clearly that the event is yet future. See 31st verse of the 25th chap.—"When the Son of man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations." This verse was not fulfilled at the destruction of Jerusalem, for the Son of man was not seen coming in the clouds with power and great glory. Yet we read, "every eye shall see him;" and as visibly and as sudden as the lightning that shineth from the east even unto the west, shall the coming of the Son of man be. Did all this take place at the destruction of Jerusalem? No. Paul's testimony in 1 Thess. 4: 16, 17, will settle the matter beyond a doubt.—"For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain, shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air." Instead of being caught up into the air at the destruction of Jerusalem, they fled to the mountains, and the wicked did not go away into everlasting punishment, but were captives that remained.

1 John 2: 28.—"And now, little children, abide in him; that when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming." Again, "It doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." Again, Rev. 1: 7.—"Behold he cometh with clouds and every eye shall see him," etc. The apostle John wrote several years after the destruction of Jerusalem. Let this suffice to prove that the glorious appearing spoken of in the text is yet future.

We pass to notice, secondly, some of the evidence of the certainty of the event.

"That awful day will surely come,
The appointed hour makes haste."

"For behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven, and all the proud; yea, and all that do wickedly shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts."

Jude tells us, that Enoch also, the seventh from Adam prophesied of these, saying, "Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints." We read in Dan. 7: 9, 10, "I beheld till the thrones were cast down, and the Ancient of days did sit, whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool; his throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire. A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him, thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him; the judgment was set, and the books were opened." In Zep. 1: 14, we read, "The great day of the Lord is near, it is near and hasteth greatly." Zech. 14: 5,—"And the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee." In Rev.—"Behold, I come quickly, hold that fast thou hast, that no man take thy crown." Again, Paul says, "For yet a little while and he that shall come will come and will not tarry."—Heb. 10: 37. If we will not believe what is written, we would not though one should arise from the dead.

We will pass thirdly, and lastly to notice a few texts concerning the object of his coming. He comes to raise and gather his saints to himself in the air, as we find by reading 1 Thess. 4: 16, 17.—"So shall they be forever with the Lord," and the apostle adds, "Wherefore comfort one another with these words." "For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." In Psalms we have an account of this gathering of the people of God. "Gather my saints together unto me, those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice."—Psalms 50: 5. Paul says, "We shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory." These texts will only apply to the people of God.

It is truly a blessed hope to the weary, worn saints, who have faced the scoffs and frowns of a wicked world, to know that at the appearing of Jesus, they will be gathered by the angels of God; that they will be clothed with immortality, and reign with Jesus and the blessed in the new earth. There will be no more sorrow, nor crying; all tears will be wiped from of all faces; joy and gladness will be seen in every countenance, while innocently they roam in Eden restored. "Blessed hope."

The wicked will be destroyed from the earth by fire. To prove this we will quote a few texts. Ps. 97: 2, 3.—"Clouds and darkness are round about him; righteousness and judgment are the habitation of his throne. A fire goeth before him, and burneth up his enemies round about." "For, behold, the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble, and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch."—Mal. 4: 1. Again, "Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire."—Matt. 3: 12. "As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire; so shall it be in the end of this world."—Matt. 13: 40. The angels shall come forth, and sever the wicked from the just. Paul, to his Thessalonian brethren, writes: "And to you who are troubled, rest with us; when the Lord Jesus should be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power." Peter says, "The day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein shall be burned."—2 Pet. 3: 10. Rev. 18: 8.—"Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death and mourning, and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire, for strong is the Lord God who judgeth her." Thus we have, as we think, quoted a sufficient number of texts to prove the object of Christ's coming.

We will close by saying that after the earth is cleansed by fire, and the wicked destroyed, the earth will be made the happy abode for all the saints of God. "And I saw," says John, "the Holy City, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away." And there will be the pure river of water of life, and the tree of life. "And there shall be no more curse; but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him." "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life." Let us not be weary in well doing, but look for "that blessed hope and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." Amen.

Profanity.

"Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain. For the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain."—EXODUS 20: 7.

"But I say unto you, that every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment."—MATT. 12: 36.

Living as we do in the nineteenth century, amid the light of civilization and christianity, we find, notwithstanding this light, much sin and ignorance; and one of the most common sins in society is that of profanity. To you who are in the habit of daily using profane language, or ever suffer a profane or idle word to pass from your lips, I wish, as a friend, to address a few words, hoping that you may be led to consider on your ways and reform.

A man, young or old, who has proper respect for himself, will never swear. You will admit that the habit is useless, that it does no good, on the contrary, it does great evil. It is a weak and foolish practice; and what is worse, it is taking the name of the Lord in vain, and this is expressly forbidden in the Bible, by God himself. This alone should cause you to consider well your position. It should cause you to reform and break away from the chains of the enemy.

Consider, that in taking the name of God in vain, you treat him with ingratitude, who created you, who has watched over you, and protected you from dangers seen and unseen, and brought you to the present moment. You would not treat an earthly friend so. Will you treat your heavenly Father with less gratitude than you treat an earthly friend? Consider this, my friend.

Young man, just entering upon the stage of life's eventful scenes, to you I would say, "Swear not at all." Beware of profanity. It is a serpent whose sting will prove deadly. I would urge you then, young man, to break away from the habit that is both foolish and sinful, and you will never regret it.

To you who are parents, I would appeal. Are you in the daily habit of using profane language; of calling upon God to curse instead of bless you? I would ask you to reform. I would appeal to you in behalf of your young children. They will be led to follow in the path you tread. Will you teach that child profanity? will you teach him to curse the God of heaven and of earth instead of leading him to love and reverence that being? Will you do this? Surely, you are doing this daily by your own conduct; and unless you reform, you will be led too late to see your error. Let me say to you in all kindness, resolve now and forever to forsake the evil habit, and you will never regret it.

I have heard the aged man just tottering on the verge of the grave, curse the God who gave him existence, and who had thus kindly lengthened out his life. If any such chance to read this, let me say, your life is short. Your race is nearly run. Soon you may be on a bed of death. Would you there call upon God to curse you? Remember this, and now, before it is forever too late, pray to God to forgive your sins, to wash them away in the blood of the Lamb. Ask this in faith, believe and thou shalt be saved.

Remember that for every idle word that you speak, you must give an "account thereof in the day of judgment." O, I beseech you as a friend, to remember this. It is not the words of man, but the words of Jesus Christ. He has spoken, and from that decree there can be no release. At the judgment seat when Christ, the judge, shall appear, you must answer, and by thy own words be justified or condemned. Then I urge you to forsake the sin of profanity, and not only to forsake that one sin, but all sin of every description, and fly to the outstretched arms of Jesus, who to-day stands ready to forgive and save you.

One word to christians, ere I close. Let us all do something towards driving the sin of profanity from our midst. Let the watchman on the walls of Zion preach against this sin. It is spreading in some places to an alarming degree,—and what will the end be? If mankind have no fear of God's laws, no fear of God himself; how long will it be before the ordinances of God will be profaned and neglected? How long will it be before the Sabbath will be profaned and neglected?—that the Bible will be hurled away and trampled in the dust? Then it becomes every lover of God, of christianity, and of good order, to speak against every growing sin without fear of man. Then, let us go forth, and be faithful in the performance of duties while we live; and when we have finished our labors here on earth, we can rest assured as we pass onward to the tomb, that we have fought the good fight, kept the faith, and that a crown of glory will be our reward in the last great day.

For the Crisis.

Theology of the Day.

"And the Lord God said, "Behold, the man is become as one of us, to know good and evil; and now lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live forever."—GEN. 3: 22.

All that God did to bring death on Adam and his posterity was, to turn our first parents out of the garden, and prohibit them from the tree of life. Here God shows, as plainly as language can convey, that Adam's nature was not changed, and that he could live forever with the tree of life, notwithstanding he was a sinner, but without the tree of life his nature would decay, and he would in time die; for God by putting the tree of life into the garden, proves the above fact, that man was so constituted from his creation, that he could not live in the garden, or out of it, unless he could have recourse to the tree of life. If I am not correct, I ask, what did God put the tree of life into the garden for? We see that children die who never committed a sin. Nature effects its own corruption in all the human family of mankind, in the animal creation and in the vegetation of the earth.

God has destroyed the wicked in many instances by death. It may be asked, if God has taken some out of the world by death, why not all? I answer, because it is not God's common course of dealing with man. God is long suffering. God struck Ananias and Sapphira dead for lying; but this is not the fate of all liars; if so, the destruction would be awful. Now if death is God's servant, or messenger, how short-sighted and presumptuous are mortal man to employ human skill to fight against the power of God! We are informed that Jesus Christ was the messenger of God. Therefore to admit death to be God's messenger, we see two of God's messengers at war against each other.

Christ plainly contradicts the idea believed by many at this day, that if a man drowns himself; or a horse is frightened and throws off his rider and kills him; or physicians feed men with some poisonous drug until they die; or a factory building falls and kills many, or any other incident, it makes no difference what, it is all the Lord's doings—the Lord has done this—the Lord has come very near to you—the Lord has laid his afflicting hand upon you for your good,—this is a loud call to you from God; he has done it for some unseen good to us. Notwithstanding all this, people are gathering herbs for medicines, and riding to and fro for different physicians, and sometimes when they come they see it is too late. Now if I had been here three days ago, or yesterday, I could have saved life. Again, I have done all that I can do; and if you can't get help from some other source, you must die,—that is, the Lord will take you out of the world. This is the popular doctrine of the day. I am astonished that men of common sense should talk in this manner, and thus afflict the afflicted by accusing God of being the author of the above incidents and misfortunes, and heart-rending divisions and calamities which transpire in the world among the people, and at the same time use all the means in their power to hinder God from carrying on his work—if it be God's work.

Paul says Christ has abolished death—that is, in relation to himself; for death hath no more dominion over him. Death is not a creature or being, as some suppose, but is a reigning power, as darkness comes on when the light disappears, so death ensues when life ceases; death is the end of dying—the end of life. This power has been in the hands of men ever since man had a being; man brought it into the world. 1 Cor 15: 21.—"For since by man came death," etc. Men have executed it upon man when they pleased, in violation of God's law, from Cain until now, by using the powers which God ordained in them for his declarative glory.

Death is an enemy to every thing that exists; it shows no mercy. It was an enemy to Jesus Christ, from which he prayed to his Father to be delivered in the garden of Gethsemane, "nevertheless, thy will be done, not mine." 1 Cor. 15: 26.—"The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."

CHARLES STEVENS.

For the Crisis

Per Contra.—Does Death Kill?

My estimates of the argumentative difficulties or expenses of the materialist view are likely to meet objections, in the way of difficulties alleged against my own view, or expenses per contra, as the book-keepers say. I will examine one or two of them before I proceed.

Some one may ask, "If the soul is conscious when the body is dead, how do we know that it will not be eternally conscious after the second death? If the first death does not kill it, how do we know that the second death will kill it?"

Here are two questions. 1. Respecting the consciousness of the disembodied soul. 2. Respecting the immortality of the soul. I will answer them separately.

(1.) The reader will observe that I am not trying to show the consciousness of the disembodied soul, but have spoken of it as "inert," i. e. inactive, and of course unconscious, I frequently compare it to the main-spring without the watch. Such a "disembodied" main-spring may be inherently elastic, yet utterly powerless, and it might remain so to all eternity, if it did not perish in "the wreck of matter and the crash of worlds." Respecting the consciousness of the bodiless soul, either eternal or temporary, I have no dispute with the readers of the Crisis.

And yet, in the argument respecting eternal existence, or immortality, suppose I should grant, for argument's sake, that the wicked soul has some horrible dreams before the resurrection and the second death. What then? Would its immortality be a legitimate inference? I would like to see the person that would prove this. If any one bravely believes that the stroke of God in the second death will neither kill the soul nor stun it, because the fist of John C. Heenan may not do it, I would like to see the man of such courageous hope, for a rare specimen of fearlessness of the power of God.

But, waving this whole question about consciousness, as not in dispute, I pass to the second.

(2.) "If the first death does not kill the soul, who knows that the second death will do it?" I might answer by simply asking, Who knows that the second death will not do it? I know that it has been often said that the separate existence of the soul implies its immortality. This has been said by the asserters of eternal suffering, from Tertullian to Robert Landis. Dr. Post has said that "nothing is deadlier than death;" and has thus tried to infer that because the death of the body does not kill the soul, therefore, the death of the soul will not kill the soul. I simply commend the argument to those who think it worthy of attention. It seems to me that they who reason thus can prove anything, and by anything. Give them a little twilight, and they will prove that white is black, and that noon is midnight. In my book on "Christ our Life," I have collected some rare specimens of such argument, to prove the immortality of the soul from Matt. 10: 28, and other passages. Such logical curiosities ought certainly to be preserved in their proper cabinet.

But let us examine the question more particularly. The proposition urged as an objection to my view would read somehow thus: "From the existence of the wicked soul until the second death, its eternal existence beyond the second death legitimately follows." Now I ask, is that good reasoning? Look at it. Will any one adopt it as sound argument? Is it even plausible? And have I not fairly stated the case, adding no element which does not belong to it, and omitting none which is pertinent? May I not safely affirm that the existence of the wicked soul between death and judgment does not imply its immortality? I have already given examples of eminent christians who have believed as I do, in the separate existence of the soul, which yet may die in the second death. Let me recall one of these, Abp. Whately. All admit that he is a good reasoner, one of the highest logical authorities, whose work on logic is standard, and adopted in most of the schools. If we put the question to him he replies most decidedly, that from the existence of the soul until the final judgment, its immortality does not legitimately follow. The best authority, then, will allow my view of the nature of the soul, with no such expense as some of my friends fear. But I would not decide the case by authority, for in logic no one can see for another. Let us, then, try the reasoning again. The test of all reasoning is the syllogism. And an argument is commonly put in the syllogistic form by supplying the general proposition, or major premise. If we do this in the present instance, we shall have something like this:

Whatever pertains to the being of man, and exists during an interval after the death of the body, will exist eternally after the interval is past. The souls of the wicked, who are "reserved unto judgment," exist during an interval until the second death. Therefore, their souls will never die.

My friends see at once that the conclusion is just as sound as the first proposition, or major premise, and no more so. If the conclusion is to stand as an objection against my view, the major premise, or some other proposition equally general, must be taken also, to support it. Until this is done, I think my view is liable to no inference of immortality out of Christ, and I may proceed at my leisure, with my general argument. There is more to be said, however, on this very question, Does death kill? And in my next, I may show that on logical grounds the view of my querist is not so safe against the difficulty he urges, as my own.

The Light Ship.

I feel that an explanation is required by the friends who are interested, why this tract has not already been printed. The chief reason is, that the protracted illness of my wife prevented me from attending to it. However, being providentially relieved from that embarrassment, I shall now put it through with all possible despatch. I need not expatiate upon the merits of endeavoring to scatter truth among our seamen, as all are prepared to admit that; but I would urge on the brethren, who feel it a duty to assist in the enterprise, to send in their mite.

Since my last I have received the following: From Eld. W. F. Carpenter, $1.00, A reader of the Crisis, $1.00, Wm. Dudley, $1.00, C. Cottle $2.00, A sister from Abington, $1.00, Some one from W. Reasons.

I wish you to purchase and read "Reasons for my Hope" by H. L. H.

1. Because it presents a good hope.
2. It gives good reasons for it.
3. It teaches Bible truth, and quotes it from the Bible.
4. It presents some facts not easily found by all, and which are interesting.
5. It is a good-humored book, and will not be likely to make men mad who read it.
6. It is a plain book, hence it can be easily understood.
7. It is a readable book, in large type, so that old eyes can see it.
8. It will not outlaw like a last year's almanac, so that your neighbor who reads it will have occasion to say your doctrine has all failed.
9. It can be lent without fear of its doing more hurt than good.
10. The author and publisher wants to sell the edition that he may pay for these and issue more for the public good.
11. Buy it for the sake of those who are too poor to buy, that such may have it free. Price, bound, 50 cts. Paper, 30cts. by mail, prepaid. Discount by quantity. Address orders to H. L. Hastings, Providence, R. I.

☞ I have read of a very strange speech that dropped from the lips of Epictetus, a heathen. "If it be thy will," says he, "O Lord, command me what thou wilt; send me whither thou wilt; I will not withdraw myself from anything that seems good to thee." Ah! how will this heathen rise in judgment at last against all those who are partial in their obedience—who, while they yield obedience to some commands, live in the habitual breach of other commands.

The World's Crisis.

BOSTON, JUNE 6, 1860.

The Destruction of the Wicked.

No. 1.

"What shall the end be of them that obey not the gospel of God?"—1 Pet. 4: 17.
"Whose end is destruction."—Phil. 3: 19.
"The soul that sinneth, it shall die."—Ezek. 18: 4.

In discussing this solemn subject, we shall endeavor to be guided by the most obvious meaning of the Scriptures, as applied to the future punishment of the finally impenitent. It will be our purpose to explain doubtful passages with those which are plain; showing the complete harmony of the Bible with itself, with reason, justice and mercy, in relation to the subject proposed for examination, assuming that the Scriptures do not teach opposites—both affirmative and negative—but when rightly understood, are either all in favor of the eternal "destruction of the wicked," or of their eternal misery.

I. In defining destruction, we adopt the language of Mr. Webster, as follows: "Destruction consists in the annihilation of the form of any thing, that form of parts which constitutes it what it is." Hence, when an object suffers destruction in the literal sense, the "form of parts" constituting that object no longer exists; consequently, when a thing is eternally destroyed, it can never exist again.

II. In harmony with the foregoing definition, we affirm that the ETERNAL DESTRUCTION of the wicked is REASONABLE.

1. It looks reasonable that the wicked should be destroyed, that sin might come to a perpetual end. It is certain that sin has no right to exist at all. It is an intruder in the universe, and it seems perfectly reasonable that God should put an end to sinful beings by destroying them, that he should not perpetuate eternally that which is worse than useless—a positive evil. It is reasonable that God should finally remove every unholy thing from the universe, and by consequence, introduce a time, when "every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea," will be heard "saying, blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever."—Rev 5: 13. This could not take place so long as an enemy remained alive.

2. It is reasonable that the wicked should be destroyed, because their existence can be of no benefit to themselves or the righteous. When a being has finally decided to remain in sin, and puts himself beyond all hope of reformation, sin must be an eternal blot upon the universe, or the sinner must be destroyed. So long as the cause remains, the effect must follow; hence it is reasonable that God should remove the floods of sin by drying up the fountains, or, in other words by destroying the sinner, who is only a curse to himself and all good beings.

3. It is reasonable that a just and merciful Being, like our Heavenly Father, should put an end to the sufferings of those who can never be otherwise than miserable so long as they live. A merciful being never delights in witnessing suffering, and only administers it as corrective and disciplinary. The corrective punishment is in this life, hence, after the resurrection and judgment of those who hardened themselves against all reformatory discipline, in this world, it is reasonable that they should forfeit their lives for their rebellion against a holy government. Capital punishment is never disciplinary; consequently, suffering is not a legal element in its execution, but only an accompaniment resulting from the anticipated penalty. "The wages of sin is death," which is capital punishment; therefore, not corrective or disciplinary; consequently, as a merciful being can inflict pain only for correction, suffering will be endured by the wicked after judgment only as the result of their awful relation to the approaching penalty—death; otherwise, the suffering inflicted would be an act of cruelty, transcending the bounds of justice, mercy, and love; an act which can never be attributed to our Heavenly Father.

When capital punishment is to be inflicted, no law of civilized and christian lands allows any torture before the execution. In case it should be done, by some one possessed of a tyrant's heart, all good people, who love Jesus, would call it cruel.

Suppose we were traveling in a foreign land, where the habits of the people were unknown to us, and should find a crowd of men gathered, who were engaged torturing a man, not for the sake of discipline, or to reform him, but with the intention of continuing it till death ended his sufferings; we should not hesitate to say these are heathen, as none others would inflict torment when the penalty was death! Suppose that they had the power to keep the man alive eternally in the extreme of misery, and had commenced the exercise of that power, what would God, Christ, angels, and all good beings think of such an act? Would they tolerate it? A merciful man, appointed to inflict capital punishment—death—would not institute a series of torments first, but would destroy the offender at once, as the Lord did the Sodomites; taking heed to the instruction, "Be ye therefore merciful, as your Father also is merciful."—Luke 6: 36.

Hence, we arrive at the conclusion again, that it is reasonable that God should destroy the wicked, and thus end sin and misery, instead of perpetuating both eternally, when neither have any right to exist at all in the universe of God.

III. In harmony with the foregoing, we affirm that the TERMS employed to express the destiny of the wicked render their perpetuity IMPOSSIBLE.

The following is a list of the terms used to represent the future punishment of the wicked: "perdition," "perish," "cut off," "devoured," "consume," "shall not be," "unquenchable fire," "into smoke shall they consume away," "destroy," "burn them up," "destruction," "be as though they had not been," "second death."

If the existence of the wicked is to cease at some future time, after the judgment, how could that fact be expressed without using some of the foregoing terms? What stronger or plainer words have we in the English or any other language, to denote a total cessation of being, than those employed to represent the end of the wicked? How is it possible for a being to be preserved entire, conscious and active as ever, after all these terms have been actively applied to his personal identity? Let it be remembered that the accountable being, he who sins, is the one to receive the penalty defined by the foregoing terms. If the body is only the "house" in which the man lives, then that is not guilty, and hence is not punished. The penalty falls on the sinner in the house, and is defined to be "DEATH." It cannot be moral death, for that is his crime, or rather, the state of the individual, which makes it necessary to inflict the punishment denoted by the terms perish, consume, burn up, destruction, be no more, second death, etc. If the sinner does not die, but lives to sin eternally, how can "the wickedness of the sinner come to an end?" If "the soul that sinneth" cannot die, why are we told that "the soul that sinneth it shall die?" The apostle James says, "Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth DEATH." This shows that sin will not be "finished" so long as a sinner remains alive. If the soul cannot die, why does James say, "Let him know that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death"?

Death is defined to be "the extinction of life." It is the end of dying. The second death,"—"the wages of sin"—is not "a death that never, never dies," but one that never lives. Whenever any one of the foregoing terms employed to represent the punishment of the wicked is executed, it would result in the death of the sinner, and is the evidence any less conclusive that the wicked "shall be as though they had not been," because there are applied to them some twenty of the strongest words which any language affords to denote the termination of their existence?

We see no legitimate way to avoid the conclusion, "That the terms employed to express the destiny of the wicked render their perpetuity impossible."

Diary Notes.

Thursday, May 24th. Early this morning we left our kind friends at Castleton in the steam carriage for Albany. Here we met Bro Wendell, and Bro. Geo. Storrs, and had a pleasant interview. Bro Wendell is now ready to go and preach the everlasting gospel, having closed up all business relations. May the blessing of God be upon his labors in a most signal manner. The young ministers need the special sympathy of the churches where they labor, lest they be discouraged. Do not sit as critics upon them, but stay up their hands with earnest prayer and "brotherly kindness" in deed and word. There is a great want of faithful laborers in the vineyard of the Lord, and we think one reason why there are not more among us, as a people, is because the churches are too fastidious or dainty about their preaching, and consequently do not encourage young preachers. They want old, experienced men. It should be remembered, if there are no recruits, soon we shall be without men to preach the word. But it must not be expected that when men commence the ministry that they can do as well as after they have had experience; but they would accomplish much more if it were not for the cold, unbrotherly, indifferent treatment often received.
